According to another parliamentary answer that I received from the DWP that uses the number of winter fuel payments as a guide, there are some 86,250 pensioner households across the six Edinburgh parliamentary constituencies. The Department admitted before introducing pension credit that it expected approximately 40 per cent. of pensioner households in Scotland to be eligible for it. For Edinburgh, that would mean about 34,500 households, but the latest progress report shows that only 18,148 pensioner households in the capital are claiming the credit—53 per cent of those eligible.

To the Government's credit, they have worked hard to promote the availability of pension credit before and since its introduction last year. Although I have taken issue with the Government over the emphasis on means-testing, I genuinely wanted to see the credit work and for eligible constituents to get the money that they deserve. As a result, I contacted each household in my constituency twice through newsletters about the credit, providing basic details and making it clear that any person who wanted further information or an application pack could contact my constituency office. I am glad to say that many pensioners did just that, and I put on record my thanks to those working in the Pension Service in Scotland who helped me with that campaign. I know that the Minister will agree that the considerable contribution made by those working in the Pension Service has been much appreciated by constituents. I have always found the team in Scotland to be helpful, friendly, accessible and professional in their work.

None the less, despite the promotions, the advertising, the work of the Department for Work and Pensions and the Pension Service, the home visits and the roadshows, many pensioners eligible for pension credit still do not claim it. That presents a new problem for the Minister. We are no longer talking about people being unaware of the existence of the credit—although I accept that some still are—but about people who know about it and are making a conscious decision not to make a claim for some reason.

During my local take-up campaign, I received a number of letters from pensioners who found the process of applying for the means-tested benefit complicated and degrading. One constituent from Drylaw in Edinburgh wrote to tell me how she felt "stripped of all dignity" by the questions asked and had decided not to proceed with her application. Another constituent from Queensferry told me that she did not want to "go through hoops for the sake of a few extra pounds a week."

I have lost count of the number of times I have heard older people say something like, "I have never had to claim benefits in my life and I am not going to start now", or, "I have gone through my entire working life without asking for help, and I'm not going to ask the Government for help."

The fact is that we are talking about a proud section of society. Last Sunday, I was fortunate enough to attend two Remembrance day events in my constituency, in Corstorphine and Davidson's Mains. The immense pride that older people rightfully feel on such occasions illustrates the honour and dignity that they too should be granted. It is no wonder that so many of them do not want to go, as they describe it, "cap in hand" to the Government. They feel that the process is degrading and no amount of information will convince them otherwise. That shows one underlying problem with the Government's mass means-testing of pensioners—as a policy it is neither desirable nor effective.

My party and I believe that the only guaranteed way of getting more money to the poorest pensioners is by increasing the wholly inadequate basic state pension. The Minister will be well aware of the Liberal Democrats' pensions package, even if some members of his party have chosen deliberately to misrepresent it. He will know that pensioner poverty is particularly acute among women, because of the rules on national insurance contributions. Just a few days ago, the TUC pointed out that 70 per cent. of female pensioners are getting less than the full basic state pension, compared with just 15 per cent. of men. A system that assumes that a woman does not need a pension if she has a husband is grossly outdated.

The so-called citizen's pension, which my party proposes, is the kind of basic reform that the UK pension system needs, because it would be linked to residency and uprated in line with earnings. The citizen's pension would make an enormous contribution to alleviating pensioner poverty, especially among women. An extra £100 a month for over-75s would lift 1 million people out of means-testing overnight.

There are a few other issues that I would like to touch on and I hope that the Minister will find time to comment on them, too. Another major problem facing pensioners in my constituency is the cost of council tax. Nationally, pensioner incomes have risen, in percentage terms, by less than half the increase in council tax bills. In Edinburgh, the average council tax bill has risen by 22 per cent. in four years. The £100 offered to older pensioners in my constituency was welcome, but it ignores the underlying root of the problem. Also, because it was targeted at older pensioners, it left no help for many younger pensioners who are struggling to make ends meet because of their council tax bill. Council tax remains one of the most regressive and unfair taxes. It hits disproportionately those on fixed incomes and low incomes, including pensioners. The result has been that pensioners in my constituency are spending a huge chunk of their pension on council tax; that is money that they should be spending on heating their homes and on food for their meals. Just as with pension credit, too many pensioners—almost a third—are not claiming the council tax benefits to which they are entitled. Estimates given to me by Help the Aged suggest that some £2.5 billion worth of benefits, including council tax benefit, is going unclaimed by pensioners.

Thankfully, in Scotland, the Scottish Executive is undertaking a review into local government finance, and the Liberal Democrats will argue strongly for council tax to be abolished and for a new, fairer, local income tax to be introduced. The system would be based on income, not property values. Thousands of pensioners in my constituency and throughout Scotland would benefit. As fairness would be built into the system, we would also remove the need for council tax benefit and resolve the take-up problems.

Turning to poverty among disabled pensioners, the Minister will be aware of the strong and widespread feeling among Members about the discrimination in relation to disability benefits. Early-day motion 953, which concerns the Mobilise campaign to allow over-65s to claim disability living allowance, now stands out as one of the most popular EDMs this Session. Almost 250 MPs from all parties have backed it. The main support for the Mobilise campaign has come about because of the in-built injustice that it seeks to end. Surely it cannot be right that under-65s are entitled to help with their mobility costs while the under-65s are not? The allowance of £41 a week would go a long way in helping elderly people who suffer from mobility problems and who have to use their pension to pay for help. Such a move would also have other positive effects. DLA acts as a gateway allowance; entitlement to it also means access to other benefits, such as the Motability scheme and exemption from car tax. The 20 charities that formed the Mobilise campaign have done a power of work on raising awareness of the issue, both inside and outside Parliament. I hope that, at some point, the Minister will confirm that their work has not been in vain, and that changes to the rules will be introduced as soon as possible.

I remember when the Prime Minister promised to learn from what he described as a mistake—the 75p increase in the state pension, which many pensioners found insulting. That was one of the big mistakes of Labour's first term, and one of the big mistakes of their second term has been the abolition of pension books. Although that has not added to pensioner poverty, it has added to the general anger and frustration felt by many pensioners. It comes down to the attitude of the Government—an attitude that has led to their setting a target to end child poverty by 2020, but setting no such target and making no such commitment for older people. That attitude has fostered feelings of injustice and unfairness among the pensioners whom I represent. After all their contributions to society, they are only asking for what is fair. The Government should offer no less.

The Minister for Pensions (Malcolm Wicks): I thank the hon. Member for Edinburgh, West (John Barrett) for the way in which he approached the debate. We will not agree on everything, but I would like to thank him for his tribute to our local Pension Service. It is the first time that we in these countries have had a dedicated Pension Service, and its work at local level is quite outstanding. It is particularly helpful when it can link up with a local Member of Parliament. I am pleased with the way in which the hon. Gentleman is approaching that work in his constituency.

Whatever the difference between us about policies, such as pension credit, it is our duty as Members of Parliament to play our role in ensuring that all our constituents claim their entitlements. I thank the hon. Gentleman for his approach.

I am hoping that, in the next day or two, the Pensions Bill will become the Pensions Act, although there are still some discussions to be held about it. It would bring much-needed security in the future to those people with final salary pension schemes ending the scandal whereby, when a company goes bust and a scheme does not have enough money, pension rights are, in fact, not rights. We are making sure that the pension promise will be kept in the future.

The hon. Gentleman referred briefly to the Pensions Commission. We will consider its recommendations when they are published in the commission's second report next year and examine some of the fundamental issues about which any Government need to decide.

Understandably, the hon. Gentleman spoke much about the situation facing today's pensioners. It was certainly the case that, when the Government came to power in 1997, one of the great challenges facing us was pensioner poverty. Under the previous Government's income support system, a single pensioner was being asked to live on an income as low as £69 a week. Moreover, under income support, any extra money that the pensioner had, such as savings or a small works pension, was deducted pound for pound from the person's entitlement to income support. Poverty was certainly blighting the lives of many of our senior citizens in our countries. That is why we focused not all but much of the additional money that we can spend on pensioners.

I accept that there is always the argument that we should be spending more, but we will be spending £10 billion a year more on pensioners in 2004–05 than was spent under the old system. Of that £10 billion, about half—nearly £5 billion—is going to the poorest one third of pensioners. The hon. Gentleman talked about means-testing but, whether or not he agrees with our approach, we are proud of the fact that, through such measures as pension credit, we are enabling many additional resources to go to the poorest. Indeed, average pensioner households are receiving £1,350 more a year—£26 a week—while the poorest third receives £1,800 a year more, which is about £35 a week. It goes directly into the pockets and the purses of the poorest pensioners. That is important.

I do not want this to be a single-issue debate, but I feel obliged to make several points about pension credit. We have moved away from the intrusive, punitive means test of the past that put many people off taking up what was rightfully theirs. In the past, taking up entitlements meant perhaps a visit to an uninviting social security office and the daunting prospect of filling out a 40-page claim form. As the hon. Gentleman and I acknowledged, we have established a dedicated Pension Service that is tailored to our customers' needs, with a simple free phone application process that includes a local service in the community, which works jointly with our partners in the statutory and voluntary sectors, to provide not only pension credit but housing benefit, council tax benefit and other social care entitlements.

[The Minister for Pensions]

Members need not take my word for it, although I am sure the hon. Gentleman would want to: a recent survey undertaken by our partners, Age Concern, found that about 70 per cent. of people who had applied for pension credit considered that the application process was easy, while 85 per cent. said that they would recommend it to someone else. Pension credit is designed to provide extra money to those pensioners with modest savings for their retirement. Before it was introduced, many people who had managed to save a little were often left no better off than people who had not saved at all. That is the importance of the savings element of pension credit.

In Edinburgh, West, the hon. Gentleman's constituency, the average pension credit is just over £38 a week. I am pleased that, on the latest count, 3,206 individuals in his constituency are receiving pension credit. That extra money enables many of our older citizens to lead more independent and dignified lives—which they deserve and which we would wish for them.

One group that benefits from pension credit is women pensioners. There has been an uneven distribution of caring responsibilities. For example, many of the hon. Gentleman's older constituents—those in their 80s—might have brought up a number of children. They may also have been responsible as the main carer for elderly relatives within the extended family. As a result, they would have had less time to pursue a career and therefore less access to a decent occupational pension scheme. As the hon. Gentleman remarked, such women were less likely to have a full national insurance contribution record and therefore less likely to have a full basic state pension. That gender issue will need to be addressed in future, but we must also address it now. It is no coincidence that two-thirds of people getting pension credit are women—partly because they are older and partly because of the other caring responsibilities that I mentioned.

It is not only pension credit that can make the difference: for the first time, about 2 million pensioner households now quality for more help with council tax and/or housing benefit. The number qualifying for those benefits has increased because pension credit recipients can now claim those benefits.

On the issue of council tax benefit, which the hon. Gentleman highlighted, I should note also that, as part of the winter fuel payment, an extra £100 will be paid to those households in which one or more members are over the age of 70. It is being paid this year only in order to take a bit of the sting out of the council tax increases—increases that concern us all.

I recognise that the take-up of council tax benefit has often been appalling. It has been a grey area, not a highlighted benefit. We are trying to change that, working with local authorities in Scotland and across England and Wales. The winter fuel payments that are now going to our constituents include a special leaflet about council tax benefit, urging people who think that they might be eligible to apply. They must apply to the local authority, which is very important.

I now turn specifically to the situation in Scotland—indeed, the majority of Members here this afternoon represent Scottish seats. As at the end of September, more than 273,000 pensioner households had already taken up their entitlement to pension credit, and that number is growing. As I said, by the end of September more than 2,700 households—about 3,206 individuals—in Edinburgh, West will receive pension credit. We believe that there should be a simple income test. The forms are shorter, home visits can be made and people can visit the local surgery.

I have one good news story about the local service. Staff recently visited a couple in Edinburgh, West to help them with a pension credit application. Although the couple were in receipt of a state pension and had been awarded attendance allowance, they had not yet applied for the pension credit. As a result of our approach, they are now receiving more than £49 a week, with a backdated payment of more than £1,300. That is just one example of the difference that pension credit can make to pensioners across our countries. The backdating is important because anyone claiming pension credit can now have it backdated for 12 months, so people could receive considerable lump sums.

We are determined to strengthen our joint working arrangements in Scotland, in order to reach more pensioners who have yet to take up pension credit. That is why the Pension Service in Scotland is working in partnership with the health and care group and the older people's unit within the Scottish Executive. Our approach is not limited to the poorest pensioners alone. It was vital that we got more money to them as quickly as possible. That is what pension credit is all about.

In response to the question of non-take-up, I have always acknowledged that there are both advantages and disadvantages to any pension strategy. The advantage of pension credit, which is income tested, is that by definition it is designed for the poorest, and we have an especial duty to reach the poorest. The challenge is always to maximise the take-up, but I am never sure that hon. Members are right when they say that we should simply do away with means-testing. It is a difficult issue.

As Minister for Pensions, my aspiration is that more people in the younger cohorts should be enabled to retire on incomes based on a combination of state pensions and state second pensions or occupational pensions that put them significantly above the means-tested level. That has to be our long-term aspiration. However, we have a group of people already retired who are poor—often women and often the older elderly. Would it really be right to say to such an 80-year-old constituent, jogging along on £60 or £70 a week when we came into power, that we will give them the same pension increase as someone with a big investment income or an occupational pension, who is earning £50,000 a year in retirement?

Should we treat everyone the same? It would be simpler administratively and there would not be a take-up problem, but would it be fair and just? That is the question, and that is why we believe that, in the short to medium term, pension credit is the right approach to righting the injustice that many of those constituents face during their lives. They have done the right thing in bringing up their children and caring for elderly relatives, but then they pay the pension penalty: they do not get the full basic state pension but they have not accrued rights to occupational pensions. Pension credit is designed to help that group. It is controversial, but I am convinced that it is the right strategy and that we all need to put a lot of effort into boosting take-up.

That is our strategy. We are doing what we can for all pensioners by raising the basic state pension, always at least in line with prices and often more. There are winter fuel payments, which, we should remember, are now worth £300 for our constituents over 80 and £200 for the over-60s. They take a lot of the sting out of the arrival of the electricity and gas bill, and I am proud of that.

John Barrett: Before the Minister finishes, will he address the issue of disabled pensioners?

Malcolm Wicks: I will reflect on the hon. Gentleman's thoughtful speech, and I will write to him on any points that I cannot cover now. I shall also bring his remarks to the attention of the Under-Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, my hon. Friend the Member for Liverpool, Garston (Maria Eagle), who has responsibility for disability issues.

We have in place a range of disability benefits and, through social work departments in Scotland and social services departments in England, measures to try to help people with disabilities. We always want to do more—the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 is an indication of our intent in that regard. However, we hope that the disability benefits and the carer's allowance will provide ways of tackling some of the financial hardship faced by both the person with the disability and their carer. I will reflect on the hon. Gentleman's remarks, and my ministerial colleague may write to him if I have missed any points.

I hope that I have addressed many, if not all, the issues that the hon. Gentleman raised. I am pleased that, on this busy day, we have managed to fit in such an important debate. I congratulate him on securing it and on the measured way in which he has approached the subject.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank the hon. Members for Edinburgh, West (John Barrett) and for Greenock and Inverclyde (David Cairns) and the Minister for their assistance in achieving a proper Adjournment debate on the one day in the year on which it is almost impossible to do so. The test of the elasticity of the relatively new Standing Orders was interesting for me in a technical sense.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at six minutes to Five o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before I put the question, may I make it clear that I shall ask the Clerk to write to Mr. Speaker and to the Government to seek to rearrange this important debate at a very early date? We are in uncharted waters, as Divisions will come at any time, and an important debate such as this would be unnecessarily and unacceptably interrupted. I am very happy to accept the motion proposed by the Government Whip.

Question put and agreed to.

CABINET OFFICE

Sickness Absence (Civil Service)

The Minister for the Cabinet Office (Ruth Kelly): The report "Analysis of Sickness Absence in the Civil Service 2003" prepared for the Cabinet Office by Aon Limited shows that the headline figure for the average level of sickness absence was 10.0 days per staff year. This represents a 0.2 days per staff year increase over the equivalent figure of 9.8 days set out in the report for 2002. The report contains a comprehensive analysis of the 2003 figures by department/agency. Copies have been placed in the Library.

Departments have established service delivery agreements, which contain their individual targets for reducing sickness absence. Overall, the civil service was targeted to reduce sickness absence by 30 per cent. (to 7.2 days per staff year) by 2003 against the 1998 baseline. In July 2004 my right hon. Friend the Chancellor announced a review into the extent of short and long-term sickness within the civil service, and the results of that are due to be published shortly. Meanwhile, the Cabinet Office is continuing to work with other departments and agencies as they take forward their plans to reduce sickness absence.

TREASURY

Efficiency Technical Notes

The Chief Secretary to the Treasury (Mr. Paul Boateng): In the spending review White Paper "2004 Spending Review: New Public Spending Plans 2005–2008" (Cm 6237), and following Sir Peter Gershon's independent review of public sector efficiency, the Government announced the publication of departmental efficiency technical notes (ETNs). Departments are now publishing these ETNs on their websites, in line with the end of October deadline. Links to the ETNs can be found at www.hm-treasury.gov.uk/performancedocs/.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Representation of the People Order

The Minister for Local and Regional Government (Mr. Nick Raynsford): We have today launched a short consultation paper on the increase to the maximum limits of candidates' election expenses for ward elections and elections by liverymen in common hall in the City of London.

Copies of the consultation paper are available in the House Library.

Comments are invited by 29 November.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Police Fund

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (Mr. Ian Pearson): I have today placed in the Library a copy of the report produced by John Steele CB OBE TD DL following his review of the Northern Ireland Police Fund. The Government accept the recommendations in principle and will work with the Police Fund on the implementation process.

Copies of the report have been placed in the Library of both Houses.

PRIME MINISTER

Committee on Standards in Public Life

The Prime Minister (Mr. Tony Blair): I am pleased to announce that I appointed Lloyd Clarke and the right hon. Baroness Jay of Paddington to the Committee on Standards in Public Life.

Lloyd Clarke replaces Baroness Neuberger of Primrose Hill who stood down from the Committee in April 2004. Baroness Jay takes up appointment as the Labour party nominee in succession to my right hon. Friend the Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) who is stepping down from the Committee following completion of his first term of appointment. Both appointments are effective from 1 November 2004 and are for three years in the first instance.

I would like to thank Baroness Neuberger and my right hon. Friend for their contribution to the work of the Committee during the past three years.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Regional Development Agencies

The Minister for Industry and the Regions (Jacqui Smith): As part of a rolling programme of appointments, I have decided to appoint five new members to East of England Development Agency and South East England Development Agency. The new appointees will take up their positions on 14 December 2004 and their names are set out below.

The new board members will replace members whose terms of office end in December this year and will bring experience from business, local authorities, rural affairs, trade unions and education.

Decisions on the appointments have been made following open competition in accordance with the guidelines set down in the Commissioner for Public Appointments' code of practice, and following consultation with key national and regional players.

TRANSPORT

Working Time Regulations (Road Transport)

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Transport (Mr. David Jamieson): Draft regulations and formal guidance implementing the Road Transport (Working Time) Directive (2002/15/EC) have today been published. A short six-week consultation exercise has been launched seeking views on both documents. This follows a full consultation exercise earlier this year on how the directive should be implemented. We are placing copies of the documents in the Libraries of both Houses.

The regulations will provide extra protection for drivers and crew of heavy goods and public service vehicles, who carry out road transport activities covered by the EU Drivers' Hours Rules—Regulation (EEC) 3820/85. The main provisions of the regulations include:

> Weekly working time is limited to an average 48 hours.
> Up to 60 hours work can be performed in a single week, as long as the average 48-hour limit is maintained.
> Night workers are restricted to 10 hours working time in any 24-hour period.
> Some additional break requirements

As announced on 29 April 2009, the draft UK regulations implement the following:

> Where there is either a collective agreement or a workforce agreement at company level between the employer and employees, firms will be able to use the derogations available under the directive:
> (a) The four-month reference period for calculating the average 48-hour week can be extended to six months.
> (b) The 10 hour limit, over a 24 hour period, for night workers can be exceeded, though the 60 hour weekly limit will still apply, and drivers will still have to respect EU driver's hours rules.
> The definition of "night time" is a period between 00.00-04.00 for drivers and crew of goods vehicles, and 01.00-05.00 for drivers and crew of passenger vehicles.
> VOSA (DVTA—NI) will enforce the new regulations; primarily in response to complaints they receive. This approach will be reviewed before March 2009.
> Self-employed drivers will not be covered by UK regulations until March 2009.

In addition, under the draft Road Transport (Working Time) Regulations:

> Workers who occasionally perform road transport activities will be subject to the Working Time Regulations 1998 (as amended), rather than these new regulations.
> There is a new method of calculating average working time.
> Working time is restricted to road transport activities.

Formal guidance for industry on the draft legislation, including the definitions (notably, working time and periods of availability) and occasional drivers is also available.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Disability and Carers Service

The Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (Alan Johnson): On 27 January 2004 as part of the Department's wider programme of reform, the then Secretary of State announced that the disability and carers service (DCS) would be assigned formal executive agency status. Work to establish the agency is now complete. It will retain its current title, the disability and carers service, and is launched from today with Terry Moran appointed as chief executive.

The role of DCS is to support disabled people and carers by providing a customer-focused service that delivers disability and carer benefits efficiently. These benefits comprise disability living allowance, attendance allowance, carer's allowance and vaccine damage payments.

The 2004–05 targets for the DCS are contained within the disability and carers directorate business plan, a copy of which is available in the Library. Accountabilities for the DCS align with those of other departmental agencies and are set out within the departmental framework.

DCS will embark on a significant programme of change by putting the experience of its customers at the heart of its plans to transform the service.

I am confident that these changes will benefit the customers served by the DCS and support our agenda for improvements in public service generally and also achieve greater efficiency.

CABINET OFFICE

Central Office of Information

The Minister for the Cabinet Office (Ruth Kelly): The targets set for the Central Office of Information for the 2004–05 financial year are:

Financial:

To break even on an accruals basis.

Efficiency:

To achieve a unit cost reduction of 2.5 per cent.

Quality:

For the customer satisfaction system:

To achieve a customer satisfaction score of 8.25 out of 10;

To achieve 96 per cent of customer satisfaction scores of six or higher;

To achieve a response rate of 62 per cent.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Planning Obligations

The Minister for Housing and Planning (Keith Hill): The system of planning obligations in England has been widely criticised for some time for its often opaque nature and its contribution to delays in the planning process. The Government are therefore publishing today a draft revised circular, aimed at improving the way in which planning obligations are negotiated under s106 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 (amended by the 1991 Act).

The draft revised circular on negotiated agreements, which will now be consulted on for three months, aims to contribute to the speeding up of the planning system and therefore the creation of sustainable communities.

The circular brings planning obligations into line with the new arrangements established by the Planning and Compulsory Purchase Act 2004. Given the possibility of more major reforms to the system of planning obligations in the next few years, referred to in my statement of 17 June 2004, the circular seeks to minimise the additional administrative burdens placed on local planning authorities and developers, whilst seeking to streamline the system and promote best practice.

It seeks to ensure that affordable housing continues to be secured through s106 on a more consistent basis and in line with the direction of reform to Planning Policy Guidance Note 3 (Housing). ODPM consulted on proposed updates to PPG3 last year entitled "Influencing the Size, Type and Affordability of Housing", and "Supporting the Delivery of New Housing". Concerns have been expressed about the proposed policy update on housing mix in particular. The office continues to discuss these issues with stakeholders. The intention is to publish the PPG3 updates by the end of the year.

The draft circular has been produced following extensive discussions with stakeholders to seek their views on the difficulties experienced with the current system. In addition, the work of the Advisory Group on Planning Obligations has been useful in helping to formulate the proposals being published today.

Following public consultation, a final version of the circular will be issued in spring 2005, accompanied by good practice guidance, which is being prepared by Halcrow group.

In the meantime, the Government are continuing to consider Kate Barker's proposal for a planning-gain supplement, made in her final report of her "Review of Delivering Stability: Securing our Future Housing Needs", 17 March 2004. Depending on the outcome of further work over the next 12 months, further changes to the system of planning obligations may be required.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Winter Supplementary Estimates

The Minister for Rural Affairs and Local Environmental Quality (Alun Michael): We intend to make a full statement on the contents of our winter supplementary shortly.

Countryside and Rights of Way Act

The Minister for Rural Affairs and Local Environmental Quality (Alun Michael): Today I am launching two consultation papers dealing with proposals to implement the rights of way joint orders and rights of way registers provisions in the Countryside and Rights of Way Act 2000.

In the first consultation paper, I offer proposals for the contents of registers that Local Authorities are required to establish under various provisions in schedules 5 and 6 to the Countryside and Rights of Way Act 2000. The registers, which will be available for public inspection, will help to better inform landowners, user groups and the general public about applications that could result in changes to the definitive map and statement—the local authority's legal record of rights of way. This is particularly important in the in the light of the 2026 cut off date for adding historic rights of way to the definitive map and statement.

The second consultation paper is concerned with the new rights of way joint orders procedure under schedule 5, paragraph 2 of the Countryside and Rights of Way Act 2000.

This new procedure will enable public path orders and legal event modification orders (orders that enable the local authority to alter the definitive map and statement to record changes resulting from public path orders) to be combined where they are made by the same authority. Local authorities are at present required to make separate orders. This will ensure that the definitive map is updated continuously and reduce uncertainty about rights of way, which will benefit both land managers and the public.

Copies of both of the consultation papers have been deposited in the House Library. The closing date for the consultations is 31 January 2005.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Guide to the European Union

The Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (Mr. Jack Straw): On 1 November 2004, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office published a guide to the European Union (EU) which sets out how the EU works and explains the main points of the Treaty establishing a Constitution for Europe. The guide has been awarded the Plain Language Commission's clear English standard mark, which means it has passed rigorous checks of its clarity, grammar and layout. This guide will be available in all public libraries and on the Foreign and Commonwealth Office website: www.europe.gov.uk. Members of the public can also request a hard copy of the guide. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House and are also available from the Vote Office.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Companies Registry

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (Mr. Barry Gardiner): In accordance with Article 677 of the Companies (Northern Ireland) Order 1986, copies of the Companies Registry annual report 2002–03 have been placed today in the Libraries of both Houses.

Credit Unions

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (Mr. Barry Gardiner): In accordance with article 81 of the Credit Unions (Northern Ireland) Order 1985 and section 100 of the Industrial and Provident Societies Act (Northern Ireland) 1969, copies of the Credit Unions Annual Report 2002 have been placed today in the Libraries of both Houses.

Independent Monitoring Commission (Normalisation Report)

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (Mr. Paul Murphy): On 20 July I published a report by the Independent Monitoring Commission (IMC) on the security normalisation activity undertaken in Northern Ireland. The Commissioners have written to me to advise me that they received, from the Ministry of Defence, revised figures for troop numbers in Northern Ireland for the period the report covers. I have been asked to publish the revised figures and have placed copies in the Library. It appears that the information originally in the report over-stated the numbers of troops based in Northern Ireland. I note that IMC have concluded that they would not have changed the conclusions in their report had they been in receipt of this information during the writing of the report.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Stakeholder Pensions

The Minister for Pensions (Malcolm Wicks): We are today publishing a consultation document on changes to the stakeholder pensions regulations.

The changes are part of the Government's wider strategy to introduce a suite of simple, low-cost, risk-controlled savings and investment products that can be sold through a new basic advice process.

The main change is that for people who do not want to choose how their pension savings are to be invested, we are going to require stakeholder pension schemes to provide lifestyling. "Lifestyling" means that at least five years before retirement, the members' pension savings will start to be moved into less volatile investments in order to reduce the risk of a sudden drop in value shortly before retirement.

We have already announced that the charge cap for the stakeholder pension is to increase. From April 2005, pension providers will be able to make an annual charge of 1.5 per cent. for the first ten years that the product is held and 1 per cent. thereafter. However, I am announcing today that charges will still be capped at 1 per cent. for existing members.

We aim to make and lay these regulations in early 2005, to come into force on 6 April 2005.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Planning Policy Statement 23

The Minister for Housing and Planning (Keith Hill): I am announcing today the publication of a new planning policy statement on "Planning and Pollution Control". The new Planning Policy Statement 23 (PPS23) and its two annexes covering pollution control, air and water quality and development on land affected by contamination, will replace the remaining extant parts of Planning Policy Guidance Note 23 (PPG23), "Planning and Pollution Control", published in 1994.

A draft of PPS23 was issued for public consultation in July 2002. The key policy aims of PPS23 are to facilitate planning for good quality, sustainable development that takes appropriate account of pollution and contaminated land control issues while avoiding duplication of the existing pollution control systems. The aim is to enable the planning system to contribute to improvements in the quality of air and water and to assist in the remediation of contaminated land through the process of development—which is the main driver in bringing such land back into beneficial use.

Local planning authorities will need to have regard to the policies in PPS23 in preparing their local development documents, as should regional planning bodies in the preparation of regional spatial strategies. The policies will also be material to decisions on individual planning applications where pollution issues arise or which concern contaminated land. Planning authorities have an important role to play in ensuring that development proposals do not risk adding to pollution, and properly address pollution issues and the action needed to bring contaminated previously developed land back into safe and sustainable use.

Copies of PPS23 are being made available in the Libraries of both Houses following publication. It is also being made available on the website of the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister.

HEALTH

Pharmaceutical Price Regulation Scheme

The Minister of State, Department of Health (Ms Rosie Winterton): We have today agreed a 7 per cent. price reduction for branded prescription medicines with the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry (ABPI). The reduction has been agreed as part of a new pharmaceutical price regulation scheme (PPRS) agreement. It will save more than £1.8 billion over the next five years on these medicines. This money will be channelled back into front-line national health services by local primary care trusts.

The new PPRS agreement will last for five years. Its objectives are to:

> secure the provision of safe and effective medicines for the NHS at reasonable prices;
> promote a strong and profitable pharmaceutical industry capable of such sustained research and development expenditure as should lead to the future availability of new and improved medicines;
> encourage the efficient and competitive development and supply of medicines to pharmaceutical markets in this and other countries.

It is important that we continue to encourage the pharmaceutical industry in its first-class research and development work to deliver new and improved medicines for patients. For this reason, the agreement includes improved incentives for the research and development of new medicines, including those for children.

The PPRS is a voluntary agreement between the ABPI and the four health departments in England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. It is backed by section 33 of the Health Act 1999. It allows companies freedom of pricing for new active substances (new medicines) when launched on the UK market, and sets a target rate of return on capital and allowances for research and development and marketing expenditure. Companies that exceed the level of profit allowed under the scheme are required to repay the excess.

Those branded pharmaceutical companies that elect not to join the PPRS will be subject to a statutory scheme under sections 34 to 38 of the Health Act 1999.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Youth Justice Board

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department (Paul Goggins): The Youth Justice Board's annual review for 2003–04 has today been laid before both Houses of Parliament. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

The Youth Justice Board is an executive non-departmental public body established under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 to monitor the operation and performance of the youth justice system and to identify and disseminate good practice to prevent offending by children and young people. The board is also responsible for commissioning services for young people under 18 who are sentenced and remanded to secure facilities.

The annual review 2003–04 reports on the ongoing improvements to the youth justice system and early intervention initiatives. The review highlights:

> the continued development of youth inclusion and support panels and youth inclusion programmes which target prevention activity at young people at risk of offending;
> continued successful delivery of the Government's pledge to halve the time from arrest to sentence for persistent young offenders; and the development of the Board's quality assurance programme.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Northern Ireland Housing Executive

The Minister of State, Northern Ireland Office (Mr. John Spellar): The accounts of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive (NIA 115/03) for the year ended 31 March 2004 incorporating the report of the Comptroller and Auditor General thereon will be laid before the Northern Ireland Assembly on Wednesday 3 November 2004.

Copies of the Northern Ireland Assembly paper have been placed in the House of Commons Library at Westminster and in the Northern Ireland Assembly Library at Stormont.

CABINET OFFICE

Regulatory Impact Assessments

The Minister for the Cabinet Office (Ruth Kelly): The Government are committed to ensuring that regulations are necessary, give effective protection, balance cost and risk, are fair and command public confidence. In accordance with this, we require Departments to produce and publish regulatory impact assessments (RIAs) for all regulatory proposals likely to have an impact on business, charities or voluntary bodies. Since 1 April 2004, RIAs have also been carried out on proposals with a significant impact on the public sector.

I have today presented to Parliament a Command Paper (Cm 6329) listing RIAs published between 1 January and 30 June 2004. Copies of those listed have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. This is the 21st such Command Paper.

DEFENCE

Gulf Veterans' Illnesses

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence (Mr. Ivor Caplin): As part of the Government's commitment to investigate 1990–91 Gulf veterans' illnesses issues openly and honestly and to learn lessons of the past, the Ministry of Defence has today published the paper "The 1990–91 Gulf Conflict Health and Personnel Related Lessons Identified". The purpose of the paper is to focus on the health and personnel related issues resulting from the First Gulf Conflict (Operation GRANBY), with the key aim of learning from the problems identified. In producing the paper, we have attempted to be as open and forthright as possible in examining the health problems experienced by serving personnel, veterans and civilians since the First Gulf Conflict.

The paper identifies what the Ministry of Defence has already done to improve procedures and assesses how these have been applied to the current Iraq deployment (Operation TELIC). It also indicates where improvements are still required. In making these assessments it has been acknowledged that during operations it is not always possible to achieve the ideal situation; inevitably, in the heat of battle there will always be some things that do not go as intended. The aim of this paper is not to seek to attribute blame but to identify how the Ministry of Defence can do better in future. I am today placing copies of the paper in the Library of the House and it is also being placed on the Ministry of Defence website at: www.mod.uk/issues/gulfwar.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Secondary School Admissions

The Secretary of State for Education and Skills (Mr. Charles Clarke): I am today laying before Parliament the Government's response to the report by the Education and Skills Select Committee on secondary school admissions. This is the fourth part of their inquiry into secondary education.

I welcomed the report when it was published at the end of July. It is thoughtful and detailed, focusing on the nature of the school admission and the school admission appeals codes of practice and on selection and standards. Our response shares that focus.

We agree with the Committee that every school should be a good school and we welcome their belief that schools are improving. We share their concern that not all schools are or are perceived to be good schools. Earlier this year we published our five-year strategy for children and learners. In it we set out our plans for greater diversity and freedoms for schools to drive up standards so that parental choice becomes more meaningful. We also expect schools to work more collaboratively and to take collective responsibility for all children in their area. Our response to the Committee's report needs to be seen in the context of the five-year strategy.

We understand the Committee's wish to see stronger codes of practice and we will amend them in a number of areas and include a list of appropriate and acceptable admissions oversubscription criteria. This clearer guidance will be helpful to the schools adjudicators who must have regard to the code in determining objections to admission arrangements referred to them.

We continue to believe in the local decision-making framework for admissions, with its emphasis on local discussion and consensus, which we put in place in 1998. We strengthened that framework in 2002 and it is too early to evaluate the effect of those measures—in particular co-ordination of admissions and the working of admission forums. We do not think it necessary or appropriate to consider new regulatory measures before we see the results of those changes. Nevertheless we do want to help admission forums to work effectively. We are therefore developing— as set out in our five year strategy—guidance for admission forums on how to develop protocols for hard-to-place children and how to seek agreement with admission authorities on them.

We are mindful of the Committee's concerns on the quality of some admission appeals. We have already produced some training materials for appeal panel members but we have committed in the response to developing exemplar letters and other Materials for admission authorities to use in their communications with parents on their appeals.

Our position on selection is clear. We do not support academic selection at age 11 and do not wish to see it extended. We have looked very carefully at the Committee's concerns about aptitude selection. We want all secondary schools to play to their strengths and provide a flexible curriculum to meet the needs of individual pupils. Selection by aptitude allows a small number of pupils who would not otherwise have the opportunity to do so to benefit from particular curriculum strengths.

The Schools Adjudicator takes the view that it is possible to assess aptitude—rather than academic ability—in subject areas such as sport, the visual and performing arts and languages. The Government believe there is general acceptance that such a distinction is possible and will continue to allow admission authorities that wish to do so to select a small percentage (up to 10 per cent.) of pupils in these subjects. We intend to prohibit new aptitude selection in design and/or information technology but allow schools already using such selection to continue to do so. We are not intending to introduce aptitude selection in any other area.

We share the Committee's aspirations for an admissions system that is transparent and fair. The changes we are intending to make in response to the Committee's report will ensure that this is the case.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Guantanamo Bay Detainees

The Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (Mr. Jack Straw): A Foreign and Commonwealth Office official visited Guantanamo Bay between 2 and 5 October 2004 to check on the welfare of the four British detainees. This was the ninth welfare visit to Guantanamo Bay.

The FCO official saw all the UK detainees individually. US officials observed the meetings. The FCO official talked to all the British detainees about mail, their health, exercise, diet, living conditions, treatment by the Camp authorities and status, the value of the welfare visits and about the British Government's policy towards their detention. The detainees' families have been given details of the visit.

The official gave personal mail and reading material to the detainees and brought mail back to their families in reply. The detainees are also able to send and receive mail through the Camp authorities and ICRC. Delivery times have been irregular but are improving following a review of the US mail system.

The British detainees appeared in sound physical health, are frustrated by their continued detention but heartened by recent access to legal representation, in the case of three of the detainees. Individual medical and detention matters raised during this and previous welfare visits by the detainees were pursued with the Camp authorities. Most have now been addressed. The Government will continue to pursue the outstanding matters. All the detainees said that they welcomed the welfare visits.

The official explained the British Government's policy towards their detention—that, in absence of a fair trial, the British detainees should be returned to the UK—and that talks between the British and US Governments on their detention continued. The official also explained to two detainees designated for trial by Military Commission that the legal proceedings concerned remained suspended.

The Camp authorities were open and co-operative throughout the visit.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Paramilitary Activity

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (Mr. Paul Murphy): On 28 October 2004 I received a report from the Independent Monitoring Commission (IMC). This report was made under articles 4 and 7 of the international agreement that established the commission. The report makes an assessment of paramilitary activity in Northern Ireland during the six-month period March 2004 to September 2004. I welcome this report. I have considered its content and I am today bringing it before Parliament. I have placed copies in the Library of the House.

The IMC's report concludes that some paramilitary groups have scaled back the intensity of their activity but none have materially wound down their capacity to commit violent or other crime. Dissident republican groups are the most committed to continuing terrorism. Paramilitary violence in the form of murder, shootings and assaults has considerably reduced in the past six months but remains at a disturbingly high level. The proportionate reduction is greater on the part of republican groups. Most violence is attributable to loyalist groups. The range of paramilitary activity remains wide. Paramilitary groups from both sides remain deeply engaged in serious organised crime.

The IMC makes several recommendations in its report. The first set of these are about paramilitary involvement in organised crime. I remain very committed to addressing the issue of organised crime in Northern Ireland. Partner agencies will work with our counterparts nationally and internationally to take effective action to disrupt the workings of the criminal organisations. If criminal proceedings cannot be brought, cases will be referred to the Assets Recovery Agency to retrieve the proceeds of crime, through either civil action or taxation. The IMC also recommend that guidance be prepared for those who have to engage with paramilitaries. This is a complex issue. I will examine the recommendation in detail.

In April, I said I would review the current suspension of block financial assistance imposed on Sinn Fein and the Progressive Unionist Party on receipt of this report. I am giving careful consideration to this, and I will of course take into account the matters set out by the IMC.

TRANSPORT

Safety Cameras

The Secretary of State for Scotland (Mr. Alistair Darling): I have today published the 2005–06 handbook of rules and guidance for the national safety camera programme in England and Wales, and placed copies in the Library of the House. They have been updated in consultation with the Association of Chief Police Officers and representatives of local highway authorities, along with members of the Motorists' Forum and the Government's road safety advisory panel. The handbook has been updated annually since the programme began and will continue to be subject to review.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Education, Research and Technology Transfer

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (Mr. Ian Pearson): On 31 March 2003 I announced the Government's final decisions in response to the O'Hare report on the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development's arrangements for the provision of agri-food education and research and development (R&D) in Northern Ireland.

I am today announcing my intention to set up an advisory non-departmental public body to provide independent advice on education, R&D and technology transfer in response to one of the O'Hare report recommendations. The body will be called the DARD research and education advisory panel.

The body will comprise a chairperson and eleven members, five with scientific or education expertise, one with economics expertise and five with knowledge and experience of one or more of the four themes underpinning the DARD business strategy 2004–05: namely competitiveness of the agri-food sector, animal, fish and plant health, environmentally sustainable activity and development of the rural economy and society.

Members will be appointed by an open and transparent process, following the Commissioner for Public Appointments code of practice. It is intended that these positions will be advertised in a range of local and national publications during the week commencing 8 November 2004. Details of the appointments will also be placed on the DARD website, http://www.dardni.gov.uk/ and the public appointments unit website http://www.publicappointments.gov.uk/.

It is anticipated that the body will meet four times per year and will consider such strategic issues as:

> Research needs over the short, medium and long term of agri-food, agri-environment, animal health & welfare, fisheries & forestry sectors and rural development;
> Priorities in light of the competing demands for the total budget available across all DARD funded R&D;
> Technology transfer of relevant local, national and international research;
> The level and extent of the required education and training programme for the sector, and
> Progress on achievement of education, R&D and technology transfer targets.

It will play a key role in the development of the Department's forthcoming strategies for agri-food education, R&D and technology transfer in Northern Ireland and, in doing so, will be required to consult industry and other stakeholders.

The body will perform a purely advisory role. It will not have a budget nor employ any staff. A review of the body will be carried out before the end of its first four years of existence.

I am confident that this new body offers the best option for the provision of consistent, high quality and independent advice to the Department about the future provision of agri-food education and research.

Further Information

The O'Hare review was conducted by an independent panel, consisting of three ministerial appointees. The panel's report was completed in April 2002. Public consultation on the Government's response to the O'Hare report took place between 25 November 2002 and 28 February 2003.

The O'Hare report made a total of seven recommendations for the future provision of undergraduate and postgraduate education and R&D in agriculture and food science in Northern Ireland. One of these, in relation to a new central decision making process, recommended the setting up of an independent expert advisory committee consisting of an independent chairman and approximately 10 members to provide advice on education, R&D and technology transfer. The report also suggested that the committee would receive representations from consumers and from industry, education, R&D and other stakeholders including through ad-hoc working groups. The Government accepted this recommendation.

Work is continuing within the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development to implement the remaining measures arising from the Government's final response to the O'Hare report announced by Ian Pearson on 31 March 2003.

Education and Library Boards

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (Mr. Barry Gardiner): The statements and summary of the 2000–01 education and library boards' accounts were deposited in the Libraries of both Houses today.

Weights and Measures Triennial Report

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (Mr. Barry Gardiner): Today I have deposited a copy of the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment's Weights and Measures Triennial Report for the period from 1 April 1999 to 31 March 2002 in the Libraries of both Houses. The report gives an overview of the Department's proceedings under the Weights and Measures (Northern Ireland) Order 1981 and generally about the operation of the order. It also includes details of the provisions enacted by the Weights and Measures (Amendment) Act (Northern Ireland) 2000.

PRIME MINISTER

Surveillance Commissioners

The Prime Minister (Mr. Tony Blair): I am pleased to announce that I have approved the re-appointment of the right hon. Lord Sutherland, the right hon.

Sir Michael Hutchison and Sir Charles McCullough as surveillance commissioners under the terms of section 91 of the Police Act 1997.

Their re-appointments start on 1 November 2004 and are until 31 October 2007.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Regional Development Agencies

The Minister for Industry and the Regions (Jacqui Smith): I would like to inform Members of the House that, as part of a rolling programme of appointments, I have decided to appoint two new board members to the South West of England Regional Development Agency. The new appointees will take up their positions on 14 December 2004 and their names are set out below.

The new board members will replace members whose terms of office end in December this year, and they will bring experiences from business and local authorities.

I have also agreed to extend the appointment of Nigel Costley by one year, so that his appointment is due to end on 13 December 2005.

Decisions on the appointments have been made following open competition in accordance with the guidelines set down in the Commissioner for Public Appointments code of practice, and following consultation with key national and regional players.

UK Company Participation

The Minister for Trade and Investment (Mr. Douglas Alexander): Details of UK Trade and Investment's £16 million programme of support for UK company participation in supported groups at overseas exhibitions, seminars and sector focused outward missions will be placed in the Library of the House. Accredited trade organisations that bid for support to arrange groups are being informed.

These overseas exhibitions, seminars and sector focused outward missions continue to be an important component of trade development work worldwide. UK Trade and Investment recognises that accredited trade organisations need the flexibility to react to changing international events and opportunities. The operation of the programme during the 2005–06 financial year will continue to provide this flexibility, within the constraints imposed by the overall budget provision, and the need for prudent budget management and efficient administration.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Pensions

The Minister for Pensions (Malcolm Wicks): We are aware that trustees of schemes whose sponsoring employers are currently in financial difficulty are uncertain as to whether they would be able to be considered for PPF compensation once the PPF is launched next year.

The Government are now able to state that eligible schemes, whose sponsoring employer has already entered insolvency proceedings may still be able to receive PPF compensation. The scheme will still have to satisfy other PPF eligibility criteria—in particular, the sponsoring employer will need to have an insolvency event after the introduction of the PPF and the pension scheme must not have commenced wind up prior to that date.

The Pensions Bill provides a power that could be used to exclude schemes that have an insolvency event before the PPF is launched. We wish to make it clear that we have no plans to use this power.

TREASURY

Second World War Commemorative Coin

The Chancellor of the Exchequer (Mr. Gordon Brown): Her Majesty the Queen has been graciously pleased to approve my recommendation that a £2 coin should be issued in 2005 commemorating the 60th anniversary of the end of the second world war.

Collector versions of the coin will be released at a premium above face value and, during the course of the year, the coin will also become available at its face value from banks and post offices.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Housing Revenue Account

The Minister for Housing and Planning (Keith Hill): We have today issued for consultation the drafts of the Housing Revenue Account (HRA) subsidy and Item 8 determinations for 2005–06, which set out proposed figures for subsidy allocations for individual housing authorities. Copies of the draft determinations and supporting material are being made available in the Library of the House, and will be available on the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's website. These allocations are based on the most up-to-date information available to us from authorities, and may change as that information is refined. Authorities have until 10 December to comment on the draft determinations.

For 2005–06, we will increase the resources per dwelling available at the national level for management and maintenance allowances by almost 11 per cent. in cash terms. This follows from the previously announced 6 per cent. real increase, and allowances for inflation and changes due to rent restructuring. It will provide authorities with an extra £144 per dwelling compared with 2004–05.

The major repairs allowance will increase by about 3.6 per cent. per dwelling in cash terms at the national level.

In addition, the draft determinations propose to continue the reforms in the calculation and allocation of management and maintenance allowances, which began in last year's determination round. The proposals for the management and maintenance allowances in 2005–06 take account of better and more representative data.

Data for the maintenance formula has been expanded to take account of criminal damage to dwellings, re-let data has been expanded to include re-let and terminations, whilst the property void rate is to be averaged across the year rather than simply being taken at year end.

Similarly, for management allowances, we propose now to use crime figures based on harassment data, and take data from the 2004 index of deprivation, rather than the 2000 index that was used last year. Management allowances will also benefit from the same expanded definition of re-lets and terminations as used in maintenance allowances. Most local authorities will gain from the changes proposed in the draft determinations, and some will benefit substantially.

The Government also announced that the consultation on the three-year review of rent restructuring, which had recently closed, had highlighted some issues around the data used which required further analysis and consideration. It is important that we get this right. So we have listened to these concerns and decided to defer change for a year to ensure that we have the right basis for moving forward. We have reflected this in the allocation of allowances to authorities within the subsidy system. It remains our intention that social rents will be restructured and that over time tenants in social housing should pay similar rents for similar properties regardless of landlord.

DEFENCE

Warship Support Agency Targets (2004–05)

The Minister of State, Ministry of Defence (Mr. Adam Ingram): Key targets have been set for the chief executive of the WSA for financial year 2004–05 as follows:

Title	Details	Target
KT 1a—Provision Of Available Force Element Days	The measurement of the number of days when the material condition of a vessel enables it to perform its scheduled task on that day.	To provide Commander-In-Chief Fleet (CINCFLEET) with the Target level of Available Force Element Days agreed in the CINCFLEET/Defence Logistics Organisation (DLO) Customer Supplier Agreement (CSA).
KT 1a—Provision Of Available Force Element Days	The measurement of the number of days when the material state of a vessel enables it to meet its required Readiness Category.	To provide CINCFLEET with the Target level of the Ready Force Element Days agreed in the CINCFLEET/DLO Customer Supplier Agreement (CSA)
KT 2—Timely Completion Of Upkeep Periods	The measurement of the amount by which the upkeep periods overrun.	To meet the planned delivery dates for vessels undergoing deep maintenance and repair within the agreed Upkeep Factor tolerance.
KT 3—Timely Completion Of The High Priority Capability Improvement Programme	The measurement of the number of high priority upgrades implemented in accordance with the agreed and published installation plan.	To fit 87 per cent. of the high priority, Type A Capability Improvements (Alterations & Additions—A&A) selected by the Equipment Capability Customer (ECC).

Title	Details	Target
KT 4—Provision Of Single Living Accommodation	The measurement of the increase in available Single Living Accommodation (SLA)	To provide CINCFLEET, 2SL/CNH and Naval Base Lodger Units with the required quantity and quality of Single Living Accommodation for their entitled personnel, as articulated in DLO CSA.
KT 5—Provision Of Operational Support Services At The Naval Bases	The measurement of the delivery of Operational Support Services to a satisfactory standard.	To provide CINCFLEET with the Operational Support Services articulated in DLO Customer Supplier Agreements (CSA) at the agreed ISO 9000 Quality Management Standard.
KT 6—Maintenance Of WSA Capacity To Support The Naval Force Generation Plan	- the assurance that the Agency has the capacity to contribute to the Naval Force Generation Plan.	To achieve a satisfactory assessment against all elements of the Agency's contribution to the Naval Force Generation Plan.
KT 7—Delivering Planned Efficiencies	The measurement of the delivery of planned efficiencies.	To ensure delivery of 90 per cent. of the planned efficiency savings in the DLO Benefits Tracking Tool that are scheduled to be achieved this Financial Year.

Director of Operational Capabilities (2nd Reappraisal of Initial Training)

The Minister of State, Ministry of Defence (Mr. Adam Ingram): In my statement to the House on the Ministry of Defence's response to the Surrey police report into the four tragic deaths of Deepcut Barracks on 24 May 2004, Official Report, columns 1306–21, I informed right hon. and hon. Members that the Director of Operational Capability would undertake a further reappraisal of initial training in the armed forces to assess progress in the implementation of the recommendations of his first report.

This reappraisal, that included visits to 12 units across the three services, and interviews with 1,252 recruits and trainees and 307 instructor staff, command and administrative authorities and representatives of welfare, social and emotional support groups, is now complete.

The report confirms that significant progress has been made in implementing all the recommendations set out in the original report. It concludes that particular advances have been made in the field of duty of care arrangements for recruits and trainees, and highlights the considerable energy, imagination and leadership that is being applied in an effort to improve the regime in which recruits and trainees are trained. That said, it identifies areas where further work is required, to ensure that the training organisation meets the highest standards demanded. We are now taking these matters forward.

I am today placing copies of the report in the Libraries of both Houses.

CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

Better Regulation Task Force

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Constitutional Affairs (Mr. David Lammy): My right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Constitutional Affairs (Lord Falconer of Thoroton) has made the following statement:

> "The Government has today published its response to the Better Regulation Task Force report, "Better Routes to Redress". Copies of the Government response have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. Further copies of this response may be obtained from the Department for Constitutional Affairs and is available on its website at http://www.dca.gov.uk. The BRTF report "Better Routes to Redress" and the Government response are also available on the BRTF website at http://www.brtf.gov.uk"

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Human Rights

The Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (Mr. Jack Straw): I will today lay before Parliament the Foreign and Commonwealth Office annual report on Human Rights 2004. This is the seventh such report, which was an innovation by my right hon. Friend the Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) when the present Government took office.

Copies will be placed in the Library of the House and the Vote Office. A copy will also be available on the Foreign and Commonwealth Office website www.fco.gov.uk.

This report provides an overview of the main challenges to human rights around the world. It explains the Government's overall activities and policies to address those challenges in both multilateral and bilateral contexts. The report covers the 12-month period until the end of July 2004. In some cases, such as the situation in Iraq and the continuing humanitarian crisis in the Darfur region of Western Sudan, we have provided updates until the annual report went to print in mid-August 2004. Owing to the tragic events in Beslan, I decided to delay the launch of the annual report, which was originally due to be held on 16 September. The report was updated to reflect the atrocity that took place there.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Accession State Nationals

The Minister for Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Desmond Browne): I am publishing a report today containing provisional management information from the worker registration scheme and data from our monitoring of benefits, housing and national insurance number applications for the period 1 May to 30 September 2004. The report is available on the Home Office website at www.homeoffice.gov.uk. Data from the worker registration scheme is informing the Government's assessment of the impact of enlargement, and is being taken into account in the ongoing review of employment migration schemes.

Early indications that people from the new EU Member States, "The Accession States", would come to the UK to work, not to claim benefits, are borne out by the figures published today. Significant numbers of Accession nationals have come to Britain to work, but very few have claimed benefits. The number of people applying to register peaked in the summer, and had decreased considerably by August and September. The report shows that the Government were correct to expect that many of the people who chose to come to the UK to work would take on seasonal jobs for short periods of time, before returning home. There is also evidence that those who cannot find work are not staying in the UK.

Between 1 May 2004 and 30 September 2004 just under 91,000 people applied to register under the worker registration scheme. This amounts to 0.3 per cent. of the UK workforce. Of the applicants issued with a decision, at least 32 per cent, over 27,500 people, were already in the UK before 1 May. A further 13 per cent. of applicants, 11,410, did not state when they last entered the UK. It is reasonable to assume, therefore, that a significant proportion of those registering were already here illegally before 1 May, and have been able to legitimise their status so they can work legally, paying tax and national insurance contributions.

The number of people applying to register declined dramatically after the first three months. For example, there were around half as many applicants in September as in June or July, reflecting the fact that a large proportion were registering to work in the agricultural sector. Although the worker registration scheme does not directly monitor when a person leaves employment, feedback from a sample of over 100 employers showed that almost 60 per cent. of workers in the agricultural sector who had registered since 1 May had left their jobs to return home. There is anecdotal evidence that this is also occurring to some extent in other sectors. Applications from workers in the agricultural sector have fallen substantially since July, the number of workers registering in this sector fell from 4,725 in June to 1,330 in August and 830 in September. Anecdotal evidence from Accession State embassies and employers also suggests that many of the agricultural workers were students doing summer jobs in the UK, crop harvesting and fruit picking, who went back to continue university courses in their home countries. The quota for the seasonal agricultural workers scheme has been reduced to 16,250 from 1 January 2005 to take account of the fact that employers can now access labour from the Accession States. We continue to keep this quota under review.

Early analysis suggests that workers registered under the worker registration scheme are making an important contribution to the ongoing success of the UK economy, taking on jobs in sectors where there are intense skills shortages and significant recruitment difficulties. We will continue to monitor the impact of enlargement on the UK labour market as more data becomes available. Conservative estimates suggest that during the first five months after enlargement, the policy of allowing Accession State nationals to work in the UK has contributed £120 million to UK GDP, and registered workers have paid approximately £20 million in tax and national insurance. In the three months to August 2004, there were 29.78 million economically active people aged 16 or over in the UK. Even if every worker registered under the scheme between May and September was still in the UK—and we have good evidence that they are not, though it is too early to have precise information on this—Accession nationals would still represent only a third of 1 per cent. of the UK workforce. On this basis, we would not expect to see any measurable impact at the national level. Recent labour market statistics confirm that this is the case.

Our economy continues to perform strongly: the number of people working is at record levels. In June to August 2004 there were 10,000 more people in work than in the previous three months. The UK employment rate is 74 per cent. and every region has an employment rate above the EU average. The internationally recognised ILO measure of unemployment is down by 51,000 this quarter and by 105,000 over the last year, to 1.39 million. We have the lowest number of people claiming Jobseeker's Allowance since 1975, September 2004 834,000 claimed; down 95,100 on the same month last year.

The UK is currently carrying over 600,000 vacancies and our labour market is well able to absorb the workers who have registered. For example, 108,000 vacancies were reported in "real estate and business management"; 20 per cent. of registered workers were employed in administration business and management. Importantly, the report published today shows that workers from the Accession States are filling vacancies in sectors where there are key skills shortages and recruitment difficulties. For example, according to the 2003 National Employer Skills Survey, the health and social work sector accounted for the highest share of all "hard to fill" vacancies; 3,150 workers, i.e. 4 per cent, registered in this sector between 1 May and 30 September 2004. The construction industry reported the second highest proportion of skills shortages; between 1 May and 30 September, 3,560, i.e. 4 per cent, workers registered in this sector. The national employer skills survey also showed that the highest density of vacancies were reported in hotels and catering, where we know the majority, 24,170 workers; 30 per cent. of Accession country nationals are working, providing vital support to the UK's tourism industry. Earlier this year we reduced the number of places on the sectors based scheme by 25 per cent. to take account of the numbers of Accession nationals who would come to the UK to work in the food processing and hospitality and catering sectors. We are keeping the quota under review.

As expected, the UK economy is benefiting in other ways from EU enlargement. Data from the international passenger survey published by the Office for National Statistics today, shows that there were 655,000 visitors from the eight Accession States to the UK between May and September, 9 per cent. of the total number of arrivals from the EU for the same period. These visitors are boosting the UK tourism industry, and enabling the development of new business opportunities and trade links. The international passenger survey shows that the majority of visitors are here on holiday, to see friends or on business 60 per cent. of Accession nationals visiting the UK did so for leisure purposes. This does not include business or study. The International Passenger Survey also shows that 92 per cent. of visitors from the eight Accession countries in the three-month period ending September 2004 intended to stay for less than three months.

The report also shows that concerns that opening our labour market to Accession State nationals would put additional pressure on our public services and welfare system were unfounded. Some 98 per cent. of applications for National Insurance numbers were for employment purposes and the profile of workers continues to be as we had expected: workers are young, 84 per cent. were aged between 18 and 34, and single, only one in 31, or 3 per cent. of registered workers who applied in the first five months after enlargement had dependants aged 16 or under living with them in the UK. Consistent with this age profile, the usage of hospital and education services by Accession nationals appears to be low. In fact the report shows that many workers are contributing directly to the provision of key public services. For example, in July to September alone, there were 25 hospital doctors, including five consultants, 55 bus drivers, 55 teachers, 155 childminders, 1,070 care assistants and home carers and 20 social workers. The vast majority of registered workers are in full time employment, 96 per cent., and based across the country, not just in the South East. For example, 19 per cent. of registered workers are based in Anglia, 11 per cent. in South Central England and 8 per cent. in the Midlands.

The Government's policy is that Accession nationals are welcome to come to the UK to work but not to claim benefits. To back this up, the Government strengthened controls on access to benefits—and publicised information on workers' rights and responsibilities in the Accession countries. In part because of this—but mainly because the vast majority of accession nationals are hard-working people, contrary to press speculation earlier this year—the number of benefit claims has been extremely low. Only 108 applications for income support, 370 for income-based jobseekers allowance and one for pension credit were made by Accession nationals between 1 May and 30 September. Of the applications made, only 16 satisfied the new requirements and were allowed to proceed to be considered under other criteria. A total of 2,789 applications for child benefit were received between 1 May and 30 September, and of the 1,239 applicants who have responded to inquiries about the date of their arrival in the UK, we know that 80 per cent. were in the UK before 1 May. There were a negligible number of applications for tax credits, 314 in total. Applications for social housing and homelessness assistance also continue to be statistically insignificant. For example, between May and September, there were 14 lettings to A8 nationals, representing just 0.02 per cent. of the average number of lettings to all new tenants over a typical five-month period.

The next set of quarterly figures will be made available in February 2005.

DEFENCE

Côte D'Ivoire

The Secretary of State for Defence (Mr. Geoffrey Hoon):) The UK places the utmost priority on protecting its citizens, whether at home or abroad. We are always prepared to deploy British forces to evacuate UK nationals should their lives be placed in jeopardy. In the light of the deteriorating security situation in Côte D'Ivoire, a military reconnaissance team deployed earlier this week to assess the requirement to evacuate UK nationals. I wish to inform the House that, following this reconnaissance, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office has requested British forces to undertake an evacuation of UK nationals and others over the next few days. Some 400 people are entitled to our protection.

While I cannot give the House precise details of the mission for reasons of operational security, we have now established liaison teams in Abidjan, and at Accra in Ghana. Concurrently, we have ordered the deployment of the Spearhead lead company group comprising Royal Gurkha Rifles personnel to assist with this evacuation. The company group is pre-positioning in Accra and will be on immediate notice to be called forward to support the evacuation in Abidjan. It is intended to support this evacuation with a number of RAF transport aircraft. In total this equates to a deployment of around 300 personnel.

As an additional contingency we have redirected the landing platform dock HMS Albion towards Côte D'Ivoire, and reduced the notice to move for other force elements should they be required. We would expect the operation to last days, not weeks.

Our ability to react quickly to the situation on Côte D'Ivoire is testament to the flexibility and capability of Britain's armed forces, and to the professionalism of British servicemen and women. The UK is working in close co-operation with international partners to monitor and respond to the situation in Côte D'Ivoire as it develops. In particular, we are working with the French and Ghanaians, who have offered significant enabling support to British forces.

MOD Police Operational Report 2003–04

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence (Mr. Ivor Caplin): The Ministry of Defence police operational report for the year 2003–04 is published today. After the introduction of the Anti-Terrorism Crime and Security Act 2001, which gave the Ministry of Defence Police extended jurisdiction, recommendations were made by the House of Commons Defence Committee that an operational report should be presented annually to Parliament.

A copy of the report has been placed in the Library of the House.

Project Aquatrine

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence (Mr. Ivor Caplin): The contract for project Aquatrine package B, which covers the Ministry of Defence's estate in Scotland, has been awarded to Thames Water Nevis Ltd., a wholly owned subsidiary of Thames Water whose major partner will be Scottish Water.

Project Aquatrine is one of the Government's leading and most significant public-private partnership (PPP) projects and will transfer the responsibility for the operation and maintenance of the Department's water and wastewater assets and infrastructure throughout Great Britain to private sector providers. This project will enable the transfer of environmental risk to those in the private sector who are best placed to manage it and enable the Ministry of Defence to focus on its core activities. It is a 25-year arrangement worth £2.3billion across three packages that cover the MOD's estate in Great Britain.

Following a pre-commencement period, Thames Water Nevis Ltd. in partnership with Scottish Water will commence services in March 2005.

Defence Estates and English Partnerships

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence (Mr. Ivor Caplin): Defence Estates and English Partnerships (EP) have marked their close working relationship by means of a joint working agreement. This "framework" document provides further guidance on the sale of surplus MOD property to EP in accordance with the latest Government accounting rules.

The agreement builds upon a number of recent transactions undertaken between both organisations and will allow them to work even closer together in the future to meet the Department's disposal programme and help to deliver the objectives of the "sustainable communities plan".

In particular, the document will ensure that MOD receives market value for any sales to EP and maintains market confidence.

I am placing a copy of this document in the Library of the House.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Supplementary Estimates

The Secretary of State for Education and Skills (Mr. Charles Clarke): Subject to parliamentary approval of any necessary supplementary estimate, the Department for Education and Skills departmental expenditure limit (DEL) (including the Office for Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools (OFSTED) which has a separate estimate) will be increased by £467,748,000 from £27,695,021,000 to £28,162,769,000 and the administration costs limits will be increased by £4,875,000 from £267,487,000 to £272,362,000.

Within the DEL change, the impact on resources and capital are as set out in the following table:

DfES	Resources				Capital
	Change £'000	New DEL £'000	Of which: Voted £'000	Non-voted £'000	Change £'000	New DEL £'000	Of which: Voted £'000	Non-voted £'000

[1] Depreciation, which forms part of resource DEL, is excluded from the total DEL, in the table above, since capital DEL includes capital spending and to include depreciation of those assets would lead to double counting.

Within the administration cost limits changes, the impact is set out in the following table:

DfES	Original £'000	Change £'000	Revised £'000
DfES (RfR1)	237,487	4,875	242,362
OFSTED	30,000		30,000
Total	267,487	4,875	272,362

Resource DEL

The change in the resource element of the DEL of £460,704,000 arises from a £45,787,000 increase in the voted element of the resource DEL and an increase of £414,917,000 in the non-voted element of the resource DEL mainly to the Department's non-departmental public bodies.

Voted Resource DEL

The £45,787,000 increase in the voted element of the resource DEL arises from a £45,253,000 increase in RfR1; from the movement of £360,056,000 to non-voted resource DEL; the transfer to the Department for Constitutional Affairs of £3,705,000 for the Adoption and Children's Act implementation costs; the net transfer from the Department of Culture, Media and Sports of £2,023,000 for the schools physical education schools sport and club links project team, the schools sports partnership programme and the museums and galleries education programme; the net transfer from the Department of Health of £4,615,000 for the education health partnerships, aim higher health care and a shared nurse advisor; the transfer to the Department for Trade and Industry of £450,000 for foundation degree development; the transfer to the Department for Work and Pensions of £23,000,000 for the adult basic skills delivery of the short intensive basic skills programme; the net transfer from the Home Office of £3,492,000 for prison education capital, positive activities for young people and pay and accommodation costs, prison education offenders in Wales, contracted prisons and young peoples substance misuse partnership; the net transfer to the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister of £2,100,000 for the key worker programme, Government office regional co-ordination unit, extend schools and local public service agreements; the net transfer to OFSTED of £2,601,000 for spending review 2002 funding, local education authority strategic planning, evaluation of employability and adult learning qualifications, benchmarking and qualifications framework; the transfer from the Office for National Statistics of £126,000 for neighbourhood support; the transfer to the Welsh Assembly of £591,000 for student hardship loans; the take up of £387,500,000 end year flexibility (EYF); the take up of new resources £40,000,000 for employer training pilots.

The £17,963,000 decrease in RFR2 arises from the movement of £20,866,000 to non-voted resource DEL; the transfer from the Department for Work and Pensions of £4,503,000 for extended schools, childcare pilots and Sure Start unit research and evaluation; transfer to OFSTED of £1,600,000 for spending review 2002 funding.

TRANSPORT

GoSkills Funding

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Transport (Charlotte Atkins): I am pleased to announce that the Department for Transport (DfT) will be making a contribution towards the funding of GoSkills, the new sector skills council for passenger transport. The DfT funding, which amounts to £780,000 over three years, is particularly intended to reflect GoSkills1 input into skills and training initiatives for the taxi/private hire sector and the community and voluntary transport sector.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Eastbourne Borough Council (Benefit Fraud)

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (Mr. Chris Pond): On behalf of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, the benefit fraud inspectorate (BFI) inspection report on Eastbourne borough council was published today and copies of the report have been placed in the Library.

Following the housing Green Paper "Quality and Choice: A Decent Home for All", published in April 2000, the Department for Work and Pensions developed a performance framework for housing benefits. The performance standards for housing benefits allow local authorities to make a comprehensive self-assessment of whether they deliver benefit effectively and securely. They are the standards that the Department for Work and Pensions expects local authorities to aspire to and achieve in time.

In 2002–03, Eastbourne borough council administered some £31.8 million in housing benefits, about 52 per cent. of its gross revenue expenditure.

In April 2004 BFI carried out a second inspection of Eastbourne borough council and found that many of the issues highlighted in the 1999 inspection were still outstanding. For example, claims verification was still weak in some areas, there was a lack of management assurance checking, comprehensive guidance for staff was not available and the management of counter-fraud activity was poor. The review of the entire overpayments process that BFI recommended in 1999 had not been carried out.

The report notes that performance in administering benefits does not meet key best value performance indicators, and management information is not analysed or used to manage processes or identify staff training requirements. Comprehensive policies relating to benefits are not in place and there has been no dedicated counter-fraud manager since August 2003, resulting in a lack of effective counter-fraud measures.

The council's high level commitment to provide an effective benefits service is not adequately reflected in its operational planning and staff objectives. The organisational structure has also contributed to a lack of direction and effective communication within the service.

The BFI reports that although the council has not reached standard in any of the seven performance standards, there are some areas of strength. There is support for the benefits service at a corporate level, and a new management structure that was put in place just before the on-site phase of the BFI inspection.

The report makes recommendations to help the council address weaknesses and to further improve the administration of housing benefit and council tax benefit, as well as counter-fraud activities.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is now considering the report and will be asking the council for its proposals in response to the BFI's findings and recommendations.

Lambeth Council (Benefit Fraud)

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (Mr. Chris Pond): On behalf of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, the benefit fraud inspectorate (BFI) inspection report on the London borough of Lambeth was published today and copies of the report have been placed in the Library.

Following the housing Green Paper "Quality and Choice: A Decent Home for All", published in April 2000, the Department for Work and Pensions developed a performance framework for housing benefits. The performance standards for housing benefits allow local authorities to make a comprehensive self-assessment of whether they deliver benefit effectively and securely. They are the standards that the Department for Work and Pensions expects local authorities to aspire to and achieve in time.

In 2003–04,. the London Borough of Lambeth administered some £114.9 million in housing benefits, about 10.37 per cent. of its gross revenue expenditure.

In May 2004 BFI carried out a follow-up inspection on the London Borough of Lambeth assessing progress against the recommendations from the first inspection report published in 2001. The report notes that the council has not reached standard in any of the seven performance standards. There are some good practices in strategic areas, including a clear corporate vision, underpinned by policies and high level plans. Overpayment recovery has also improved and is supported by good procedural guidance.

However, the council's corporate commitment to provide an effective benefits service is not followed through into operational planning, staff objectives or local targets. The organisational structure does not support the effective delivery of benefits or effective communication. Performance in administering benefits remains poor, does not meet best value performance indicators and is hampered by the continuing backlog of work.

BFI reports that the counter-fraud policies have led to a number of successful sanctions and prosecutions but numbers of referrals from the benefits service are falling, management controls are inadequate and communications between benefits and investigation staff are poor.

The report makes recommendations to help the council address weaknesses and to further improve the administration of housing benefit and council tax benefit, as well as counter-fraud activities.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is now considering the report and will be asking the council for its proposals in response to the BFI's findings and recommendations.

Swale Borough Council (Benefit Fraud)

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (Mr. Chris Pond): On behalf of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, the benefit fraud inspectorate (BFI) inspection report on Swale borough council was published today and copies of the report have been placed in the Library.

Following the housing Green Paper "Quality and Choice: A Decent Home for All", published in April 2000, the Department for Work and Pensions developed a performance framework for housing benefits. The performance standards for housing benefits allow local authorities to make a comprehensive self-assessment of whether they deliver benefit effectively and securely. They are the standards that the Department for Work and Pensions expects local authorities to aspire to and achieve in time.

In 2003–04, Swale borough council administered some £29.1 million in housing benefits, about 48 per cent. of its gross revenue expenditure.

In June 2004 BFI carried out a third inspection on Swale borough council and found that the council's benefits service had failed to fully implement 56 per cent. of the recommendations made in the second inspection report, published in September 2002.

The report notes that the council has not reached standard in any of the seven performance standards. The council did not monitor performance and the lack of reliable management information undermined the council's ability to effectively manage its benefits service and counter-fraud activity.

The council averaged 168 days to process new claims, and 66 days to process changes of circumstances, compared with performance standards of 36 and nine days respectively.

BFI reports that nearly 25 per cent. of telephone calls to the benefits service were unanswered. Decision letters needed to give clearer guidance and information to customers. There were delays in dealing with complaints and replies frequently did not cover the facts, were misleading and lacked sufficient detail.

The management of the council's counter-fraud resources and quality of the investigative work was poor. Delays in dealing with changes of circumstances increased the level of preventable overpayments. Between March 2003 and March 2004, outstanding debt increased by 95 per cent.

The report makes recommendations to help the council address weaknesses and to further improve the administration of housing benefit and council tax benefit, as well as counter-fraud activities.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is now considering the report and will be asking the council for its proposals in response to the BFI's findings and recommendations.

CABINET OFFICE

Supplementary Estimates

The Minister for the Cabinet Office (Ruth Kelly): Subject to parliamentary approval of any necessary supplementary estimate, the Cabinet Office departmental expenditure limit (DEL) will be decreased by £11,159,000 from £250,017,000 to £238,858,000 and the gross administration costs limits will be decreased by £2,102,000 from £219,130,000 to £217,028,000. Within the DEL change, the impact on resources and capital are as set out in the following table.

		New DEL
	Change	Voted	Non-voted	Total
Resource	-11,159	258,005	0	258,005
Capital	0	31,000	0	31,000
Depreciation*	0	-50,147	0	-50,147
Total	-11,159	238,858	0	238,858

*Depreciation, which forms part of resource DEL, is excluded from the total DEL since capital DEL includes capital spending and to include depreciation of those assets would lead to double counting.

The change in the resource element of the DEL arises from reductions due to machinery of Government transfer of shareholder executive to the Department for Trade and Industry of £2,585,000, transfer of £10,057,000 to the Ministry of Defence for funding of the national met programme, end year flexibility drawn of £1,000,000 to fund the "go in, stay in, tune in" public information campaign and net transfers from other government departments of £483,000.

There is no change to the capital element of the DEL.

TREASURY

Supplementary Estimates

The Paymaster General (Dawn Primarolo): Subject to parliamentary approval of any necessary supplementary estimate, the H M Customs and Excise departmental expenditure limit will be increased by £75,736,000 from £1,331,872,000 to £1,407,608,000 and the administration costs limit will be increased by £34,476,000 from £1,184,015,000 to £1,218,491,000. Within the DEL change, the impact on resources and capital are as set out in the following table:

		New DEL
	Change	Voted	Non-voted	Total
Resource	71,966	1,327,032	-	1,327,032
Capital	3,770	79,576	1,000	80,576
Depreciation*	—	-44,780	—	-44,780
Total	75,736	1,361,828	1,000	1,362,828

Depreciation, which forms part of resource DEL, is excluded from the total DEL since capital DEL includes capital spending and to include depreciation of those assets would lead to double counting.*

The change in the resource element of the DEL arises from:

administration costs increases resulting from the take up of £41,914,000 end year flexibility entitlement (EYF) as set out in the public expenditure outturn White Paper (CM6293). This is partially offset by a transfer of £1,645,000 to HM Treasury to meet the costs of the transfer of policy work and virement from administration costs to programme expenditure of £5,793,000; and programme expenditure changes relating to: the draw down of £25,000,000 to cover additional costs of lorry road user charging, which formed a part of spending review 2004; an award from the efficiency challenge fund of £300,000; transfers from the Home Office to meet additional costs of anti-terrorism work of £2,336,000, funding from the recovered assets incentivisation fund of £4,161,000 to meet operational and legal costs and £40,000 towards the CIDA project. Further there is a transfer to the Home Office of £140,000 in support of two specific projects and electro mechanical services.

The change in the capital element of the DEL arises from the draw-down of capital EYF amounting to £3,680,000 and a transfer from the Home Office of £90,000 to support anti-terrorism work.

Supplementary Estimates

The Financial Secretary to the Treasury (Mr. Stephen Timms): Subject to parliamentary approval of any necessary supplementary estimate, HM Treasury DEL will be increased by £17,115,000 from £225,574,000 to £242,689,000 and the administration costs limits will be increased by £5,618,000 from £146,891,000 to £152,509,000. Within the DEL change, the impact on resources and capital are as set out in the following table:

£'000

		New DEL
	Change	Voted	Non-voted	Total
Resource	17,115,000	203,324,000	39,365,000	242,689,000
Capital	0	9,075,000	0	9,075,000
Depreciation*	390,000	-7,654,000	0	-7,654,000
Total	17,505,000	204,745,000	39,365,000	244,110,000

*Depreciation, which forms part of resource DEL, is excluded from the total DEL since capital DEL includes capital spending and to include depreciation of those assets would lead to double counting.

The change in the resource element of the DEL arises from:

an increase in total Treasury administrative costs of £5,618,000 resulting from:

a partial draw down of end year flexibility (eyf) of £98,000 for administration of the Invest to Save Budget (ISB);

a transfer from the Evidence Based Policy Fund (EBPF) of £35,000 for a research project on regional inequalities in the United Kingdom;

a transfer of £5,485,000 from the Inland Revenue and HM Customs and Excise to fund the switch of taxation policy responsibility to HM Treasury as recommended by the O'Donnell review; an increase in A in A of £200,000 and a matching £200,000 expenditure for secondments.

a partial draw down of programme eyf of £139,000 for the ISB team; a draw down of £300,000 EBPF programme and its subsequent transfer to the Office for National Statistics for a project on the measurement of public sector output as recommended by the Atkinson review. This transfer is DEL neutral for HM Treasury;

a transfer to Home Office of £30,000 programme spend for the GRECO project, which assesses national anti-corruption arrangements; an increase in A in A programme of £5,900,000 and a matching £5,900,000 increase in spend for the Office of Paymaster General to bring the estimate in line with forecasts;

an increase in A in A programme of £229,000 and a matching £229,000 increase in spend for the Coinage RfR 2, following the sale of scrap metal; a partial draw down of programme eyf of £3,810,000 for an increase in Bank of England agency payments, to cover restructuring costs of gilt administration;

Non-voted

a partial draw down of programme eyf of £232,000 for resettlement payments to Members of the European Parliament; an increase in OGC programme spend of £7,800,000, funded by the Efficiency Challenge Fund, as agreed in the 2004 spending review, to be drawn down for use via the Estimates as initiatives are identified and agreed with HM Treasury.

An increase in DEL CFERs of £454,000.

Supplementary Estimates

The Paymaster General (Dawn Primarolo): Subject to parliamentary approval of any necessary supplementary estimate, the Inland Revenue departmental expenditure limit will be increased by £152,750,000 from £3,205,460,000 to £3,358,210,000 and the administration costs limits will be increased by £86,282,000 from £2,989,475,000 to £3,075,757,000. Within the DEL change, the impact on resources and capital are as set out in the following table:

			New DEL
	Change	Voted	Non-voted	Total
Resource	107,764	2,751,476	331,418	3,082,894
Capital	44,986	275,316	-	275,316
Depreciation*	-942	-152,595	-	-152,595
Total	151,318	2,874,197	331,418	3,205,615

*Depreciation, which forms part of resource DEL, is excluded from the total DEL since capital DEL includes capital spending and to include depreciation of those assets would lead to double counting.

The change in the resource element of the DEL arises from the draw down of £90,121,000 administration costs EYF; take up award from the efficiency challenge fund of £20,700,000 programme costs. Additionally, the change relates to minor inter-departmental PES transfers, to HM Treasury reducing administration costs by £3,840,000; and from the Home Office increasing programme costs by £782,000.

The change in the capital element of the DEL arises from the draw down of capital EYF and other resource EYF, totalling £44,496,000 as set out in the "Public Expenditure Outturn" White Paper (CM6293), and an increase of £490,000 to VGA net costs for impairment.

Supplementary Estimates

The Financial Secretary to the Treasury (Mr. Stephen Timms): Subject to parliamentary approval of any necessary supplementary estimate, the Office for National Statistics DEL will decrease by £422,000 from £178,426,000 to £178,004,000 and the administration costs limit will decrease by £417,000 from £153,677,000 to £153,260,000. Within the DEL change, the impact on resources and capital are as set out in the following table:

£'000

			New DEL
	Change	Voted	Non-voted	Total
Resource	-417	153,339	-	153,339
Capital	-5	24,665	-	24,665
Depreciation*	-	-13,837	-	-13,837
Total	-422	164,167	-	164,167

*Depreciation, which forms part of resource DEL, is excluded from the total DEL since capital DEL includes capital spending and to include depreciation of those assets would lead to double counting.

The change in the resource element of the DEL arises from a transfer of £917,000 in total to other government departments in relation to work to develop the neighbourhood statistics programme. The transfers comprise £518,000 to the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister, £195,000 to the Department of Health, £126,000 to the Department for Education and Skills, £44,000 to the Department of Constitutional Affairs and £34,000 to the Department for Transport. This is partially offset by a transfer in to ONS of £500,000 from other government departments. These transfers comprise £300,000 from HM Treasury to fund work on the Atkinson Review of Government Output and Productivity and £200,000 from the Department for Constitutional Affairs in respect of registration services' gender recognition project.

The change in the capital element of the DEL arises from a transfer of £5,000 to the Department of Health in relation to work to develop the neighbourhood statistics programme.

CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

Broadcasting Courts Consultation Paper

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Constitutional Affairs (Mr. Christopher Leslie): The Government's consultation paper on broadcasting courts is published today, and copies have been placed in the Library.

In the paper, the Government considers the question of broadcasting courts with an open mind. We are making no recommendations to change the existing law—our purpose is to open the debate on this subject and to gauge stakeholder and public opinion prior to developing policy.

Although no proposals are being made, throughout the paper the Government maintains the position that nothing must be done that would harm the process of justice in any way. In particular, no changes will be made that might place added pressure on vulnerable participants in court proceedings, such as victims and witnesses.

In addition to the usual consultation with stakeholders, the Government wishes to encourage responses to the paper from the general public. To this end, an electronic copy of the consultation paper will be available on the DCA website, alongside an interactive copy of the questionnaire which can be completed online. There will also be a discussion forum, accessible via a link from the DCA website, on which interested parties will be able to share their views.

Magistrates Courts

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Constitutional Affairs (Mr. Christopher Leslie): On Thursday 11 November, my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State made a statement in respect of supporting magistrates to provide justice.

The problems dealt with every day in the magistrates courts are at the very top of the public agenda. We rely on them to be the frontline in terms of the dealing with crime, youth justice, and many family issues.

Magistrates courts should be more:

connected to their communities;

respected for what they do and their orders obeyed with the public having confidence in them; and effective at what they do—dispensing local justice.

To realise this, my Department is working in partnership with the magistracy, the district judges and those working in magistrates courts to identify what can be done to achieve this and that will supplement the substantial changes already taking place in the magistrates courts.

As part of this programme of work, "supporting magistrates to provide justice", tomorrow, my Department is writing to every single lay magistrate in England and Wales inviting them to complete a questionnaire to give me their ideas and suggestions.

The questionnaire will also be made available to the professional judiciary, all those who work in the magistrates courts and all organisations within the Criminal Justice System.

Further detail on the scope and objectives of this work, as well as electronic versions of the questionnaire, can be found on the internet at www.dca.gov.uk/magistrates.htm

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Supplementary Estimates

The Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (Tessa Jowell): Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the Department for Culture, Media and Sport DEL will be increased by £171,751,000 from £1,444,030,000 to £1,615,781,000 and the administration costs limits will be increased by £5,342,000 from £45,912,000 to £51,254,000.

Within the DEL change, the impact on resources and capital are as set out in the following table:

		New DEL
	Change	Voted	Non-voted	Total
Resource	79,720,000	191,030,000	1,343,571,000	1,534,601,000
Capital	98,732,000	50,259,000	130,235,000	180,494,000
Depreciation*	-6,701,000	-4,867,000	-94,447,000	-99,314,000
Total	171,751,000	236,422,000	1,379,359,000	1,615,781,000

Depreciation, which forms part of resource DEL, is excluded from the total DEL since capital DEL includes capital spending and to include depreciation of those assets would lead to double counting.*

The change in the resource element of the DEL arises from increased expenditure offset by increased appropriations in aid of £3,150,000 to the Royal Parks Agency.

Take up of end-year flexibility £85,033,000 in respect of: listed places of worship (£26,000); culture online (£2,160,000); museums, libraries and archives council (£1,000,000); public lending right (£92,000); strategic commissioning (£256,000); DCMS/Wolfson improvement fund (£104,000); school sports co-ordinator project (£3,000,000); English Heritage (£123,000); the royal household (£200,000); non-cash requirements (£13,015,000); tourism (£75,000); and to fund other ongoing projects within NDPBs (£64,836,000), specifically: Imperial War Museum—£2,800,000; National Gallery—£3,450,000; National Museums Liverpool—£2,468,000; Tate Gallery—£13,500,000; British Library—£8,880,000; Arts Council—£14,018,000; Sport England—£7,920,000; UK Sports Council—£4,250,000; English Heritage—£3,000,000; UK Film Council—£4,550,000.

Transfers from other Government Departments of £1,000,000 from DfES in respect of strategic commissioning: museums and galleries education programme and £4,000,000 from DfT in respect of Wembley development costs.

DEFENCE

Supplementary Estimates

The Secretary of State for Defence (Mr. Geoffrey Hoon): Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the Ministry of Defence departmental expenditure limits will be increased by £476,763,000 from £29,868,175,000 to £30,344,938,000. Within the DEL change, the impact on resources and capital are as set out in the following table:

			New DEL
	Change	Voted	Non-voted	Total
Resource	364,763	31,393,762	561,434	31,955,196
Capital	112,000	6,437,780	1,220	6,439,000
Depreciation*		-7,879,258	-170,000	-8,049,258
Total	476,763	29,952,284	392,654	30,344,938

*Depreciation, which forms part of resource DEL, is excluded from the total DEL since capital DEL includes capital spending and to include depreciation of those assets would lead to double counting.

The change in the resource element of the DEL arises from:

A transfer from Capital DEL to Resource DEL of £350,000,000 as agreed in SR 04.

Transfers totalling £14,750,000 from the Cabinet Office (£10,057,000), the Scottish Executive (£1,112,000), the Welsh Assembly (£611,000), the Department for Culture, Media and Sport (£770,000) and the Department of Trade and Industry (£2,200,000) as their share of the National Meteorological Programme and Weather Warning Service costs under a pan Government agreement.

A transfer of £13,000 from the Department of Work and Pensions as a contribution to the Veteran Agency's helpline.

An increase in Resource Appropriations in Aid of £16,300,000 from receipt of a special dividend from the Hydrographic Office.

The change in the capital element of the DEL arises from:

the take up of end year flexibility of £168,000,000 CDEL; to reflect the balance sheet capitalisation of £335,000,000 for MOD main building, Whitehall, following a PFI refurbishment;

a transfer from Capital DEL to Resource DEL of £350,000,000 as agreed in SR04; to recognise a Capital DEL reduction of £41 million in RfR1, for the advanced purchase of programmed equipment as UORs, under RfR2 in 2003–04.

The changes to CDEL and RDEL will lead to an increased net cash requirement of £141,763,000.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Supplementary Estimates

The Minister for Rural Affairs and Local Environmental Quality (Alun Michael): Subject to Parliamentary approval of any necessary Supplementary Estimate, the Department for Environment Food and Rural Affairs DEL will be increased by £40,704,000 from £3,137,743,000 to £3,178,447,000 and the administration costs limits will be increased by £18,078,000 from £339,494,000 to £357,572,000. Within the DEL change, the impact on resources and capital are as set out in the following table:

£000

	Change	New DEL Voted	New DEL Non-voted	Total
Resource	66,160	2,387,335	681,790	3,069,125
Capital	-25,456	204,192	103,980	308,172

Total	40,704	2,489,794	688,653	3,178,447

Depreciation, which forms part of resource DEL, is excluded from the total DEL since capital DEL includes capital spending and to include depreciation of those assets would lead to double counting.*

The change in the resource element of the DEL arises from (i) a take up of end-year flexibility of £119,098,000 programme resources and £15,396,000 administration resources as set out in the public expenditure 2003–04 provisional outturn paper (Cm 6293); (ii) take up of £6,189,000 administration resources from the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister for accommodation costs relating to Ashdown House; (iii) re-classification of £25,456,000 of Environment Agency's non-voted capital as non-voted resource, to reflect the correct accounting treatment of these funds; (iv) take up of £4,400,000 of programme resources from the efficiency challenge fund as set out in the spending review for 2004; (v) take up of £258,000 of programme resources from the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister for the Cleaner, Safer, Greener Communities programme; (vi) a transfer of £3,999,000 administration resources to ODPM for Government Offices running costs; (vii) take up of £350,000 programme resources from DTI for the Cereal Industry Forum; (viii) take up £193,000 administration resources and £520,000 programme resources from ODPM, Home Office, Department for Transport, and the Scottish Executive, for the Government Decontamination and Recovery Scheme; (ix) take up of £49,000 administration resources from the Department for Transport for the Coast Protection Act; (x) take up of £125,000 administration resources each from Department for Transport and ODPM for Ashdown House telephony charges; (xi) transfer of £3,000,000 programme resources to the National Forestry Commission to fund increased applications and proportion of contracts being implemented under the Woodland Grants scheme; (xii) transfer of £400,000 programme resources to the National Forestry Commission to enable access to its estates under the Countryside Rights of Way Act; (xiii) transfer of £3,600,000 programme resources to the Department for Constitutional Affairs for implementation of the Obstructions to Rights of Way section of the Countryside Rights of Way Act; (xiv) surrender £95,000,000 of non-voted DEL for annual payments for the Environment Agency pension scheme, as under resource accounting a provision has been opened for the full liability of the scheme.

The change in the capital element of the DEL arises from: (i) reclassification of £25,456,000 of Environment Agency's non-voted capital as non-voted resource, to reflect the correct accounting treatment of these funds.

The increases are offsetting inter-departmental transfers and take-up of end-year flexibility, and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Supplementary Estimates

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (Mr. Ben Bradshaw): Subject to parliamentary approval of any necessary supplementary estimate, the Forestry Commission's DEL will be increased by £8,743,000 from £78,391,000 to £87,134,000. Within the DEL change, the impact on resources and capital are as set out in the following table:

£'000

	Change	New DEL Voted	New DEL Non-voted	Total
Resource	8,881	85,021	3,231	88,252

Depreciation*	-252	-1,322	-	-1,322
Total	8,743	84,603	2,531	87,134

*Depreciation, which forms part of resource DEL, is excluded from the total DEL since capital DEL includes capital spending and to include depreciation of those assets would lead to double counting.

The change in the resource element of the DEL arises from the take up of £5,481,000 end of year flexibility to meet woodland grant scheme and VAT commitments and also a transfer of £3,400,000 from Department of Environment, Food and Rural Affairs. Of this £3,000,000 will fund woodland grants and the remaining £400,000 is to fund the dedication of the freehold element of the public estate for public access.

The change in the capital element of the DEL arises from the take up of £114,000 end of year flexibility that will be used for the purchase of office machinery and equipment.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Supplementary Estimates

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (Mr. Bill Rammell)): Subject to parliamentary approval of any necessary supplementary estimate, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office departmental expenditure limit (DEL) will be increased by £266,923,000 from £1,616,521,000 to £1,883,444,000 and the administration costs limit will be increased by £4,665,000 from £788,341,000 to £793,006,000. Within the DEL change, the impact on resources and capital are as set out in the following table:

			New DEL

XIII. A PES transfer to the Cabinet Office of £500,000 for the countries at risk of instability (CRI) pilot.

The change in the capital element of the DEL arises from:

I. Reserve claim of £14,500,000 for funds to implement changes recommended by the review of FCO security.

II. Take up of full entitlement to end year flexibility (EYF) of £13,652,000 relating to the 2003–04 underspends.

Butler Review

The Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (Mr. Jack Straw): My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister told the House in his statements on 14 July, Official Report, column 143 and 20 July, Official Report, column 195, that the Government fully accept the conclusions of Lord Butler's review of intelligence on weapons of mass destruction. A detailed programme of work is now underway to take forward work dealing with those conclusions.

As part of this work, Sir David Omand, the Security and Intelligence Co-ordinator, has established a committee of senior officials that will meet regularly to oversee the various strands of work under-way to implement the recommendations of the Butler review.

In addition, a dedicated study team led by a senior FCO official is considering Lord Butler's specific recommendations relating to the role, size and shape of the central assessments staff and wider analytical support the intelligence community receives. The study team will present its final report in the new year.

The Intelligence and Security Committee is being kept informed of the progress of this work.

HEALTH

Supplementary Estimates

The Secretary of State for Health (Dr. John Reid): Subject to the necessary supplementary estimate, the Department of Health's element of the departmental expenditure limit (DEL) will be increased by £757,138,000 from £71,541,721,000 to £72,298,859,000 and the administration cost limit will be increased by £7,194,000 from £250,776,000 to £257,970,000. A net transfer to the Scottish Executive of £2,777,000 for out of area treatments and health publicity material, offset by a contribution for the high security infectious disease unit. A transfer to the National Assembly for Wales of £11,160,000 for out of area treatments and health publicity material. A transfer from the Office of National Statistics of £200,000 (£195,000 administration costs) for a contribution to the data development work of the neighbourhood statistics programme. A transfer to the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister of £10,000 for older people's services.

The administration cost limit has increased by £7,194,000 from £250,776,000 to £257,970,000 as detailed above.

The changes to the Food Standards Agency resource element of the departmental expenditure limit arise from a claim for end year flexibility of £12,803,000 (£9,444,000 programme and £3,359,000 administration costs) to fund on-going FSA activity including a publicity campaign to raise salt awareness with consumers and the transfer of £2,700,000 from the FSA to the Meat Hygiene Service, an executive agency of the FSA.

The Food Standards Agency (FSA) administration cost limit has increased by £3,359,000 from £50,335,000 to £53,694,000 as a result of incorporating administration cost EYF.

Medicines Act Advisory Committees

The Minister of State, Department of Health (Ms Rosie Winterton): My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Department of Health (Lord Warner) made the following written ministerial statement on 11 November 2004.

Following a public consultation earlier this year on proposals to restructure the advisory committees laid down in the Medicines Act 1968, I am pleased to inform the House of the new structure that the Government have decided to put in place. I am also informing the House of proposals to revise the code of practice on interests that will be applied to them.

In summary, the new advisory committee structure will comprise:

> a new commission that amalgamates the responsibilities of the present medicines commission and the committee on safety of medicines and will advise Ministers direct on regulatory matters associated with medicines for human use;
> a number of Section 4 committees which will be able to advise Ministers direct on issues for which they are responsible; > sub-committees and expert advisory groups (EAGs);
> a list of experts on whom the commission and the other committees and groups can call for advice;
> lay patient representatives on each of the committees, sub-committees and groups.

The new structure will closely align the advisory bodies established under the Medicines Act with the structures being established in the European medicines regulatory system. This will allow the Department's medicines and healthcare products regulatory agency (MHRA) to continue to play a highly effective role in that system. There will be greater public and patient involvement in the regulatory process that will strengthen the agency's ability to take account of the public interest. As patients become increasingly knowledgeable about healthcare we want to ensure that there is a means to enable them to advise on the safety and efficacy of their medicines.

Today a public consultation is being launched on proposals to revise the code of practice on interests that applies to chairmen and members of the advisory bodies established under the 1968 Medicines Act. This is part of a wider programme of restructuring the advisory bodies that advise Ministers on matters relating to the Act, the exercise of powers under it and otherwise relating to human and veterinary medicines.

These proposals will also provide the means to comply with new EU legislation dealing with the financial and other interests of experts concerned with the authorisation and surveillance of medicinal products. Indeed our proposals go further than the requirements set out in the EU legislation.

The proposals cover the financial and non-financial interests of the chairmen and members of the new commission, the Section 4 Committees established under the Medicines Act (except the British Pharmacopoeia Commission), the sub committees and expert advisory committee and any experts co-opted onto the committees. We are also proposing that chairmen and members must declare interests of immediate family of which they are aware, and any other matter that may affect, or may reasonably be perceived as affecting, their impartiality.

A wide range of bodies, representing patients, industry and healthcare professionals is being consulted. I am placing a copy of the consultation document—LX316—in the Library, together with today's press release announcing these new measures. The consultation document can also be obtained from the MHRA website.

The Government are committed to ensuring that the MHRA operates in a transparent and open way. Because medicines form such an essential component of effective healthcare delivery, we are also committed to ensuring that patients and the public have an effective role to play in the regulatory process.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Supplementary Estimates

The Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. David Blunkett): Plans of changes to the departmental expenditure limit and administrative cost limit for 2004–05.

Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the Home Office's departmental expenditure limits for 2004–05 will be increased by £425,962,000 from £12,907,509,000 to £13,333,471,000 and the administration costs limits will be increased by £123,687,000 from £3,496,679,000 to £3,620,366,000. Within the DEL change, the impact on resources and capital are as set out in the following table:

			New DEL
	Change	Voted	Non-voted	Total
Resource	201,802	10,598,506	1,740,337	12,338,843
Capital	200,175	956,335	246,405	1,202,740

NORTHERN IRELAND

Supplementary Estimates

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (Mr. Paul Murphy): Subject to parliamentary approval the Northern Ireland Office (NIO) will be taking a 2004–05 winter supplementary estimate. The effect this will have is to increase the NIO's DEL by £29,789,000 from £1,206,401,000 to £1,236,190,000. Within the DEL change, the impact on resources and capital are as set out in the following table:

Resources				Capital
Change	New DEL	Of which: voted	Non-voted	Change	New DEL	Of which: voted	Non-voted
3,981	1,153,454	333,295	820,808	25,808	82,736	35,661	47,075

The change in the resource element of the DEL by £3,981,000 arises from the draw-down of £3,996,000 end year flexibility and the surrender of a PES transfer of £15,000 administration to security and intelligence agencies, to contribute towards administrative funding.

The extra resource costs cover a range of areas within the Department such as prisons, the Bloody Sunday inquiry, forensic science, central administration and the police service.

The change in the capital element of the DEL arises from the draw-down of £25,808,000 end year flexibility.

The extra capital costs cover a range of areas within the Department such as central administration, criminal justice and prisons.

PRIME MINISTER

Supplementary Estimates

The Prime Minister (Mr. Tony Blair): Subject to parliamentary approval of any necessary supplementary estimate, the Security and Intelligence Agencies' departmental expenditure limit (DEL) will be increased by £37,811,000 from £1,274,329,000 to £1,312,140,000 and the administration costs limits will be increased by £18,787,000 from £584,730,000 to £603,517,000. Within the DEL change, the impact on resources and capital are as set out in the table:

£'000

		New DEL
	Change	Voted	Non-voted	Total
Resource	25,750,000	1,122,050,000	15,450,000	1,137,500,000
Capital	12,061,000	190,062,000	6,000,000	196,062,000
Depreciation*	-	140,967,000	-	140,967,000
Total	37,811,000	1,453,079,000	21,450,000	1,474,529,000

* Depreciation, which forms part of resource DEL, is excluded from the total DEL since capital DEL includes capital spending and to include depreciation of those assets would lead to double counting.

The change in the resource element of the DEL arises from:

1. The take up of end of year flexibility of £22, 672,000.

2. A transfer of £3,033,000 from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office for conflict prevention.

3. A transfer of £30,000 from the Home Office for funding a Serious Crime project.

4. A transfer of £15,000 from the Northern Ireland Office to contribute towards administrative funding.

The change in the capital element of the DEL arises from:

1. The take up of end of year flexibility of £12,061,000.

2. A further increase in capital of £5,000. This is offset by an increase in non-operating appropriations in aid of £5,000.

SCOTLAND

Supplementary Estimates

The Secretary of State for Scotland (Mr. Alistair Darling): Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, the Scotland departmental expenditure limit (DEL) will be increased by £428,550,000 from £21,575,971,000 to £22,004,521,000.

The DEL increase takes account of the following routine adjustments to the Scottish Executive provision: the take-up of end-year flexibility (EYF) by the Scottish Executive amounting to £500,000,000.

The DEL increase also includes the following transfers between the Scottish Executive and other Government Departments, amounting to a net decrease of £71,450,000. These are:

a transfer of £10,033,000 from the Home Office;

net transfers of £2,777,000 from the Department of Health;

a transfer of £1,059,000 from the Department for Work and Pensions;

a transfer of £100,000 from the Department for Constitutional Affairs;

net transfers of £83,948,000 to HM Treasury;

a transfer of £ 1,112,000 to the Ministry of Defence;

a transfer of £250,000 to the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs; and a transfer of £109,000 to the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister.

The increases will be offset by interdepartmental transfers as detailed above or charged to the DEL reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Supplementary Estimates

The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (Ms Patricia Hewitt): Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the Department of Trade and Industry's DEL will be increased by £527,542,000 from £4,966,261,000 to £5,493,803,000 and the administration costs limit will be increased by £7,958,000 from £428,847,000 to £436,805,000.

Within the DEL change, the impact on resources and capital is as set out in the following table:

		New DEL
	Change	Voted	Non-voted	Total
Resource	486,509	1,049,695	4,245,715	5,295,410
Capital	41,033	-94,664	293,057	198,393
Depreciation*	0	-20,841	-93,159	-114,000
Total	527,542	934,190	4,445,613	5,379,803

*Depreciation, which forms part of resource DEL, is excluded from the total DEL since capital DEL includes capital spending and to include depreciation of those assets would lead to double counting.

The change in the resource element of the DEL (all RfR1) arises from:

(i) utilisation of £10,210,000 from the unused balance of the Department's end-year flexibility entitlement in respect of the Rover Task Force;

(ii) utilisation of £500,000 from the unused balance of the Department's end-year flexibility entitlement in respect of the roll out of Consumer Direct;

(iii) utilisation of £500,000 from the unused balance of the Department's end-year flexibility entitlement in respect of emergency planning related to security of energy supply;

(iv) utilisation of £2,000,000 from the unused balance of the Department's end-year flexibility entitlement in respect of business links support to start-up businesses;

(v) utilisation of £75,000,000 from the unused balance of the Department's end-year flexibility entitlement in respect of modernisation of the Post Office Network;

(vi) utilisation of £5,800,000 from the unused balance of the Department's end-year flexibility entitlement in respect of launch/delivery and evidence gathering for business support products;

(vii) utilisation of £700,000 from the unused balance of the Department's end-year flexibility entitlement in respect of establishment of the Single Equality Body;

(viii) utilisation of £3,000,000 from the unused balance of the Department's end-year flexibility entitlement for external financial and legal advisers in relation to British Energy;

(ix) utilisation of £1,800,000 from the unused balance of the Department's end-year flexibility entitlement in respect of UNITAS Release 2;

(x) utilisation of £4,000,000 resource and £2,000,000 capital grants from the unused balance of the Department's end-year flexibility entitlement in respect of University Innovation Centres;

(xi) utilisation of £5,000,000 from the unused balance of the Department's end-year flexibility entitlement in respect of the manufacturing package;

(xii) utilisation of £20,000,000 from the unused balance of the Department's end-year flexibility entitlement in respect of capital grants for investment aid to the Coal Industry;

(xiii) utilisation of £900,000 from the unused balance of the Department's end-year flexibility entitlement in respect of R&D related to offshore wind farms and strategic environment assessment;

(xiv) utilisation of £2,000,000 from the unused balance of the Department's end-year flexibility entitlement in respect of the financial reporting council;

(xv) utilisation of £268,000 from the unused balance of Ofcom's end-year flexibility entitlement;

(xvi) utilisation of £962,000 from the unused balance of Ofcom's Departmental unallocated provision;

(xvii) a transfer of £17,000 from the Cabinet Office in respect of the senior salaries pay review body;

(xviii) a transfer of £450,000 from the Department for Education and Skills in respect of the National Council for Graduate Entrepreneurship;

(xix) a transfer of £350,000 to the Department for Constitutional Affairs in respect of the Civil Partnership Bill;

(xx) a transfer of £2,200,000 to the Ministry of Defence in respect of the National Meteorological Programme and Severe Weather Warning Service;

(xxi) utilisation of £10,800,000 from the Efficiency Challenge Fund in respect of the accommodation strategy and the Pay and Workforce Strategy;

(xxii) utilisation of £6,500,000 from the Performance and Innovation Fund in respect of renewable energy;

(xxiii) reclassification of £2,000 from voted expenditure to non-voted expenditure by the Regional Development Agencies in relation to the Pan Government Agreement for Supply of Ordnance Survey Data;

(xxiv) reclassification of £11,000,000 from voted expenditure to non-voted expenditure, to reflect funding of Enterprise Fund capital grants via Regional Development Agencies;

(xxv) reclassification of £271,000 from voted expenditure to non-voted expenditure, to reflect the funding of Smart and Enterprise Grant Teams and Business link regional teams co-location costs, via Regional Development Agencies;

(xxvi) reclassification of £638,000 from voted expenditure to non-voted expenditure, to reflect the delivery of Enterprise Fund grants in the regions;

(xxvii) an increase of £1,010,000 in the non-voted expenditure of Postwatch accompanied by an equivalent increase in voted receipts;

(xxviii) a classification change of £17,683,000 in respect of the National Measurement System Private Finance Initiative.

Also within the change to resource DEL (all RfR1), the changes to administration costs limit are:

(i) utilisation of £1,310,000 from the unused balance of the Department's end-year flexibility entitlement in relation to the accommodation strategy;

(ii) utilisation of £2,530,000 from the unused balance of the Department's end-year flexibility entitlement in respect of UK Trade and Investment administration;

(iii) utilisation of £452,000 from the unused balance of the Department's end-year flexibility entitlement in relation to the Insolvency Service Invest to save project;

(iv) a transfer of £2,585,000 from the Cabinet Office in respect of a Machinery of Government change for the Shareholder Executive;

(v) a transfer of £17,000 from the Department for Constitutional Affairs for the Senior Salaries Pay Review Body;

(vi) a transfer of £436,000 to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in relation to "Netting off" procedures and UK Trade and Investment E-business;

(vii) implementation of an agreed virement from programme to administration of £1,500,000 in respect of the Liabilities Management Authority.

Non-voted

There is also utilisation of £185,000,000 from the unused balance of the Department's end-year flexibility entitlement in respect of payments in relation to British Energy liabilities, an increase of £77,169,000 to reflect the transfer of non-voted, non-cash RDA budgets from the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister, utilisation of £300,000 from the unused balance of the Department's End-Year Flexibility entitlement for non-voted expenditure of the Equal Opportunities Commission, and utilisation of £2,400,000 resource and £69,642,000 capital grants from the unused balance of the Department's End-Year Flexibility entitlement for non-voted expenditure of the Regional Development Agencies.

Office of the Deputy Prime Minister Main Estimate

There is also a transfer of £22,000,000 to the Department for Work and Pensions in relation to European Regional Development Fund expenditure, in repayment of the Department's overspend on this activity in 2003–04 that was funded by the Department for Work and Pensions.

The change in the capital element of the DEL (all RfR1) arises from:

(i) utilisation of £444,000 from the unused balance of the Department's End-Year Flexibility entitlement for Rover Task Force;

(ii) utilisation of £1,600,000 from the unused balance of the Department's End-Year Flexibility entitlement for implementation of the Parental Leave Regulations;

(iii) utilisation of £15,500,000 from the unused balance of the Department's end-year flexibility entitlement for support for the National Measurement System;

(vii) utilisation of £25,000 from the unused balance of Ofcom's Departmental unallocated provision;

(viii) utilisation of £3,500,000 from the Performance and Innovation Fund in respect of renewable energy.

Non-voted

There is also utilisation of £2,640,000 from the unused balance of the Department's end-year flexibility entitlement for non-voted expenditure by Regional Development Agencies.

Supplementary Estimates

The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (Ms Patricia Hewitt): Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, UK Trade & Investment's Resource DEL will be increased by £1,800,000 from £97,287,000 to £99,087,000. Within the DEL change, the impact on resources and capital are set out in the following table:

			New DEL
	Change	Voted	Non-voted	Total
Resource	1,800	99,087	0	99,087
Capital	0	248	0	248
Depreciation*	0	-187	0	-187
Total	1,800	99,148	0	99,148

*Depreciation, which forms part of resource DEL, is excluded from the total DEL since capital DEL includes capital spending and to include depreciation of those assets would lead to double counting.

The change in the resource element of the DEL arises from:

i) utilisation of £2,000,000 from the unused balance of the Department's end-year flexibility entitlement to meet increased requirement for resources particularly in the regions and on inward investment.

ii) a transfer of resources to the Department of Transport of £200,000 in respect of the travel costs for the special representative for International Trade and Investment.

Supplementary Estimates

The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (Ms Patricia Hewitt): The Postal Services Commission capital DEL will by increased by £135,000 from £150,000 to £285,000. Within the DEL change, the impact on resources and capital are as set out in the following table:

£'000

			New DEL
	Change	Voted	Non-voted	Total
Resource	0	1	0	1
Capital	135	150	135	285
Depreciation*	0	-400	0	-400
Total	135	-249	135	-114

*Depreciation, which forms part of resource DEL, is excluded from the total DEL since capital DEL includes capital spending and to include depreciation of those assets would lead to double counting.

The change in the capital element of the DEL arises from draw-down of end-year flexibility of £135,000 to fund investment of IT.

There is no change to the resource element of the DEL.

Supplementary Estimates

The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (Ms Patricia Hewitt): Subject to parliamentary approval of any necessary supplementary estimate, the Office of Gas and Electricity Markets Net Cash Requirement will be increased by 5,771,000 from £1,785,000 to £7,556,000. The administration costs limits and DEL will remain unchanged. The impact on resources and capital are as set out in the following table:

£'000

			New DEL
	Change	Voted	Non-voted	Total
Resource		701,000	-	701,000
Capital		950,000	-	950,000
Depreciation*		-1,250,000	-	-1,250,000
Total	NIL	401,000	-	401,000

*Depreciation, which forms part of resource DEL, is excluded from the total DEL since capital DEL includes capital spending and to include depreciation of those assets would lead to double counting.

The increased net cash requirement arises from a cash payout in July 2004 to surrender an onerous building lease contract. There is no change in the administration cost or DEL because the financial impact in the form of a provision was taken in a previous financial year.

TRANSPORT

Supplementary Estimates

The Secretary of State for Transport (Mr Alistair Darling): Subject to parliamentary approval of any necessary supplementary estimate, the Department for Transport DEL for 2004–05 will be increased by £192,077,000 from £10,751,785,000 to £10,943,862,000 and the administration costs limits will be decreased by £12,843,000 from £228,327,000 to £215,484,000. Within the DEL change, the impact on resources and capital are as set out in the following table:

£'000

			New DEL
	Change	Voted	Non-voted	Total
Resource	313,179	4,245,683	3,518,593	7,764,276
Capital	-126,297	2,068,596	1,457,113	3,525,709
Depreciation*	5,195	-329,801	-16,322	-346,123
Total	192,077	5,984,478	4,959,384	10,943,862

*Depreciation, which forms part of resource DEL, is excluded from the total DEL since capital DEL includes capital spending and to include depreciation of those assets would lead to double counting.

The £247,422,000 increase in the voted resource element of the DEL arises from:

(i) take up of £106,311,000 end year flexibility, comprising:

(a) £74,609,000 for the London and Continental Railways maintenance depot at temple Mills;

(b) £4,500,000 for Rail Accident Investigation Branch costs;

(c) £10,328,000 for the Maritime and Coastguard Agency;

(d) £11,500,000 for the Highways Agency Dartford Crossing Maintenance Fund;

(e) £2,500,000 for services purchased by the central department from the Vehicle and Operator Services Agency;

(f) £356,000 for the Mobility and Inclusion Unit in respect of the Forum of Mobility Centre's e-business systems; and

(g) £2,518,000 for subsequent transfer to Department for Culture, Media and Sport in respect of the provision of improved public transport facilities for Wembley National Stadium.

(ii) a net transfer of £3,887,000 to other Government Departments, comprising:

(a) £4,000,000 to the Department for Culture, Media and Sport in respect of Wembley National Stadium (including the £2,518,000 funded from end year flexibility);

(b) £344,000 to the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs in respect of ports and telephony services (administration costs) (£174,000) and programme costs in respect of government decontamination and recovery services (£170,000); partly offset by

(c) £200,000 from UK Trade and Investment in respect of travel costs for the Special Representative of International Trade and Investment;

(d) £100,000 from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office for the Hamilton project;

(e) £77,000 from the Department for Work and Pensions (Health and Safety Executive) in respect of central administration costs;

(f) a net transfer of £46,000 from the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister in respect of the Maritime and Coastguard Agency for counselling and support services (£30,000); the Highways Agency (administration costs) (£45,000); Vehicle Certification Agency programme costs (£3,000); partly offset by a net transfer in respect of central administration costs (£32,000); and

(g) £34,000 from the Office of National Statistics in respect of central administration costs.

(iii) a net transfer from non-voted resource provision of £1,177,000 comprising:

(a) a reclassification of £2,750,000 to voted Central Administration from the non voted Departmental Unallocated Provision;

(b) a reclassification of £1,273,000 to voted Highways Agency administration from the non voted Departmental Unallocated Provision; partly offset by

(c) £1,546,000 transfer from Central Administration to non voted provision for the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency trading fund; and

(d) £1,300,000 transfer to non voted provision for the British Transport Police Authority.

(iv) a net transfer from non-voted capital provision of £143,821,000 comprising:

(a) £133,821,000 to fund the maintenance depot at Temple Mills, Northern Ticket Hall Kings Cross and St Pancras works; and

(b) £10,000,000 for the extension of the National Cycle network in schools.

(v) £12,793,000 reclassification of front line staff (administration costs to programme) for the Maritime and Coastguard Agency (£10,263,000), Air Accident Investigation Branch (£2,184,000) and Radioactive Materials Transport (£346,000).

(vi) With the agreement of HM Treasury, the expenditure of the Vehicle Certification Agency has been reclassified as programme. This is in line with the recommendations made by Sir Peter Gershon in his Efficiency Review that the application of administration costs limits should not result in cuts to outputs of front-line services undertaken by civil servants. The Department for Transport therefore no longer has a net administration costs limit.

Within the non-voted resource element of the DEL, there has been an increase of £65,757,000 comprising:

(i) take up of £70,289,000 end year flexibility, comprising:

(a) £66,000,000 for the Strategic Rail Authority; and

(b) £4,289,000 for the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency trading fund;

(ii) a net transfer of £1,177,000 to voted resource; and

(iii) a net transfer of £3,355,000 to non voted capital comprising:

(a) £3,925,000 for the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency trading fund: partially offset by

(b) £570,000 to fund Cycle Parking at Railways project.

As a result of the above changes to the resource element of the DEL there has been a net decrease of £12,843,000 in the gross administration costs limit, from £228,327,000 to £215,484,000.

The increase of £11,216,000 in the voted capital element of the DEL arises from:

(i) a take up of £10,299,000 end year flexibility comprising:

(a) £7,999,000 in respect of Home Zones' Challenge Fund project; and

(b) £2,300,000 for the Maritime and Coastguard Agency in respect of the Portland Helicopter Hangar;

(ii) a transfer of £1,517,000 from the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister for Central Administration; partially offset by

(iii) a transfer of £600,000 to non voted capital provision for the British Transport Police Authority;

The net decrease of £137,513,000 in the non-voted capital element of the DEL arises from:

(a) Take up of £2,353,000 end year flexibility for the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency trading fund;

(b) A transfer of £600,000 from voted capital;

(c) A transfer of £143,821,000 to voted resource; and

(d) A net transfer of £3,355,000 from non voted resource.

The increases will be offset by inter-departmental transfers or charged to the DEL Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Eurostar Maintenance Facility

The Minister of State, Department for Transport (Mr. Tony McNulty): The Department has agreed with London & Continental Railways to bring forward the construction of a Eurostar maintenance depot on existing railway lands at Temple Mills in east London. A depot at Temple Mills has always been envisaged as part of the final plan for the Channel Tunnel Rail Link (CTRL) and bringing it forward will provide for a much more efficient operation of the complete CTRL and the Eurostar trainsets. This decision will enable the new depot to be provided in time for commencement of Eurostar services on CTRL Section 2 in 2007.

Original plans envisaged Eurostar trains gaining access from St Pancras to the existing North Pole International depot via the North London Line, but further investigation indicated that this would require costly and disruptive infrastructure works and significantly reduce capacity on what is already a congested line. Implementing the Temple Mills depot straightaway therefore provides a more cost-effective overall solution.

The Department has agreed in principle with London & Continental Railways to provide the funding for the depot as a Government change to the CTRL development agreement at a total cost not exceeding £402 million including land acquisition and relocation costs, subject to agreement of the detailed financial and contractual conditions.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Supplementary Estimates

The Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (Alan Johnson): Subject to parliamentary approval of any necessary supplementary estimate, the Department for Work and Pensions departmental expenditure limit (DEL) will be increased by £274,207,000 from £8,222,834,000 to £8,497,041,000 and the administration costs limits will be increased by £92,659,000 from £5,903,307,000 to £5,995,966,000. Within the DEL change, the impact on resources and capital are as set out in the following table:

£000

		New DEL
	Change	Voted	Non-voted	Total
Resource	220,368	6,934,766	1,389,572	8,324,338
Capital	50,463	266,645	24,002	290,647
Depreciation*	3,376	-117,230	-714	-117,944
Total	274,207	7,084,181	1,412,860	8,497,041

*Depreciation, which forms part of resource DEL, is excluded from the total DEL since capital DEL includes capital spending and to include depreciation of those assets would lead to double counting.

The change in the resource element of the DEL arises from:

i. an increase in provision due to additional spending of £542,000 (administration costs) by the Rent Service (take up of End Year Flexibility);

ii. an increase in provision due to additional spending of £87,000,000 (administration costs) by Working Age (take up of End Year Flexibility);

iii. an increase in provision due to additional spending of £10,000,000 (other current) on Employment Programmes (take up of End Year Flexibility);

iv. an increase in provision due to additional spending of £48,000,000 (grants) on Housing and Council Tax Benefit administration grants (take up of End Year Flexibility);

v. an increase in provision due to additional spending of £5,798,000 (administration costs) by the Health and Safety Executive (take up of End Year Flexibility);

vi. an increase in provision of £23,000,000 (other current) as a result of a transfer from the Department for Education and Skills for Basic Skills programmes;

vii. an increase in provision of £9,200,000 (grants) as a result of a transfer from the Welsh Assembly for expenditure on Administration Subsidy;

viii. a decrease in provision of £28,000 (other current) as a result of a transfer to the Department for Constitutional Affairs for Work Based Learning for Adults in Wales;

ix. a decrease in provision of £5,659,000 (other current) as a result of transfers to the Department for Education and Skills (£4,416,000), the Scottish Executive (£1,059,000), and the Welsh Assembly (£184,000) for Sure Start;

x. a decrease in provision of £87,000 (other current) as a result of a transfer to the Department for Education and Skills for evaluation of the Neighbourhood Nursery Initiative;

xi. a decrease in provision of £77,000 (administration costs) as a result of a transfer to the Department for Transport due to a transfer of posts in relation to the Carriage of Dangerous Goods;

xii. a transfer of provision of £50,000,000 from resource in Section B to capital in Section A in connection with the roll-out of Job Centre Plus; xiii. a decrease in provision of £50,000 (administration costs) as a result of a transfer to the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister for a Local Government Association Best Practice Planning Event;

RfR3

RfR4

xiv. a decrease in provision of £13,000 (administration costs) as a result of a transfer of funding to the Ministry of Defence for the Veterans' Agency Helpline;

RfR6

xv. an increase in provision of £50,000,000 (other current) due to the setting up of an Efficiency Challenge Fund as provided for in the 2004 Spending Review;

xvi. an increase in provision of £20,800,000 (grants) in Section C with a corresponding increase in appropriations in aid in Section F due to a transfer from the Department of Culture, Media and Sport in connection with European Social Fund expenditure;

xvii. an increase in provision of £22,000,000 (grants) in Section C with a corresponding increase in appropriations in aid in Section F due to a transfer from the Department of Trade and Industry in connection with European Social Fund expenditure;

xviii. a reduction in provision of £58,000 (administration costs) due to a transfer to the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister in respect of Government Office work for the European Social Fund.

The change in the capital element of the DEL arises from:

RfR2

xix. an increase in provision of £463,000 due to additional spending by the Rent Service (take up of End Year Flexibility);

xx. a transfer of provision of £50,000,000 from resource (other current) in Section B to capital in Section A in connection with the roll-out of Job Centre Plus.

Administration Costs

The movement in the Administration Cost limit arises from those items noted above as affecting administration costs plus the following items which are neutral in terms of overall resource DEL but which impact the Administration Cost limit:

xxi. a transfer of £295,000 from administration to other current in respect of the Health and Safety Executive;

xxii. a transfer of £70,000 from administration to other current (non-voted) for the Centre for Policy on Ageing;

xxiii. a transfer of £ 118,000 from administration to other current (non-voted) for the Disability Rights Commission.

Departmental Unallocated Provision (DUP)

Additionally there are the following draw downs from the DUP which are neutral in overall DEL terms:

xxiv. £2,400,000 into RfR3 for additional costs associated with the Financial Assistance Scheme and the Pension Credit Marketing Campaign;

xxv. £12,143,000 into RfR6 for expenditure associated with the Joint International Unit; xxvi. £49,088,000 to meet increased expenditure in RfR6 on the Estates budget.

CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

Supplementary Estimates

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Constitutional Affairs (Mr. Christopher Leslie): Subject to parliamentary approval of any necessary supplementary estimate, the Department for Constitutional Affairs, Northern Ireland Court Service and national archives: Public Records Office and Historical Manuscripts Commission DEL will be increased by £280,221,000 from £3,256,319,000 to £3,536,540,000 and the administration costs limit will be increased by £116,908,000 from £886,273,000 to £1,003,181,000. Within the DEL change, the impact on resources and capital are as set out in the following table:

			New DEL
	Change	Voted	Non-voted	Total
Resource	201,429,000	1,330,463,000	2,107,386,000	3,437,849,000
Capital	76,792,000	167,973,000	11,000,000	178,973,000
Depreciation*	2,000,000	-78,609,000	-1,673,000	-80,282,000
Total	280,221,000	1,419,827,000	2,116,713,000	3,536,540,000

*Depreciation, which forms part of resource DEL, is excluded from the total DEL since capital DEL includes capital spending and to include depreciation of those assets would lead to double counting.

The change in the resource element of the Department of Constitutional Affairs DEL arises from:

RfR1

Take-up of DEL end-year flexibility:

£31,790,000 administration costs as set out in the public expenditure outturn White Paper; £27,200,000 administration costs in relation to receipts for the sale of Birmingham Priory Courts; £343,000 administration costs in relation to the online forms finance-invest to save budget (ISB) 387; £201,000 resources in the form of grants to the Legal Services Commission in relation to the invest to save budget (ISB) project award—legal services to prisoners; £167,000 resources in the form of grants to Legal Services Commission in relation to the ISB award—live and interactive (project Eagle); £10,000 administration costs in relation to the invest to save budget project 384 computer enquiry system; £3,304,000 administration costs, £2,990,000 programme costs, in relation to the CJS Reserve; £7,555,000 administration costs, £6,574,000 programme costs in relation to the single asylum fund (SAF) for 2004–05;

Transfers from Central HM Treasury funds:

£15,000,000 administration costs from the in relation to the single asylum fund (SAF) for 2004–05 SR02 uplift; £6,000,000 programme costs in relation to election pilots; £2,000 resources in the form of grant to Legal Services Commission in relation to the ISB award—live and interactive (project Eagle) ref: 297;

CJS Reserve

£23,580,000 administration costs and £24,823,000 programme costs, from Home Office in relation to the CJS reserve;

Single Asylum fund

£2,745,000 administration costs to DCA headquarters, £590,000 administration costs to the Court Service and £23,918,000 programme costs to DCA headquarters from the Home Office in relation to the single asylum fund (SAP);

Transfers from other Government Departments:

£3,900,000 programme costs from the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister to the Court Service in relation to Election Pilots Transfer for Elections Claims Unit (ECU); £3,600,000 resources from the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs to the Court Service in relation to section 53 of the Countryside and Rights of Way Act 2000; £517,000 administration costs from the Department for Education and Skills, and £2,858,000 administration costs to the Court Service in relation to the implementation costs for S.118 of the Adoption and Children Act 2002; £337,000 administration costs from Home Office in relation to the recovered asset incentivisation fund; £330,000 resources from the Department for Education and Skills to Legal Services Commission: administration in relation to the implementation costs for S.118 of the Adoption and Children Act 2002; £330,000 administration costs to DCA headquarters and £20,000 administration costs to the Court Service from the Department of Trade and Industry in relation to the Civil Partnership Bill; £210,000 administration costs from the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister in relation to funding for election claims service level agreement (SLA); £62,000 administration costs from the Ministry of Defence in relation to Naval Courts Martial; £44,000 administration costs in relation to the transfer of the neighbourhood statistics programme (NeSS) admin fund 2004–05 from the Office for National Statistics; £4,000 administration costs from the Home Office and £14,000 programme costs in relation to the Anti Social Behaviour Act part 2—Juvenile County Court pilot;

Transfers to other Government Departments:

£22,000,000 programme costs to the Northern Ireland Court Service in relation to funding the Legal Services Commission in Northern Ireland; £200,000 administration costs to the Office for National Statistics in relation to funding the gender recognition project; £34,000 administration costs to the Northern Ireland Court Service in relation to the Civil Partnership Bill; £17,000 administration costs to the Department of Trade and Industry being contribution to the apportionment of the fees for senior salaries review body (SSRB) members;

RfR3

A transfer to the Wales Office of £490,000 resources from the National Assembly for Wales to cover DCA merger.

The change in the resource element of the Northern Ireland Court Service DEL arises from:

A PES transfer from the Department for Constitutional Affairs of £22,034 in respect of the funding of publicly funded legal services in Northern Ireland (£22,000), expenditure arising from the introduction of the Civil Partnership Bill in Northern Ireland (£34,000) and an adjustment (£10,138) to convert the baseline for publicly funded legal services from a cash to a resource basis.

The change of £2,000,000 in the resource element of the national archives DEL arises from:

Expenditure on the development of digital information systems for the implementation of the Freedom of Information Act and development of online services for the national archives website further to improve access to catalogues and records. The increase sought comprises £2 million end year flexibity draw down and a reduction of £2 million in depreciation provision offset against a £2 million increase in resources DEL. Additionally, to allow the national archives to develop wider market sales operations, a neutral change is sought to allow for £3.4 million of expenditure on events, on wholesale publishing, book purchases and record copying intended for sale through the national archive's retail sales outlets and wholesale distribution channels. This expenditure is offset by additional wider market receipts generated by these retail sales of £3.4 million. The 2004–05 main estimate provided £36.7 million administration cost limit. The winter supplementary estimate requests an increase in the original provision of £2 million, making the new limit £38.7 million.

The change in the capital element of the Department of Constitutional Affairs DEL arises from:

RfR1

Take-up of DEL End Year Flexibility:

£16,115,000 capital costs as set out in the public expenditure outturn White Paper; £30,900,000 capital costs in relation to receipts for the sale of Birmingham Priory Courts; £9,580,000 capital, in relation to the CJS Reserve; £8,400,000 capital in relation to the Capital Modernisation Fund (CMF); £2,000,000 capital costs in relation to the Single Asylum Fund (SAF) for 2004–05;

CJS Reserve

£6,520,000 capital from Home Office in relation to the CJS Reserve;

The change in the capital element of the Northern Ireland Court Service DEL arises from:

The change in the capital element of the DEL arises from the draw down of £2,000 in end year flexibility to fund a programme of major refurbishment and IT related projects.

The change in the capital element of the national archives DEL arises from:

Expenditure on the development of digital information systems for the implementation of the Freedom of Information Act and development of online services for the national archives website to further improve access to catalogues and records. This increase comprises a £1.3 million end-year flexibility draw-down.

DEFENCE

Côte D'Ivoire

The Secretary of State for Defence (Mr. Geoffrey Hoon): In a statement on 11 November 2004, I outlined the military planning that was in hand to support an evacuation of UK nationals from Côte d'Ivoire.

The deteriorating security conditions in Côte d'Ivoire last week subsequently led to an evacuation of UK nationals from the country, following a recommendation by Her Majesty's ambassador to Côte d'Ivoire that he judged this a prudent course of action. This recommendation was formulated after receiving technical military advice from the operational liaison and reconnaissance team, which had deployed on 10 November 2004 to monitor the situation in the region as part of the Ministry of Defence's contingency planning.

The spearhead lead element was initially deployed to a forward mounting base in Accra, Ghana, where the operation was commanded by elements of the UK's joint task force headquarters. The majority of these forces were drawn from the spearhead lead element based on the 1st Battalion Royal Gurkha Rifles, but the operation was supported and enabled by Royal Air Force transport aircraft from RAF Brize Norton and RAF Lyneham. As an additional contingency measure, the landing platform dock HMS Albion was also diverted towards Côte d'Ivoire.

It is indicative of the armed forces' capacity to undertake comprehensive contingency planning, and their flexibility and capability to respond quickly to events, that within 24 hours of receiving a formal request from the Foreign Secretary nearly 300 service personnel were on the ground in Ghana, engaged in preparations for the evacuation.

Between 11 and 13 November 2004, UK forces evacuated some 220 individuals from Abidjan and Yamoussoukro to Ghana, where the Foreign and Commonwealth Office had set up a reception centre to cater for the men, women and children who wished to leave Côte d'Ivoire.

All Service personnel involved in the evacuation operation have now returned to the UK, with the exception of HMS Albion which has returned to normal duties.

The success of this operation is in no small part due to the high degree of co-operation that existed between the deployed forces, Her Majesty's ambassador and his staff in country, and with international partners in the region, in particular Ghana and France.

The successful completion and efficient recovery of our deployed forces is m impressive achievement and one which took place without impact on the UK's enduring commitments across the globe. This is testament to the professionalism of the men and women who serve in the UK armed forces and in particular to those who participated in this operation.

Future Rapid Effect System (FRES)

The Minister of State, Ministry of Defence (Mr. Adam Ingram): I am pleased to announce that the Ministry of Defence has signed a contract with Atkins in respect of the systems house role for the future rapid effect system (FRES).

The Ministry of Defence will be providing strategic direction, with Atkins, who are a major British company in this field, leading a number of key activities designed to inform MOD's major programme decisions during the assessment phase. Atkins' independence from product will enable them to take an objective view of the ideas and technologies that may be applicable to FRES, and marry new approaches to the knowledge that we already have as a result of previous work. Their comprehension of the risks inherent in complex systems of systems integration will be vital in determining feasible solutions. In addition, they will be managing a programme of risk reduction activities, mitigating the risks of certain technologies to determine if they are suitable for FRES. Technologies will only be inserted into FRES when they are sufficiently mature, whether initially or as part of an incremental technology insertion programme. The proactive management of these diverse de-risking activities will be key to achieving a manageable level of risk at the Main Gate investment point.

We will seek maximum appropriate competition during all programme phases, enabling industry to engage at all levels, within the context of our defence industrial policy. We will be transparent and inclusive with industry from the earliest possible stage in terms of the defence industrial policy factors that may affect acquisition decisions. To this end we have published a paper setting out our plans in this respect and identifying constraints where they apply. Understanding the broad factors that are likely to impact those decisions will enable industry to make informed judgments on whether they wish to bid and, if they choose to do so, to ensure that their bids take due account of the declared criteria.

Finally, FRES is a complex programme, with obvious tension between competing demands such as capability, time to delivery and affordability. However, the award of this contract to Atkins provides us with the necessary industrial expertise and realism to examine those competing demands in detail and to make informed decisions in order to achieve the optimum FRES solution.

HEALTH

NHS Research Ethics Committees

The Minister of State, Department of Health (Ms Rosie Winterton): My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under Secretary of State, Lord Warner, announced at the Grand Committee on the Human Tissue Bill on 15 September, column GC432, that he intended to seek independent advice on the operation of the research ethics committee system, including the Central Office for National Health Service Research Ethics Committees.

My noble Friend has asked Michael O'Higgins, a managing partner of PA Consulting Group Ltd., to chair a small ad-hoc group of scientists and lay members. It will undertake a review of the systems that support NHS Research Ethics Committees in England, and make recommendations for further steps to improve their operation, building on changes already under way.

The group will first meet in November and will report to Health Ministers by the end of March 2005. Details of the group's membership and terms of reference can be found on the Department's website www.dh.gov.uk.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Zimbabwe

The Minister for Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Desmond Browne): In January 2002 the Home Secretary announced the temporary suspension of removals of failed asylum seekers to Zimbabwe. This was in response to concerns at that time about the serious deterioration in the situation in Zimbabwe in the run-up to the presidential election held in March that year. We did not regard it as unsafe to return failed asylum seekers to Zimbabwe, but in view of the turbulent political conditions we considered that it would be appropriate not to enforce returns at that time.

During the period of the suspension, asylum and human rights claims made by Zimbabwean nationals have continued to be considered on their individual merits in accordance with our obligations under the 1951 UN Refugee Convention and the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR). Each application is considered against the background of the latest available country information from a wide range of reliable sources including international organisations, non-governmental organisations, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the media.

As with any other nationality, Zimbabweans who meet the definition of a refugee in the 1951convention are granted asylum. If they do not qualify for asylum, but there are other circumstances that make them particularly vulnerable and engage our obligations under the ECHR, they are granted humanitarian protection or discretionary leave. If their application is refused, they have a right of appeal to the independent appellate authorities. In this way we ensure that we provide protection to those Zimbabweans who need it. But if an asylum and human rights claim by an individual of any nationality is refused, and any appeal to the independent appellate authorities is unsuccessful, that means that it would be safe for that particular individual to return to their country of origin.

It is clear that there are Zimbabweans in need of international protection from persecution. Our asylum system provides that and will continue to do so. We have continued throughout the period of the suspension of enforced returns to consider cases and grant asylum or other forms of protection to Zimbabweans where necessary. The latest asylum statistics published today show that at initial decision stage in the first nine months of this year we granted asylum to 195 Zimbabweans and some other form of protection to more than 25 others. But this was out of a total of 2,025 decisions, meaning that very nearly 90 per cent. of claims were refused. 82 per cent. of subsequent appeals to the independent adjudicator were dismissed or withdrawn, the clear message is that the majority of Zimbabwean asylum applicants are able safely to return to Zimbabwe. We expect these individuals to leave voluntarily, and significant numbers have done so, but if they do not leave voluntarily we consider it entirely proper to seek to enforce their removal as we would nationals of any other country.

While there has not been any improvement in conditions in Zimbabwe since enforced removal of failed asylum seekers was suspended, the proportion of claimants whose claims are not well-founded has increased markedly over the period of the suspension. It is clear that the absence of enforced returns increasingly acts as a "pull factor" for Zimbabweans, and for others posing as Zimbabweans, who do not need international protection but nonetheless make asylum claims confident that even when unsuccessful they will not be forcibly removed. This is a misuse of the asylum system. We are therefore today bringing our policy on returns of failed Zimbabwean asylum seekers into line with that on every other country and ending the temporary suspension of enforced returns of failed Zimbabwean asylum seekers.

This change in asylum policy does not reflect any change in our categorical opposition to human rights abuses in Zimbabwe. We will continue, bilaterally and with our international partners, to push the Government of Zimbabwe to end human rights abuses there, and restore democracy, so that all Zimbabweans can in time return safely to help build a prosperous and stable country. There is no doubt that political persecution, abuses of human rights and denial of basic freedoms persist in Zimbabwe and the asylum decision-making and appeal system will continue to ensure that Zimbabweans who face persecution and claim asylum in the UK will continue to receive the international protection they need.

Asylum Seeker Families

The Minister for Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Desmond Browne): The National Asylum Support Service (NASS) has been reviewing their processes and policies with a view to increasing efficiency and reducing numbers in emergency accommodation.

A concession in the dispersal policy, where NASS departed from the policy of dispersal if a family had a child that had attended a particular school for a year, was part of this review. The concession, was designed to enable us to ensure that asylum seeker families in receipt of DWP benefits and who were transferring to NASS support, following receipt of a negative asylum decision—such cases are often referred to as disbenefited cases—could continue to be supported in the accommodation they had been living in while in receipt of benefits.

I agreed in August that this concession should be amended. In considering the change, regard was given to the need to balance disruption to the education of a child with the availability of suitable accommodation in non-dispersal areas. Consideration was also given to the number of families who remained in emergency accommodation—which is not intended for long-term occupation—in London and other areas for long periods of time.

The revised policy came into force on Friday 13 August 2004. The change in policy was announced by a letter dated 13 August, from the director of NASS to the membership of the National Asylum Support Forum, copied to LGA, ALG, COSLA and the Chief Asylum Support Adjudicator. A copy of the letter was placed on the Home Office website and NASS wrote to all families affected by this change.

Under the new policy, dispersal is temporarily deferred where an asylum seeker has a dependant child in their household who has started the final school or college year leading up to their GCSE, AS or A-level exams, or their equivalents. This is provided they have been enrolled at that school or college for a significant part of the previous school or college year.

However, families will not benefit from this concession if they have been unco-operative, for example, if they have failed to travel to dispersal accommodation without reasonable excuse or have switched the type of their NASS application without good reason, and this has resulted in their dispersal being delayed until their child is in the final school year leading to their GCSE, AS or A Level exam.

Families with children who are in the school year leading to Statutory Assessment Tasks (SATs) will not benefit from the concession.

If a family has a child with special educational needs who has gained entry to an appropriate school, dispersal will normally be postponed until arrangements are in place for the child to transfer to a suitable school in the dispersal area.

Cases that fall outside the revised criteria will be examined on their own merits, although the expectation is that dispersal will normally be appropriate. Families in emergency accommodation who applied for support before 13 August 2004—and whose dispersal may have been postponed as a result of the previous policy—have been reassessed under the new policy. This assessment took account of all known circumstances and consideration was given to whether dispersing the family would be reasonable. In order to minimise disruption to children and schools NASS aimed to arrange for a move to new accommodation to take place before the start of the new school year.

Disbenefited families supported by NASS prior to 13 August 2004, who met the terms of the concession in place before that date and where arrangements have been made with a local authority to pay their rent and utilities, will not be reassessed under the new policy, unless their accommodation becomes unsustainable for some reason.

We are considering other changes to the policy on dispersal and I may announce any further changes to the House when decisions have been taken.

PC Gerald Walker

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department (Paul Goggins): On 25 March I placed in the House Library a copy of the report by Professor Rod Morgan which I and the Minister for Policing had commissioned into the circumstances leading up to and following the death of PC Gerald Walker as a consequence of the actions of David Parfitt, who was then unlawfully at large following the revocation of his licence and recall to prison. I also placed in the Library a copy of the action plan which I had agreed with the director general of national probation service representing the police, prison and probation services and which set out a clear plan for delivering changes to national policy and practice recommended by Professor Morgan in light of his inquiry findings.

The director general of the national probation service has now reported to me on the progress achieved in delivering the action plan and I am today placing a copy of that report in the House Library.

I am very pleased that the director general is able to confirm that, of the 10 recommendations in Professor Morgan's report, two have already been met in full, a further four will be the subject of comprehensive advice which will be issued during November, and three other recommendations will result in guidance being issued before the end of December. Progress is being made to reach agreement with the employing authorities for probation staff on the final recommendation, which requires a change to the terms and conditions of some probation grades, but the director general is hopeful that there will be agreement in time for changes to be implemented early in 2005–06.

As I made clear in my written statement to the House on 25 March, PC Walker's death was an irreplaceable loss to the Nottinghamshire constabulary and to the community they serve, and a personal tragedy for his wife and two children. The changes to national practices that Professor Morgan recommended, and the action plan is delivering, cannot make up for that loss. Those changes will, however ensure that the legacy of PC Walker's sacrifice will be better supervision of offenders, more effective inter-agency working between the police and correctional services, and, by reducing the risk of similar events recurring, greater security to the public in future.

Yarl's Wood and Harmondsworth Disturbances

The Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. David Blunkett): I am today publishing the report by the prisons and probation ombudsman, Stephen Shaw, of his investigation into the serious disturbance at Yarl's Wood immigration removal centre on 14 and 15 February 2002.

Immediately after the disturbance, Stephen Moore, a senior member of the Prison Service, was asked to conduct an investigation of what had happened. He made significant progress but was unable to have access to the information necessary to complete his investigation until associated court proceedings had been completed. On 19 June 2003, my right hon. Friend the then Minister for Citizenship and Immigration announced in a written statement that she had decided that Stephen Shaw, who had been providing an independent overview of the work done up to that point, should take overall responsibility for the investigation, in order to ensure that it was fully independent. As Mr. Shaw notes in his report, he had unfettered access to papers and staff. I am grateful to him for the care with which he has examined what was by any standards an extremely serious incident and for a very thorough report, and to Stephen Moore for the considerable effort he invested in the earlier stages of the investigation.

The report criticises the handling by the contractor Group 4 of the incident which gave rise to the disturbances. It identifies weaknesses in design and materials which it attributes to the time constraints under which the centre was built, and which, in Mr. Shaw's view, rendered it unfit for purpose and unable to withstand the assault on it that occurred on 14 and 15 February 2002. It finds that "the operation that ended the disturbance seems to have worked well", but that there was a lack of clarity as to who was in charge and the command structure. It notes the lack of information held centrally at that time on detainees, of the kind that would have supported a more effective risk assessment of the detained population.

Stephen Shaw pays tribute, as I do, to the bravery shown by individual members of the Prison Service and Group 4 staff, by members of the emergency services and those detainees who rescued staff who were trapped. As he says, there was no loss of life, but the disturbance and fire were traumatic events for those involved.

It is important to remember the context in 2000 and 2001, when the Yarl's Wood and Harmondsworth removal centres were built. Asylum applications had risen significantly in 1999 and remained at high levels. All those involved—Ministers and officials alike—were rightly convinced that part of the solution was the creation of significantly more detention accommodation than had previously existed to support the removal of failed asylum seekers. In that context, the creation of such additional accommodation was understandably seen as an urgent priority. It is easy to be wise with hindsight, but I readily acknowledge that the weaknesses in design and materials identified by Stephen Shaw existed and made the centre more vulnerable to a disturbance than it would otherwise have been.

The important thing is that there were clear lessons to be learned, and they were. As the report notes, the Colnbrook removal centre, which opened recently, was built to a much more robust design. The Harmondsworth centre, originally built to the same design as Yarl's Wood, was extensively refurbished, with the installation of sprinklers and the strengthening of parts of the infrastructure, as was the surviving part of Yarl's Wood. The command structure in the event of a disturbance was clarified and improved, and effort invested in staff training.

I am also publishing today the report of an investigation of the more recent disturbance at Harmondsworth on 19 July this year by Sue McAllister, the head of the security group in the Prison Service. I am grateful also to Ms. McAllister for her work. This has been a more limited investigation, because a number of those involved in the disturbance still face criminal proceedings. It is, however, clear from the report that, as a result of the refurbishments I have described, Harmondsworth was significantly more able to withstand a serious disturbance than would otherwise have been the case. Damage was limited, the command arrangements for responding to the incident generally worked well, and the restoration of order was, in Ms McAllister's words, "a successful operation" in which Prison Service, police and other staff acquitted themselves well. There were no injuries to either staff or detainees and there were no escapes from the centre. The centre was up and running again within three months of the incident. The inherent weaknesses in the design were, however, a factor in the extent to which the disturbance spread throughout the centre, and fire safety requirements limited the measures that could be taken to control detainees, including preventing their confinement to their rooms. Officials have been addressing urgently with the contractor and fire authorities what more can be done to improve control without jeopardising fire safety.

Ms McAllister comments on the lack of systems for assessing the suitability of detainees for the open regime at Harmondsworth, and recommends a more strategic approach to the management of disruptive individuals. It is important to recognise that the expansion of the immigration removal estate was in part a result of the decision to end the practice of detaining immigration offenders in prisons. Since the Yarl's Wood disturbance, the Immigration and Nationality Directorate has strengthened arrangements for assessing the risk which individual detainees represent and for considering the case for moving disruptive detainees elsewhere in the estate or into prison accommodation. These arrangements are however being reviewed again in the light of experience at Harmondsworth and Ms. McAllister's comments, and there are plans to enhance the assessment process. Perhaps the most significant development is that the new centre at Colnbrook, built to a more robust design, provides an option for managing the more difficult detainees short of transfer to the prison estate—an option which did not previously exist.

These two reports highlight the challenge which the management of immigration detainees now represents. Detainees are not convicted criminals. As Stephen Shaw notes, one of the factors in the design of Harmondsworth and Yarl's Wood was the aim to create an environment which, while secure, was not a prison environment; these events have shown the tension between this aim and the need to maintain control and security. As Stephen Shaw notes in his report, as the effectiveness of the removals process increases, detainees are now spending, on average, much shorter periods in detention. This is, in itself, welcome, but it tends to raise levels of tension among the detained population, and limits the scope for constructive activities of the kind that longer-term custodial institutions provide. That said, we have to ensure within the detention estate a humane regime that provides purposeful activities and is strong on contact between staff and detainees. That, rather than the structure of the buildings (important as that is), is the surest means by which the risk of disaffection and disturbance can be kept to the minimum. I have already accepted Stephen Shaw's recommendation (number 60) that a forum comprising officials, contractors and relevant interest groups be set up to consider provision of purposeful activity in removal centres. The forum will be chaired by the senior director, operations in IND, and the Chief Inspector of Prisons will be invited to be represented.

Stephen Shaw's report makes a large number of other recommendations, many of which have already been acted on, while others will now be considered carefully and progressed, along with relevant conclusions of Sue McAllister's report. I have asked IND senior management to draw up an action plan based on these for publication in early 2005.

There have been many improvements to the management of the detention system—indeed of IND as a whole—since these events took place but I am determined that we should learn any further lessons of these very serious events, and do everything we can to prevent a recurrence.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Northern Ireland (Murder Inquiries)

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (Mr. Paul Murphy): On 1 April this year, I published Justice Cory's reports into allegations of state collusion in four murders in Northern Ireland. In doing so, I confirmed my intention to establish inquiries into the deaths of Robert Hamill, Billy Wright and Rosemary Nelson. I am pleased to be able to confirm today both the identities of the inquiry panels and the inquiries' terms of reference.

In each case, the panels will be chaired by a judge and will include both a member with specialist expertise and a lay member. The terms of reference have been deliberately drawn to allow the inquiries to consider both the allegations of collusion that have been made in these cases and also the issue of possible negligence.

The Robert Hamill inquiry will be chaired by Sir Edwin Jowitt, a retired member of the High Court of England and Wales. He will be joined on the inquiry panel by Sir John Evans (former Chief Constable of Devon and Cornwall) and Reverend Baroness (Kathleen) Richardson of Calow (former moderator of the Free Churches' Council of England and Wales). The inquiry will be held under section 44 of the Police (Northern Ireland) Act 1998. Its terms of reference will be:

> "To inquire into the death of Robert Hamill with a view to determining whether any wrongful act or omission by or within the Royal Ulster Constabulary facilitated his death or obstructed the investigation of it, or whether attempts were made to do so; whether any such act or omission was intentional or negligent; whether the investigation of his death was carried out with due diligence; and to make recommendations."

The Billy Wright inquiry will be chaired by the right hon. Lord (Ranald) MacLean of the Court of Session in Scotland. He will be supported in this role by Professor Andrew Coyle (director of the International Centre for Prisons Studies at King's College, London) and the Right Reverend John Oliver (retired diocesan Bishop of Hereford). The inquiry will be held under section 7 of the Prison Act (Northern Ireland) 1953. Its terms of reference will be:

> "To inquire into the death of Billy Wright with a view to determining whether any wrongful act or omission by or within the prison authorities or other state agencies facilitated his death, or whether attempts were made to do so; whether any such act or omission was intentional or negligent; and to make recommendations."

The Rosemary Nelson inquiry will be chaired by Sir Michael Morland, a retired member of the High Court of England and Wales. The other panel members will be Sir Anthony Burden (former Chief Constable of South Wales police) and Dame Valerie Strachan (vice chair of the big lottery fund and former chairman of the Board of Customs and Excise). The inquiry will be held under section 44 of the Police (Northern Ireland) Act 1998. Its terms of reference will be:

> "To inquire into the death of Rosemary Nelson with a view to determining whether any wrongful act or omission by or within the Royal Ulster Constabulary or Northern Ireland Office facilitated her death or obstructed the investigation of it, or whether attempts were made to do so; whether any such act or omission was intentional or negligent; whether the investigation of her death was carried out with due diligence; and to make recommendations."

As I said in my statement of 8 July, all three inquiries will have full powers to compel disclosure of documents and attendance of witnesses.

The inquiries will start work as soon as possible.

SOLICITOR GENERAL

Supplementary Estimates

The Solicitor-General (Ms Harriet Harman): Subject to parliamentary approval of any necessary supplementary estimate, the Attorney General's DEL will be increased by £104,952,000 from £516,157,000 to £621,109,000 and the administration costs limits will be increased by £83,950,000 from £384,759,000 to £468,709,000. Within the DEL change, the impact on resources and capital are as set out in the following table:

£'000

			New DEL
	Change	Voted	Non-voted	Total
Resource	96,670	597,217	7,000	604,217
Capital	8,282	23,015	0	23,015
Depreciation*	0	-6,123	0	-6,123
Total	104,952	614,109	7,000	621,109

*Depreciation, which forms part of resource DEL, is excluded from the total DEL since capital DEL includes capital spending and to include depreciation of those assets would lead to double counting.

The Crown Prosecution Service's element of the Attorney General's DEL will be increased by £94,438,000 from £466,991,000 to £561,429,000 and the administration costs limits will be increased by £81,450,000 from £353,527,000 to £434,977,000.

The change in the resource element of the DEL arises from:

Administration costs changes in respect of a transfer of £81,450,000 from the Criminal Justice System Reserve to fund the CPS's core business so that it can continue contributing to meeting criminal justice performance targets. Specific initiatives funded include the narrowing the justice gap and the charging programmes; better services for victims and witness through the speaking up for justice and direct communication with victims programmes; support for the effective trial management programme and tackling cross border crime;

Programme expenditure changes in respect of a transfer of £6,100,000 from the Home Office to support the joint delivery of government targets for recovering proceeds of crime; a transfer of £141,000 from the Home Office recovered assets incentivisation fund to fund the appointment of a Receivership Panel; a transfer of £350,000 from the Home Office recovered assets incentivisation fund to provide additional resources to regional asset recovery teams; a transfer of £1,129,000 from the Home Office to support joint working and improve effective use of enforcement measures for anti-social behaviour; and

The change in the capital element of the DEL arises from the take-up of the CPS's end year flexibility of £5,268,000 from the capital modernisation fund (CMF) funding across 2004–05.

The increases will be offset by inter-departmental transfers or charged to the DEL reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

The Serious Fraud Office's element of the Attorney General's DEL will be increased by £7,500,000 from £33,140,000 to £40,640,000 and the administration costs limit will be increased by £2,500,000 from £21,240,000 to £23,740,000.

The change in the resource element of the DEL arises from additional costs, £2,500,000 for administration expenditure and £5,000,000 for programme expenditure, relating to two fraud cases and will be charged to the DEL reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Treasury Solicitors' Department (TSD) element of the Attorney General's DEL will be increased by £3,014,000 from £16,026,000 to £19,040,000. There is no increase in the TSD's administration cost limit and it remains at £9,992,000. There is no change in the resource element of the DEL for the Treasury Solicitors' Department (TSD).

The increase in capital of £3,014,000 from £3,400,000 to £6,414,000 arises from the procurement of a practice and case management system, which enables the Department to manage and monitor its caseload more efficiently, and a new electronic records and electronic document management system, which will be implemented this year. Capital funding is also required to purchase the furniture and fittings required in advance of TSD's change of accommodation in 2005–06. The increase will be offset by end year flexibility on capital DEL from 2003–04 and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Crown Prosecutors

The Solicitor-General (Ms Harriet Harman): My right hon. Friend the Attorney General has made the following ministerial statement:

The review of the code for Crown prosecutors, which I announced on 18 March 2004, Official Report, column WS25, is now complete. Copies of the revised code have been printed and have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

The fundamental evidential and public interest considerations have not changed. However, the code has been amended to reflect the new role played by the Crown Prosecution Service in statutory charging whereby Crown prosecutors, rather than the police, will normally decide whether or not to charge a suspect and will determine the appropriate charge or charges. The new code also properly reflects other key developments in the four years since the code was last reviewed. These include: the developing role of prosecutors in assisting the sentencing court and seeking post conviction orders such as antisocial behaviour orders; alternatives to prosecution such as conditional cautioning; and new public interest factors in favour of prosecution relating to confiscation and any other orders, children, and community confidence. To ensure the code's accessibility, it will be published in audio and Braille and, in addition to English and Welsh, the most commonly spoken community languages.

I welcome the revised code and commend it to all prosecuting authorities. Copies of the code for Crown prosecutors will be available on the Crown Prosecution Service website which can be found at www.cps.gov.uk.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

European Company Law—Cross Border Mergers

The Minister for Industry and the Regions (Jacqui Smith): The House will be aware that, between June and September 2004, the Government consulted on the proposed draft directive on cross border mergers. The consultation document set out in factual terms how the provisions of the directive would operate and invited comments. Ten responses were received from companies, legal advisers and industry bodies. The Government are grateful to those who took the time and trouble to contribute.

The Government support the facilitation of corporate restructuring activities across the European Union to promote the single market. An effective framework of European company law, which facilitates cross-border mergers and provides legal certainty and adequate safeguards for those who deal with the companies involved, is essential for that purpose. The proposed directive is intended to provide this. Responses to the consultation indicated that introducing a mechanism for cross border mergers for UK companies would not have a significant impact, as UK companies have historically tended to favour restructuring by means of takeovers rather than mergers. Therefore, the Government intend to proceed with negotiations in a manner which is balanced and proportionate and which seeks to achieve the best outcomes for UK business. The Government will also look closely at options for implementation and consult further with stakeholders before decisions are taken on the most appropriate vehicle for implementation.

Although there were a limited number of respondents, a variety of views were expressed on the scope of the directive (the types of company to which the directive should apply) where as views tended to be more aligned on the issue of employee participation. As most respondents were clear that the scope of the directive should apply to small and medium enterprises as well as larger companies, the Government have sought to achieve a broad approach to scope—whilst ensuring this provides necessary legal certainty.

The Government have considered carefully the responses on the employee participation provisions of the directive. Employee participation is a system that exists within some EU countries (such as Germany and Sweden) for the representation of employees on the board of companies over a certain size. The term also covers employees' rights to recommend and/or oppose the appointment of board members. The consultation showed that there are concerns that this process could be too burdensome upon business if it were to follow the precedent set in the European company statute model, as this is a complicated, time consuming and potentially costly solution. This model requires that there are negotiations on employee participation issues in cases where a European company is formed by cross border merger involving one or more companies with an existing system of employee participation.

Realistically, the Government cannot expect to negotiate a directive that would have the effect of removing employee participation rights where they exist in a company in another member state. For several member states, it is of fundamental importance to ensure that this directive does not undermine employee participation rights. Therefore, the Government have carefully considered the responses and will work towards an approach that keeps the burdens on UK companies to a minimum. In addition, it should be borne in mind that companies will be under no obligation to engage in a cross border merger and if they do not elect to, there will be no impact upon them.

Statutory mergers of the kind covered by the proposal are little used by UK companies and the evidence indicates that it is unlikely that UK companies will choose to merge with companies in countries that have high levels of employee participation. We intend to seek improvements to the proposal to develop a more flexible process for agreeing employee participation arrangements and are committed to the objective of making the merger process available and less burdensome for UK companies

I have placed copies of the summary of responses to the consultation in the Libraries of both Houses.

Written Ministerial Statements

DEFENCE

Defence Intelligence and Security Centre Agency Key Targets

The Minister of State, Ministry of Defence (Mr. Adam Ingram): The Defence Intelligence And Security Centre (DISC) is the centre for defence intelligence training in the UK. CE DISC is responsible for training authorised personnel in intelligence, security and information support disciplines and maintaining an operational capability. The key targets for the agency for the 12 months from April 2004 are:

Key Target 1—Training Quantity and Efficiency

> To produce trained personnel in accordance with defence requirements, while reducing wastage by 1 per cent. in FY 2004–05.

Key Target 2—Training Quality

> To ensure that training complies with defence training quality standards and customer requirements.

Key Target 3—Operations

> To satisfy all operational tasking.

Key Target 4—Change Programme

> To deliver process improvement milestones in accordance with the owner's directive.

Defence Geographic and Imagery Intelligence Agency Key Targets

The Minister of State, Ministry of Defence (Mr. Adam Ingram): DGIA is responsible for meeting defence needs for responsive, accurate geospatial and imagery intelligence. The key targets for the agency for the 12 months from April 2004 are:

Key Target 1—Provision of Imagery Intelligence

> To meet defence needs for imagery intelligence against an Imagery Intelligence Exploitation Programme agreed with customers.

Key Target 2—Provision of Geospatial Intelligence

> To meet defence needs for geospatial intelligence against a Geospatial Intelligence Programme agreed with customers.

Key Target 3—Provision of Deployable Functions

> To provide force elements at a level of operational readiness agreed with customers.

Key Target 4—Provision of Training Capability

> To meet defence needs for Geographic Training against a Geospatial Training Plan agreed with customers.

Key Target 5—Efficiency

> To improve the efficiency of production within DGIA by one per cent. in 2004–05.

Defence Storage and Distribution Agency Key Targets

The Minister of State, Ministry of Defence (Mr. Adam Ingram): Key targets have been set for the chief executive of the Defence Storage And Distribution Agency (DSDA) for financial year 2004–05. The targets are as follows:

Key Target 1

> To meet the customers' requirements as negotiated and agreed in business agreements (BAs). This key target is broken down into two sub targets:
> Key Target 1a:
> For explosive matériel; to supply 95 per cent. of available maintained munitions within Demand timescales.
> Key Target 1b:
> Some 95 per cent. of the number of issues of non-explosive matériel to consumers, as forecast and agreed in BAs, to meet that element of the supply chain pipeline time (SCPT) for which DSDA has a responsibility.
> Key Target 1c:
> To process within limits, agreed with each individual customer, 98 per cent. of all receipts that conform to the specifications laid down in the contract and/or matériel regulations.

Key Target 2

> To achieve an average 5 per cent. reduction in the unit cost of output.

Key Target 3

> The value of inventory written off as a result of DSDA's actions to be less than the levels agreed with each business agreement. This key target is broken down into two sub targets:
> Key Target 3a:
> The value of explosive matériel written off as a result of DSDA's action to be less than 0.02 per cent.
> Key Target 3b:
> The value of non-explosive matériel written off as a result of DSDA's action to be less than levels agreed within each specific customer supplier agreement.

Incident (Majarr Al Kabir)

The Secretary of State for Defence (Mr. Geoffrey Hoon): The appalling incident at Al Majarr Al Kabir on 24 June 2003 resulted in one of the most serious losses suffered by British Forces since the beginning of operations in Iraq. It was felt deeply within the British Army, in particular the Royal Military Police, and struck a grievous blow to the families of the six soldiers. From the moment news of the incident came through we have been doing all that we can, in conjunction with the Iraqi authorities, to bring the perpetrators of this crime to justice. We have also been working hard to find out as much as we can about the circumstances leading up to deaths of the six soldiers, to ensure that if there were lessons for the service then these would be learned for the benefit of future operations.

The service board of inquiry into the circumstances surrounding the deaths of the six soldiers has now completed its work. This inquiry is fundamentally about learning lessons to prevent a recurrence. It is not about attributing blame or calling individuals to account. These are governed by separate procedures. It is also entirely internal in nature. However, we recognise that the families of the six soldiers have a close and fundamental interest in the board's work and its findings. We have therefore sought to keep the families as closely informed as we can on both these processes. To this end, representatives of the bereaved families are today receiving a briefing from the board president, following which I will meet them to hear their views and discuss any outstanding concerns they may have.

We recognise, too, that there is a wider parliamentary and public interest at stake, which is why we have taken the unusual step of providing a summary of the board of inquiry's findings for Parliament and the press. I am therefore making arrangements for a copy of the board's opinion, findings and recommendations, together with the overlaid opinions of the chain of command, to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

So as not to prejudice the criminal investigation, the board was instructed to look at the events leading up to the incident in which the six soldiers died and not to examine the particular circumstances of their deaths. The board of inquiry was an exhaustive internal review conducted for service reasons and its report is an open and frank account of the events of 24 June 2003. The board made 10 recommendations, a further two were subsequently added by the chain of command concerning military policies and procedures. Most of these have been accepted and will be implemented as a matter of priority.

The board found that the incident at Al Majarr Al Kabir was a surprise attack, which could not reasonably have been predicted. The board also found that a number of factors may potentially have had a bearing on the deaths of the six soldiers, including issues relating to ammunition, communications and command relationships within the battle group to which the Royal Military Police platoon was attached. The board was not, however, able to state that any of these factors, either in isolation or in combination directly determined the six soldiers' fate.

I am aware that some of the families have been critical of the Army's response to the deaths of the six soldiers. I hope they recognise the board's work for the thorough and detailed review that it is. I hope, too, that they now have a much better understanding of the events leading up to the death of their loved ones and the wider context in which the events occurred, and can take some comfort from this.

The families will shortly receive fall copies of the board's documentation. A separate meeting will be arranged with the board president once the families have had a chance to digest this detail. This will be a farther opportunity for the families to ask questions and to increase their understanding of the circumstances surrounding this tragic incident.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Building Regulations

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Office of the Deputy Prime Minister (Phil Hope): Further to the written statement on 29 June 2004, Official Report, columns 7–8WS, the Government are pleased to announce that they have accepted the recommendations of the Building Regulations Advisory Committee and approved six further competent person self-certification schemes to support the introduction of Part P of the Building Regulations (Electrical Safety in Dwellings) on 1 January 2005. Part P is being introduced in order to reduce the number of deaths, injuries and fires caused by defective fixed electrical installations.

The approved schemes to be operated by CORGI Services Ltd, ELECSA Ltd, NAPIT Certification Ltd, NICEIC Certification Services Ltd and the Oil Filing Technical Association for the Petroleum Industry Ltd are aimed at those carrying out electrical installation work as an adjunct to or in connection with their primary business activity. Gas installers, kitchen fitters and bathroom fitters would be examples of forms for which these schemes would be suitable. NAPIT Certification Ltd also applied to operate a scheme aimed at those carrying out electrical installation work as their primary business and this also has been approved.

Regulations to give formal legal authorisation to these schemes will be laid very early in the new session of Parliament. The regulations will also provide that conservatories and porches are within the scope of Part P, that the special precautions necessary in kitchens apply also where part of a room is used as a kitchen and that telephone and extra low voltage wiring for communication and signalling purposes will be non-notifiable work unless located in a bathroom or other special location.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iraq (Casualty Estimates)

The Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (Mr. Jack Straw): This statement provides a response to the article "Mortality before and after the 2003 invasion of Iraq: cluster sample survey" published in the Lancet on 29 October concerning civilian casualties since the beginning of military action in Iraq in March 2003.

The Security Context

It is important to recall the background to the current violence in Iraq. In the period of major combat activities in Iraq between the coalition and Iraqi forces loyal to Saddam Hussein, there were inevitably civilian casualties caused by military action by both sides. Every effort was made, on the part of the coalition, to minimise the civilian casualties as required by international humanitarian law.

Casualties—civilian and military—which have occurred since major combat activities ended on 1 May 2003 have done so directly as a result of those determined to undermine the political process. Security Council Resolution 1546, adopted on 8 June 2004, noted the request of the Iraqi Interim Government that the Multi-National Force should remain to help the sovereign Government of Iraq to ensure security and reaffirmed its authorisation on that basis. The Multi-National Force has been acting under that mandate, in support of the Iraqi security forces, to ensure the maintenance of security and stability in Iraq. The mandate specifically authorises action against terrorists.

The Iraqi Government continue to face a violent insurgency. Every day brings grim evidence that the targets of this insurgency are not merely a supposed occupation force. They include members of Iraqi civil institutions and security forces, ordinary Iraqis and foreigners working to build a better future for Iraq.

They include children killed when co-ordinated bombs were detonated near a water treatment plant in Baghdad, Iraqi army trainees and police butchered with premeditation and foreigners executed in front of the cameras. The scale of the threat has prompted international humanitarian agencies to close their operations in the country.

In those many parts of Iraq where there have been no terrorist incidents, there have been no casualties. If the terrorists and insurgents gave up their campaign, the violence in Iraq would cease.

However, while the insurgents continue in their attempts to destroy the political process leading to a constitutionally elected government, and to attack those rebuilding Iraq's infrastructure and public services, the Multi-National Force will support the efforts of the Iraqi Government and security forces to defeat them. That may include military action if there is no alternative.

The Multi-National and Iraqi forces continue to act so as to minimise civilian casualties. This is despite the fact that the insurgents have shown no compunction in using mosques, schools and hospitals as defensive bases. The MNF is currently providing food and other supplies to civilians in the Fallujah area, and working closely with the Iraqi Ministry of Health to ensure medical supplies reach there.

The Iraqi Government and their international partners remain committed to defeating the terrorists and insurgents in Iraq. I pay tribute to all those who are working to build a safe and democratic country.

The legal context

The Lancet study suggests that there is an obligation deriving from Article 27 of the fourth Geneva convention for the multi-national force (MNF) itself to have a reckoning of the number of civilian casualties it has caused. There is nothing in article 27, or elsewhere in the fourth Geneva convention, to support this suggestion.

The basic obligations under international humanitarian law as regards civilian casualties in an armed conflict are set out in additional protocol 1 to the Geneva conventions, which also reflects customary international law. In particular, indiscriminate attacks are prohibited, and this includes any > "attack which may be expected to cause incidental loss of civilian life, injury to civilians, damage to civilian objects, or a combination thereof, which would be excessive in relation to the concrete and direct military advantage anticipated".

This obligation under international humanitarian law has been fully complied with by the United Kingdom in respect of all military operations in Iraq.

Casualty Estimates

In many cases it would be impossible to make a reliably accurate assessment either of the civilian casualties resulting from any particular attacks or of the overall civilian casualties of a conflict. This is particularly true in the conditions that exist in Iraq. However, since 5 April 2004 the Iraqi Ministry of Health has sought to collect casualty data. Explaining the procedure, the Iraqi Minister of Health stated on 29 October:

> "Every hospital reports daily the number of civilians (which may include insurgents) who have been killed or injured in terrorist incidents or as a result of military action. All casualties are likely to be taken to hospital in these circumstances except for some insurgents (who may fear arrest) and those with minor injuries. The figures show that between 5 April 2004 and 5 October 2004, 3,853 civilians were killed and 15,517 were injured. I am satisfied that this information is the most reliable available."

We share this view. The Ministry's figures do not of course cover the whole of the period since military action was taken, but they do include the months of April and August, when casualty figures were particularly high.

Other figures are proposed by NGOs. www.iraqbodycount.net an NGO-based website, provides a running estimate of civilian casualties based on media and other reports. This has suggested that from March 2003 to the present there have been between 14,284 and 16,419 civilian deaths. This is an estimate relying on media reports, and which we do not regard as reliable. It includes civilian deaths at the hands of terrorists as well as of the coalition forces. It relies on media reporting to decide who is a civilian and who is not. It does help to show however that the Iraqi Ministry of Health figures are not the only ones to differ widely from the Lancet's estimate.

The Lancet

The article estimates that between 8,000 and 194,000 more people died following the invasion of Iraq than previous rates of mortality would have predicted, with the most likely figure being 98,000 extra deaths. Some 73 of the total of 142 deaths recorded by the survey in the period since the invasion are judged to have occurred through violence from the coalition forces or from terrorists. Other deaths recorded were the result for example of heart attacks or road accidents, not of coalition or terrorist action.

The Lancet's researchers acknowledge that they encountered no evidence of widespread wrongdoing on the part of individual Multi-National Force (MNF) soldiers on the ground.

The design of the Lancet study and its statistical methodology passed the process of peer review before publication and is similar to that followed in cases where the data are difficult to obtain. But that should not mask the fact that any methodology critically depends on the accuracy of the data subject to its analysis.

As the authors of the study themselves acknowledge, it was carried out under exceptionally difficult conditions which in particular restricted the size of the samples surveyed. As the Lancet article says, the estimate of deaths is based on an extrapolation from an increase from 46 deaths in 110,538 person-months before the conflict, to 142 deaths in 138,439 person-months after the conflict. Of those, 61 deaths were attributed to coalition forces, most of them in Falluja, a sample which the authors admit is an "extreme statistical outlier".

The figures derived from the survey's data on Falluja would have resulted in an estimated 200,000 excess deaths within Falluja alone over the past 18 months. This would amount to almost two-thirds of the total population of the town—which is just not credible. The authors of the study understandably discounted the data. In general they have noted that the data on which they based their projections was of "limited precision". This limited precision is reflected in the very large range which they use for their estimate of excess mortality (8,000–194,000). Although the levels of probability vary across its range, any figure within this range is consistent with the data.

We doubt the survey's attribution of 61 violent deaths to action by Coalition forces. Only two deaths are attributed in the survey to "anti-coalition forces". This is an astonishingly small proportion of those said to have died from violence, given the large numbers of Iraqis we know have died in individual incidents at the hands of terrorists. Since 58 of the 61 deaths attributed to Coalition forces were said to have been caused by "helicopter gunships, rockets or other forms of aerial weaponry",

it cannot have been possible for the families in every case to have known for certain who was responsible. It is also possible that they would have been afraid to have blamed the deaths of their relatives on the insurgents.

The authors also acknowledge that "many of the Iraqis reportedly killed by US forces could have been combatants".

The greatest increase in deaths which they report was among 15–59 year old men, while for instance among the elderly in the survey there was effectively no increase in the death rate at all.

Other questions about the Lancet study relate to the significant differences between its estimate and other evidence, notably the figures on casualties produced by the Iraqi Ministry of Health and quoted above.

If the Lancet survey is accurate we could have expected Iraqi Ministry of Health figures, compiled by hospitals, to show many more times the number of people killed and wounded over that period than they in fact do. Hospitals in Iraq have no obvious reason to under-report the number of dead and injured. The Lancet article does not explain this discrepancy.

So while recognising the bravery and professionalism of those conducting the Lancet study, the Government do not accept its central conclusion, and continue to believe that the most reliable figures for casualties in Iraq are those provided by Iraqi hospitals to the Iraqi Ministry of Health.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Voluntary and Community Organisations

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department (Fiona Mactaggart): I am today announcing the publication of a report on central Government funding of voluntary and community organisations for 1982–83 to 2001–02, which updates an earlier report published in 2001.

The Home Office has lead responsibility for the voluntary and community sector in England. As part of this remit, it has provided information on the funding of voluntary and community organisations by central Government Departments and their associated agencies and non-departmental public bodies (NDPBs) in the UK since 1979–80.

The report is based on research and analysis carried out for the Home Office by the Charities Aid Foundation. It provides information on trends in funding from 1982–83 onwards and shows that there were substantial increases in total funding between 1999–2000 to 2001–02. At current prices actual total funding was £2,238.4 million in 1999–2000; £2,755.3 million in 2000–01; and £3,323.7 million in 2001–02. It increased by 23.1 per cent. between 1999–2000 and 2000–01 and 20.6 per cent. between 2000–01 and 2001–02.

These increases were primarily caused by increases in non-housing association funding and not, as in earlier years, by increases in housing association funding. The increases in non-housing association funding are among the largest increases recorded in the last 20 years.

Copies of the document are available in the House Library and on the Home Office website at http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/voluntary1.html.

Organised Crime White Paper

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department (Caroline Flint): We published on 29 March a White Paper: "One Step Ahead, a 21st Century Strategy to Defeat Organised Crime" (Cm 6167). Although crime has fallen overall, a great deal still needs to be done to tackle specific areas of criminality, including organised crime. Organised crime is big business; its effects are corrosive and it operates across frontiers while at the same time reaching into every neighbourhood, especially some of the most deprived parts of our country.

The White Paper set out clear objectives of year-on-year reductions in the harm that organised crime causes and to make the UK one of the most difficult environments in the world for organised crime to operate. The White Paper also set out our plans to create a serious organised crime agency and for new powers to disrupt activity and to convict organised criminals.

Since it was published, we have received comments from over 50 individuals and organisations with an interest in tackling organised crime, as well as holding workshops with practitioners. The responses have been supportive of our proposed approach and make a number of practical suggestions relating to the different components. We are grateful for these comments and have taken them into account as we start to deliver on the different elements of the strategy.

I am grateful to those who commented and am publishing today a summary of the responses on the Home Office website. A copy of the summary document has been placed in the Library of the House.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Independent Monitoring Commission

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (Mr. Paul Murphy): Under section 11 (1) of the Northern Ireland (Monitoring Commission etc.) Act 2003, I am required to lay before Parliament each year a report on the operation of the agreement between the British and Irish Governments that established the Independent Monitoring Commission and the operation of the relevant provisions inserted into the Northern Ireland Act 1998.

The first annual report, published today, covers the 12-month period to 18 September 2004. The report sets out the steps that have been taken to establish the IMC in accordance with the agreement between the two Governments.

The report refers to the two IMC reports published in the reporting period, and describes the actions taken as a consequence of those reports. The various documents and reports referred to in my annual report are all in the public domain.

The IMC continues to fulfil an important and valuable role in Northern Ireland and I am grateful to the Commissioners for their dedication and efforts to date.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

DTI Five Year Programme

The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (Ms Patricia Hewitt): The Department of Trade and Industry five-year programme, "Creating Wealth from Knowledge", was published today. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses and are available from the DTI web site at: www.dti.gov.uk/fiveyearprogramme.html.

On 18 September 2003 I published the DTI strategy, setting out the measures which my Department will take to raise productivity in the UK and achieve our vision of prosperity for all. The five-year programme reaffirms the priorities of the DTI Strategy. It sets out how the UK will develop a strong, modern knowledge-based economy which can meet the challenges posed by the rapidly emerging economies and new technologies.

The five-year programme recognises that we are building on solid foundations. Living standards have gone up, on average, by almost 3 per cent. a year, since 1997. For the first time in nearly half a century the UK has the best growth and employment record of the G7, and we have overtaken France to become the fourth largest economy in the world. However, our world is undergoing a transformation; China is set to be the largest economy in the world within a generation; India produces 3 million highly skilled graduates a year; the new central and eastern European democracies, with wage costs which are 10 per cent. of ours, have joined the EU. In order for the UK to maintain, and build on our strong economic position, we will have to respond to this changing environment.

The five-year programme argues that innovation through the application of science and technology, with highly skilled people, is the key to our country's future prosperity. In the modern world, the countries that create a climate where innovation flourishes will succeed. Those that do not will struggle. The UK already has many strengths to succeed: world class universities; a tradition of science and research; a dynamic and flexible labour market; and world-beating businesses which make use of new technologies and provide high value-added services.

My Department is at the cutting edge of our country's ambition to create wealth from knowledge. Our five-year programme outlines the means by which we will achieve this, working with other Departments, business, trade unions and other partners at home, in Europe and globally. It sets out the policies needed, over the next five-years, to stimulate the industries and jobs of the future through science and innovation; to create new partnerships with industry to promote enterprise; to delivery new approach to regulation; and to lead the drive for reform in Europe.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Building on New Deal

The Minister for Work (Jane Kennedy): In June this year we announced the publication of a paper "Building on New Deal: Local Solutions Meeting Individual Needs", setting out the Government's strategy for building on the success of our employment programmes. Today, I am announcing the locations for building on new deal prototypes.

We have achieved significant success in our new deal programmes, helping over a million people into work. We are determined to build on this achievement to deliver more support for those people who face the most difficult barriers to work. Building on new deal will give personal advisers and local managers greater flexibility, allowing them to provide tailored support better to meet the needs of individuals and of local labour markets. It will also give them more scope to work in partnership with employers and other agencies to tackle local problems that prevent more people moving from benefit dependency to work.

We will test these flexibilities from late 2005 in 11 Jobcentre Plus prototype districts. The prototypes will provide valuable practical experience of how advisers and managers use their flexibilities. We will be using the lessons learned to determine how best, and when, to extend these improvements nationally.

We will be working with the devolved Administrations, our private and voluntary sector partners, employers and other organisations to successfully deliver this new approach.

The building on new deal approach will be tested in the following Jobcentre Plus districts:

Ayrshire, Dumfries, Galloway and Inverclyde
[—Inverclyde from April 2006]
Buckinghamshire and Oxfordshire
Calderdale and Kirklees
Cardiff and Vale
Cheshire and Warrington
Cornwall
Norfolk
Northamptonshire
North East London
The Marches
Gateshead and South Tyneside [—from April 2006]

Written Ministerial Statements

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Television Licence Fee

The Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (Tessa Jowell): The television licence fee settlement announced by the Government in February 2000 provides for changes in the licence fee of RPI plus 1.5 per cent. for each year from 2000–01 to 2006–07. This settlement is designed to enable the BBC to provide a strong and distinctive schedule of high quality programmes and remain at the forefront of broadcasting technology. The settlement includes a requirement for the corporation to raise over £1 billion through efficiency savings and increased income over the same period.

Application of the RPI figure of 3.1 per cent. for the year to September 2004, plus 1.5 per cent, to the current unrounded licence fees produces new rounded totals of £126.50 for a colour licence and £42.00 for a black and white licence. The necessary regulations to bring these fees into force will be laid before the House in due course. The changes will come into effect from the 1 April next year.

DEFENCE

Defence Training Review

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence (Mr. Ivor Caplin): I am now able to update the House on the defence training review (DTR) following the initial statement by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Armed Forces on 25 November 2002, Official Report, columns 1–2WS. The process to determine the most appropriate and cost effective means of delivering rationalised specialist training has been completed, and we have now issued invitations to negotiate (ITNs) to the shortlisted bidders.

The DTR rationalisation programme will modernise and improve specialist training by rationalising training delivery and facilities on defence rather than single service lines and through the more efficient use of a reduced training estate. A partnering arrangement with industry is envisaged to take this programme forward. In addition to confirming the significant benefits of better accommodation, improved utilisation of training facilities, and more modern specialist training delivery, discussions with industry and stakeholders have also identified the scope for economies of scale through the packaging of individual training-streams. We propose two contractual packages, comprising:

Package 1:

Aeronautical Engineering, Electro-Mechanical Engineering and Communication and Information Systems

Package 2:

Logistics, Police and Personnel Administration and Security, Languages, Intelligence and Photography

By consolidating training activity on a reduced number of sites we expect to achieve significant savings through a more cost-effective use of a reduced training estate, including the disposal of a number of surplus sites.

We have sought proposals that capture our requirement for flexibility, joint working and continuous improvement, in terms of quality and cost, appropriate incentives and transfer of risk.

The next step will be for bidders to develop their proposals, and we expect to receive these by 16 September and 17 October 2005. Decisions on the locations for these rationalised defence training establishments will follow the evaluation of these proposals, and selection of the preferred bidder for each package.

This is one of the Department's major change programmes and we recognise the need to keep the personnel potentially affected informed of developments. We will continue to consult fully with the trade unions.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Local Government Finance

The Minister for Local and Regional Government (Mr. Nick Raynsford): On 19 May 2004, the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister published a consultation paper asking for views on options for the principles to be used in amending the 2003–04 local government finance report and the 2004–05 local government finance report. Responses to this paper were invited from local government and other interested parties, by 10 August.

Following analysis of the consultation responses, we are now publishing full details of our proposals for the 2003–04 amending report. A summary analysis of responses received to the consultation has also been published today. Copies of all related documents have been placed in the Vote Office and the Library of the House.

This announcement launches a further period of consultation on the amending report for 2003–04. The consultation period will end on the same date as the forthcoming consultation on proposals for the 2005–06 local government finance settlement, the date for which will be announced in due course. This will allow local authorities some additional time to consider the effects of the amending report in their budgeting proposals.

After consideration of the views expressed by local authorities in consultation, I have decided to postpone the issuing of the amending report for 2004–05 until next year. This will ensure that all possible revisions to the data used in the 2004–05 settlement will be included.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police Authorities (Amended Grant Allocations)

The Minister for Crime Reduction, Policing and Community Safety (Ms Hazel Blears): I have today placed in the Library a copy of the draft police grant report (England and Wales) 2003–04 (amending report 2004–05). The Minister for Local and Regional Government, my right hon. Friend the Member for Greenwich and Woolwich (Mr. Raynsford), has previously announced to the House that there would be an amending report for 2003–04 this year to take account of changes to Office for National Statistics population data. A consultation exercise by the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister ran from 19 May to 10 August 2004.

This announcement launches a further period of consultation on the amending report for 2003–04. The consultation period will end on the same date as the forthcoming consultation on proposals for the 2005–06 police and local government finance settlements to be put before Parliament shortly. This will allow local police authorities some additional time to consider the effects of the amending report in their budgeting proposals. My right hon. Friend the Minister for Local and Regional Government will make a statement in due course about the Government's proposals for local government finance in 2005–06. Authorities may wish to take this into account in considering their response to this consultation.

After consideration of the views already expressed by police and other local authorities in the consultation, the issue of the amending report for 2004–05 has been postponed until next year. This will ensure that all possible revisions to the data used in the 2004–05 settlement will be included.

Amended allocations for each police authority against original allocations are set out in the table below.

IP/WI 7—Remuneration of staff and conditions of service. (Waterways Ireland.)

Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act

The Minister of State, Northern Ireland Office (Mr. John Spellar): I made a statement on 6 May on the review of the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act 2000 (Disapplication of Part IV for Northern Ireland Parties) Order 2001, and I announced to the House that I would report back on developments following further consultation on the issues involved.

The Government have now concluded in the light of lengthy consultations with the parties and the Irish Government that it would not be appropriate to move away from the current disapplication as soon as next February, and that the current arrangements should be extended for a further two years. It is clear that concerns about intimidation remain across the community. And there is a range of complex technical issues that will need to be fully worked through with the Irish Government before we are in a position to legislate in a way that takes account of the particular role of the Irish Republic in the political life of Northern Ireland. The Northern Ireland parties will also need some time to adjust to any new arrangements.

This will take some time and require detailed discussions with the political parties, the Irish Government and the Electoral Commission. However, the Government are determined that there should be a move to greater transparency in the political donation arrangements in Northern Ireland. The Government have no wish to return to Parliament to seek any further extensions of this disapplication. So I have today invited the parties formally to submit to me by the end of March 2005 proposals for a reformed system.

Ministerial Committees of the Cabinet

The Prime Minister (Mr. Tony Blair): I have placed a copy of the current list of Cabinet Committees, their full membership and terms of reference in the Libraries of both Houses. Details have also been updated on the Cabinet Office website.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Commission for Equality and Human Rights

The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (Ms Patricia Hewitt): The Commission for Equality and Human Rights (CEHR) will be a champion of equality and human rights and a key step towards realising our vision of a fairer, more cohesive and prosperous Britain based on mutual respect and understanding.

In May we launched the White Paper "Fairness for All: A New Commission for Equality and Human Rights", (Cm 6185) setting out our vision for the CEHR. The White Paper stimulated a wide-ranging debate that showed the strong interest in our proposals from all sides. We are grateful for the many high quality responses received, which have helped shape and refine our proposals. We have given them very careful consideration.

We have today published the Government's response to the comments made on the White Paper, which has been placed, together with a list of respondents in the Libraries of both Houses. Copies of individual responses are available from the Department of Trade and Industry Library.

The Government welcome the general support for our proposals, and especially for the foundations of equality, human rights and good relations that will underpin the CEHR. We note the strong welcome given too to the contribution the CEHR will make in Scotland and Wales, the duty on the CEHR to involve stakeholders and the public as it develops its plans, the proposals for regional arrangements and the distinct arrangements for the CEHR's work on disability. Employers welcomed the emphasis on working in partnership with business, and better access through the CEHR to advice on all areas of equality law. The potential benefits to small and medium sized enterprises were particularly noted.

The Government recognise that some groups, especially black and minority ethnic communities, have reservations about the proposals, and are pledged to maintain dialogue with them so as to find a basis for the CEHR in which all key interests can share. The new approaches set out in the Government's response demonstrate that we have been listening to all stakeholders including BME communities over recent months and working closely with the Commission for Racial Equality (CRE).

The Government confirm our intention, set out in the White Paper, to proceed with legislation to establish the CEHR as soon as parliamentary time allows, but as a result of consultation, with some important improvements, set out below, on the White Paper proposals.

We intend to legislate too to introduce provisions to outlaw discrimination in the provision of goods, facilities and services, and are giving consideration to including public functions, and a general framework to introduce a duty on public bodies to promote equality of opportunity between women and men and to prohibit sex discrimination in the exercise of public functions.

New approaches

The CEHR's fundamental objectives

Our vision for the core purpose of the CEHR, is to:

build and nurture respect for equality, diversity and human rights work towards compliance with equality and human rights legislation promote good relations between communities.

These are balanced, interlinked roles, each underlining a fundamental aspect of the CEHR's work. Each is critically important in helping deliver a fairer society, in which everyone has the chance to fulfil their potential and be treated with respect and dignity.

Within this, the CEHR's work will comprise three pillars of equal importance: equality and diversity, human rights and good relations. These are mutually reinforcing and together will create a new framework to challenge prejudice and discrimination.

Equality and diversity, human rights and good relations

The CEHR will promote an inclusive vision of equality while respecting the specific experiences of discrimination of different groups. It will work to tackle discrimination and build new understandings of equality as key to a flourishing society, working both through influencing attitudes and practice and through the use of its enforcement powers. While effective promotional work by the CEHR will lead to improved compliance with the law, the Government recognise that the CEHR's enforcement powers are an essential element of its role and expect it to use them effectively.

Promoting a culture of respect for human rights will be at the heart of the CEHR's work. The CEHR will promote protection, awareness and understanding of human rights in society generally. It will bring a step change in raising public bodies' awareness of their obligations under the Human Rights Act and supporting them to achieve compliance.

The Government believe that the CEHR's role in promoting good relations between different communities will help contribute to a more cohesive society based on shared core values and a new sense of British identity. It will be particularly important to build on the CRE's good relations work and we intend that the CEHR's statutory duties in this area should give priority to work with race and faith communities, while encouraging the CEHR to work more broadly where it will add value. We will ensure too that the CEHR's powers give it an explicit remit to combat prejudice and work to reduce crime affecting particular communitiesgroups, such as hate crime and crimes of incitement to hatred.

Consulting and involving

Respondents warmly welcomed the White Paper's emphasis on the CEHR reaching out to stakeholder communities and involving them in all facets of its work—supported by the proposed statutory duty to consult on its strategic plan. We look to the CEHR to develop innovative means to secure public involvement and ensure that marginalised groups and communities are given a voice.

A duty to monitor progress

Respondents shared our vision of the CEHR as a driver of change towards a fairer society, and it will be important to be able to assess systemic progress towards this goal. We therefore intend to place on the CEHR a specific duty to monitor progress towards broad equality and human rights goals by publishing a periodic "state of the nation" report, which will track progress on a range of indicators. This will provide a powerful, objective means to show where effort needs to be directed and to measure success. To deliver this, the CEHR will need to develop a comprehensive information base across the strands, informed by its own research, and other existing data sources. This will reinforce the call in "Fairness for All" for the CEHR to develop a strong evidence base to underpin its work.

The CEHR's powers and duties

The CEHR's powers and duties need to support its role as a modern, effective regulator, working robustly for compliance with the law, and its role as an agent for change. While the powers and duties proposed in the White Paper were generally welcomed, many valuable proposals were made to enable the CEHR to carry out its mission better. New powers relating to its equality and human rights remit, which will provide a tailored, flexible set of tools to drive up good practice and ensure compliance, are set out below. New powers to supporting its good relations duties, including combating crime and prejudice, have been described above.

Supporting cases

Supporting court or tribunal cases under the equality legislation will be a key function of the CEHR, as it is for the existing commissions. While the White Paper proposed some criteria to guide the CEHR in making decisions on which cases to support, we recognise the strength of views expressed that the CEHR needs complete discretion in making these decisions. Accordingly, we no longer intend to include any criteria for case support in legislation, so providing more flexibility than the current discrimination statutes allow. We expect however the CEHR to consult on and make clear the criteria it will use in practice.

As well the CEHR's direct support to individuals, there will be important benefits from its work with other advice giving organisations to equip them better to provide advice and support on discrimination and human rights issues.

"Fairness for All" sought views on whether the CEHR should be able to continue to support cases which draw on both discrimination and human rights arguments once the discrimination arguments have fallen away. The Government agree that provision should be made for the CEHR to be able to provide such support but believes that experience should be gained first of the number and nature of cases coming forward. We intend therefore to include in legislation an order-making power that would allow this power to be conferred.

We can clarify that the CEHR will be able to bring proceedings in its own name against persons committing acts of unlawful advertising, instructions and pressure to discriminate, maintaining the current powers, though this was not explicitly stated in "Fairness for All".

Inquiries and investigations

We note the concern of many respondents that the CEHR's powers of inquiry and investigation should cover the full range of options available to the existing commissions, and provide a full and flexible set of tools. We intend therefore to recast the powers proposed so that they carry forward all the powers conferred in current legislation.

This means that the CEHR will be able to investigate named bodies not only in respect of alleged unlawful discrimination or harassment, which as now will need to be triggered by some evidence, but also to conduct inquiries relating to any other area of the CEHR's responsibilities—though no sanctions could follow such an inquiry. This will give it a flexible tool to look into practice in equality, human rights and good relations as appropriate, and work with the bodies concerned for improvement on a partnership basis, on the lines of the current powers of the Disability Rights Commission (DRC) in respect of its remit and those of the Equal Opportunities Commission (EOC) and CRE set out in their founding statutes. However, the CEHR will not be able to make any finding of fact that a public authority has breached its obligations under section 6(1) of the Human Rights Act 1998, a finding that is properly made by a court or tribunal where necessary.

We also intend that there should be no restriction on the CEHR's powers to compel evidence in the course of an inquiry or investigation, in contrast to the earlier proposal to require the authorisation of the Secretary of State. This will enable the CEHR to act fully independently in its conduct of inquiries and investigations—subject to a safeguard that a person can apply to the court to have a request set aside if it appears unnecessary or unreasonable.

Public duty

The Government attach great importance to the CEHR's role in promoting and enforcing the duty on public bodies to promote race equality, and the duties proposed for disability and gender, so that public services are more responsive to diverse needs. As foreshadowed in "Fairness for All", we intend to introduce a power for the CEHR to assess a public body's performance of the duty, as a flexible, graduated means of securing improvement and as an alternative to compliance action enforceable through the courts. This will form part of the suite of inquiry and investigation powers. A range of outcomes might follow from an assessment, ranging from recommendations and an action plan, though formal enforcement could ensue if this is justified.

Disability

The White Paper proposed measures to ensure that CEHR takes full account of the distinctive nature of disability discrimination and provides disabled people with a clear voice.

The Disability Committee will have wide delegated powers in the areas of the CEHR's work that are unique to disability, covering discrimination, including the duty of "reasonable adjustment" relating to access to goods, facilities and services, education, and transport (Parts 3 and 4 of the Disability Discrimination Act as it will be amended by the Disability Discrimination Bill). The committee will also exercise the CEHR's functions in relation to Part 1 of the Act, which deals with the definition of disability. The CEHR will be obliged to involve the committee in its cross-cutting work on employment and on the public sector duties, and ensure that the committee's work is properly resourced. The committee will have powers to advise the CEHR on disability matters generally.

While welcoming these proposals, disabled people and their organisations have made clear the importance they attach to the continuation of the order-making power in the DRC Act to enable DRC to give assistance in proceedings brought otherwise than under the Disability Discrimination Act, where a person's disability is a key factor. The Government recognise the strength of this concern and will include an equivalent provision in the CEHR's legislation.

Scotland and Wales

Devolution has created a new British context for equality and human rights. The CEHR must be able to respond directly to the specific needs of each nation, taking account of the distinct legal, political and cultural framework in which both now operate.

We have responded to the strong calls for the CEHR in Scotland and Wales to have autonomy to set their own priorities. Statutory committees in Scotland and Wales will have responsibility for a wide range of activities, in particular for the CEHR's promotional work, and will be able to determine how these activities should be delivered. The CEHR board will also be charged with a duty to consult the national committees in respect of functions outside the committees' remit.

Religious discrimination

Concern was expressed about imbalances in the current legislative provision in the Race Relations Act, where it has emerged from case law that Jews and Sikhs are protected from discrimination but not other religions or beliefs. The need to afford protection from discrimination is felt particularly acutely by Muslims in Britain, and the case for doing so was powerfully made in the responses from the Muslim Council of Britain and the Commission for Racial Equality. Similar calls were heard in the course of the Government's strength in diversity consultation exercise.

The Government have long recognised these concerns. We have already taken action by way of the Employment Equality (Religion or Belief) Regulations 2003 to implement the religion or belief strands of the European Council Directive 2000/78/EC of 27 November 2000 in Great Britain which affords protection to all religions or beliefs in employment and occupation.

We intend to change the law to make religious discrimination unlawful in the provision of goods, facilities, services and premises, and are actively considering the extension of this protection to public functions. We intend to afford protection in this area from direct discrimination, indirect discrimination and victimisation.

The regional dimension

Empowering the CEHR to engage regionally and locally, so that it draws from experience "on the ground", will be an important facet of its work. We shall be working with all the interests concerned to develop the further the White Paper proposals for the CEHR to have a regional presence, which received a very positive response.

Equality legislation

Many stakeholders expressed concerns about imbalances in the current legislative provision for the different equality areas in their responses to the consultation on the CEHR. The Government have long recognised these concerns. We are beginning to consider the best mechanisms for reviewing the current discrimination legislation framework, as part of its continuing work in reviewing barriers to equality, taking into account the interests of the many different stakeholders who would be affected by any changes to the current position. The CEHR will clearly have an important role to play in this review and will separately be empowered to recommend changes to discrimination legislation as it sees fit.

Establishment of CEHR

The Government intend to appoint the Chair and Commissioners by 2006 so that the body will be up and running in 2007. A process of phased entry is anticipated for the existing commissions, with all of them being incorporated by 2008–09.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Ethnic Minority Employment Taskforce

The Minister for Work (Jane Kennedy): On 23 November we will be publishing the first yearly progress report of the ethnic minority employment taskforce.

The taskforce was set up in response to the Prime Minister's strategy unit report on ethnic minorities in the labour market and delivers the first cross-government ethnic minority employment strategy. The SU report arose out of concern that, in a strong labour market, people from an ethnic minority background are still facing formidable barriers to employment, as demonstrated by their employment rates.

As well as comprising Ministers from across government, the taskforce has representatives from the Commission for Racial Equality, the Trades Union Congress and the Confederation of British Industry—all of whom have contributed significantly to the development of our strategy and the first year's progress report.

This report will represent the first of three reporting stages, with the final report due in 2006. It will set out the evidence base for our ethnic minority employment strategy and the progress the taskforce has made in its first year towards delivering its objective that no one should be disadvantaged in their employment prospects because of their ethnicity.

The report will also demonstrate those areas that the taskforce will seek to develop further—highlighting the importance of doing more than just meeting the strategy unit recommendations. It will set out the Government's continuing commitment to reducing the ethnic minority employment gap and the issues and challenges that face us in achieving this goal.

Copies of the report will be placed in the Library on 23 November.

Unit Costs Targets 2004–05

The Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (Alan Johnson): I am pleased to be able to announce today performance targets in respect of the customer facing businesses of the Department for Work and Pensions: Jobcentre Plus, the Pension Service, the Disability and Carers Service and the Child Support Agency.

In line with the Department's public service agreement we are committed to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of our services. In order to demonstrate this we require our businesses to achieve published unit cost targets. The published targets are supported by a developing range of more detailed unit cost information used by operational managers.

The table below sets out 2004–05 targets for Jobcentre Plus, the Pension Service, the Disability and Carers Service and the Child Support Agency together with the actual unit costs and published targets for 2003–04.

	Definition	2003–04 Actual £	2003–04 Target £	Target 2004–05 £
Jobcentre Plus	Benefit Processing Job Broking	11.30 57.98	10.20 64.60	*28.18 191.49
The Pension Service	Cost per customer	24.98	25.00	24.00
Disability and Carers Service	Cost per customer contact	131.74	138.13	132.15
The Child Support Agency	Cost per case	209	184	202

- * Jobcentre Plus has extended the cost base being measured by more than £1.1 billion compared with 2003–04 which means that the 2004–05 target is not directly comparable with the 2003–04 figures.
-  A figure of £189 for 2003–04 CSA unit costs was published in the Agency's annual accounts earlier this year. Whilst actual costs were used in producing this figure, the caseload figure used was a forecast, as accurate information on out turn was not available at that time. A revised estimate for CSA unit costs based on actual caseload figures for March 2004 is published here.
-  In 2003–04, the Child Support Agency's caseload proved to be lower than forecast, and the costs higher. The target for 2004–05 is therefore based on revised cost and caseload assumptions.

Written Answers to Questions

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Afghanistan

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps have been taken to encourage Afghan farmers to move from growing poppies to other food crops. [193437]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: DFID is supporting organisations that are working in a number of poppy growing provinces across Afghanistan, including Badakhshan, Kandahar and Helmand. These organisations, including the Aga Khan Foundation and the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organisation, are working with farmers to help them identify and try a range of legal crops, providing seeds, fertilizer and tools. However, crops alone are not the only way to help those involved in opium poppy farming to earn a legal income. These projects also work to identify and help with non-crop and off-farm opportunities, including help with animal rearing, improving animal welfare, and training in crafts such as tailoring.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent discussions he has had with the Revolutionary Association of the Women of Afghanistan on the possibility of helping with their funding. [195279]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: None.

China

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much aid his Department has (a) pledged and (b) distributed to China since 1999. [194073]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: DFID does not make specific pledges of expenditure for country programmes. Since the Financial Year of 1999–2000, DFID has distributed £162,948,000 for development assistance in China. Further information and a breakdown by financial years is available in DFID's Statistics for International Development 2004 (Table 7.3). This is available on-line on the DFID website: http://www.dfid.gov.uk and will soon be available in the Library of the House.

Commission for Africa

Mr Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the budget is of the Government's Africa Commission; which Department oversees the budget; and what the criteria are governing expenditure. [195135]

Hilary Benn: The budget for the Commission for Africa is £5.9 million. This is met and overseen by the Department for International Development (DFID). It covers the cost of the Commissioners' travel on Commission business; the cost of Commission meetings; the cost of consultation and of analytical work in preparation of the Commission's report; and the cost of the Commission's Secretariat. All expenditures are made in line with the objectives and priorities of the Commission.

Consultants

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many consultancy firms or companies have been retained by the Department since June 2001; what the projects are for which each has been retained; and what the total is of the fees paid or incurred in each case. [193421]

Hilary Benn: The following table gives the number of consultancy companies and of individual consultants awarded DFID contracts in each of the last three years, together with the value of contracts awarded. The purposes of contracts are set out in the list of 'Contracts Issued 1 April 1999 to 31 March 2004', which has been placed in the Libraries of the House.

	Number of consultancy companies awarded contracts	Number of individual consultants awarded contracts	Total value of contracts awarded (£ million)
2001–02	338	176	282
2002–03	276	131	262
2003–04	245	123	228

These figures do not include lower value contracts issued by DFID's overseas offices, details of which cannot be provided without incurring a disproportionate cost.

Mobile Phones

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many mobile phones were used by (a) Ministers and special advisers and (b) officials in his Department in each year since 1997; how many were (i) lost and (ii) stolen; and what their cost was. [191433]

Hilary Benn: Over the last two years, the number of mobile phones in use in the UK, and their costs (including equipment, call charges and access charges) are as follows:

2003–04	230	89,500
2004–05 to date:	434	92,800

These figures include the two mobile phones for Ministers and two for the Special Advisers.

Mobile phones were not managed under a central contract prior to this period, and therefore information for earlier years (and information on mobile phones in overseas offices) is not readily available and could not be provided without incurring a disproportionate cost.

The total number of mobile phones lost or stolen since 1997 is 28.

New Deal

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many personnel the Department has recruited under the New Deal in each of the past five years. [194855]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 25 October 2004, Official Report column 1052W.

Press Releases

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many press releases have been issued by his Department in each month of 2004; and if he will make a statement. [195364]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: The number of press releases issued each month by DFID Press Office in London in 2004 is as follows:

	Number
January	10
February	6
March	13
April	12
May	10
June	8
July	16
August	6
September	11
October	10
Total	102

Special Advisers

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many unpaid special advisers the Department has; what their names are; and which Government (a) bodies, (b) committees and (c) strategy groups each unpaid adviser (i) belongs to, (ii) advises and (iii) works alongside. [194081]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 28 October 2004, Official Report, columns 1380–470W.

LEADER OF THE HOUSE

European Travel Allowance

Mr. Allen: To ask the Leader of the House what use hon. and right hon. Members have made of their facility to visit European institutions in each of the years for which figures are available; and what his policy is on encouraging hon. and right hon. Members to make fuller use of the provision. [193598]

Mr. Woolas: During 2003–04 200 hon. Members claimed against the European travel allowance for a total of 272 journeys to European institutions and agencies and the Parliaments of EFTA countries, EU member countries, candidate and applicant countries. 50 Members made two visits each and 11 made three visits each. For information about earlier years I refer the hon. Member to the answers given by my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House on 15 July 2003, Official Report, column 189W, and on 1 September 2003, Official Report, column 709W.

My right hon. Friend the Leader of the House has invited the Modernisation Committee to consider the operation of this scheme, as part of its inquiry into the Scrutiny of European Business, and in particular whether it would be practicable within the existing budget to enable those Members who have regular and valuable contact through approved visits to do so more than three times.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Domestic Violence

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Solicitor-General what guidance has been given on the level of evidence needed to bring a successful prosecution for offences of domestic violence. [193877]

The Solicitor-General: The Code for Crown Prosecutors requires prosecutors in all cases to be satisfied that there is a realistic prospect of conviction and that it is in the public interest to prosecute. There is also CPS Policy and Guidance on prosecuting cases of domestic violence. Both documents make reference to the standard of evidence needed for successful prosecutions. The Code for Crown Prosecutors and the Policy and Guidance on Domestic Violence are currently being revised to reflect recent legislative and procedural changes and are due to be published soon.

New Deal

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Solicitor-General how many personnel the Department has recruited under the New Deal in each of the past five years. [194028]

The Solicitor-General [holding answer given 26 October 2004]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Cabinet Office on 25 October 2004, Official Report, column 1052W.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Magpies

Mr. Hurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the effects of magpies on the populations of song-birds in urban areas and the fringes of urban areas. [188547]

Mr. Bradshaw: The Magpie is known to take songbirds although the available evidence suggests that this does not have a significant adverse effect on their population levels. Defra issues a general licence allowing year round control of Magpies, and a small number of other species, to conserve wild birds. This licence may be used by authorised persons only and the landowner's permission must be obtained. This licence is among a number of general licences relating to birds that is currently the subject of a consultation exercise.

There is no evidence to suggest that Magpies or birds of prey have played a major role in the declines of songbirds. The population status of songbird and farmland bird species is monitored and Defra is aware of declines in certain species.

By contrast a Mammal Society survey suggests that 275 million wild animals (including birds) are killed each year by Britain's estimated 8 million cats.

Public Perception Survey

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what surveys of public perceptions of her Department and of its areas of responsibility have taken place over the last 12 months; what the (a) title and (b) nature of these surveys was; what the findings of each survey were; where these findings have been published; what the cost of such surveys was; and if she will make a statement and place copies of the surveys in the Library; [176951]

(2) when she will reply to question 176951, tabled on 7 June, on surveys of public perceptions of her role. [188899]

Alun Michael: In April 2004 the Communications Directorate of Defra commissioned an omnibus tracking survey to measure public awareness of Defra, knowledge of its responsibilities and opinions on its performance.

The aim of the research was to provide a benchmark from which to track subsequent shifts in public awareness and opinion. The results will act as point of reference from which views on the Department's performance in the public arena and will help to identify where improvements need to be made.

I am placing a copy of the research in the Library of the House. The total cost of the omnibus tracking survey was £14,950 (excluding VAT). I apologise for the delay in answering these questions.

Supermarket Code of Practice

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent assessment she has made of the impact on farmers of the Supermarkets Code of Practice. [190125]

Alun Michael: The supermarkets Code of Practice seeks to regulate a limited number of practices engaged in by the major supermarkets in their dealings with their direct suppliers, relatively few of whom are farmers.

Responsibility for the Code rests with the Office of Fair Trading (OFT). In February OFT published a report of their review of the operation of the code. This can be found on their website at www.oft.gov.uk/news/press + releases/2004.htm.

The review concluded that there was a widespread belief among suppliers that the Code was not working properly, but it found no hard evidence for this belief. Given the reluctance of suppliers to provide specific evidence of alleged breaches of the Code, the OFT has commissioned a focused audit of the four supermarkets bound by the Code. The purpose of the audit is to establish hard facts about compliance with the Code as a basis for any further action. The OFT hopes to publish a report of the audit by the end of the year.

Warm Front Programme

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) how many leaflets have been produced and sent this year relating to the Warm Front programme; and what the cost of this exercise has been; [192301]

(2) what criteria were used in deciding to which addresses leaflets relating to the Warm Front programme grants should be sent; [192302]

(3) how many leaflets relating to the Warm Front programme she estimates have been delivered to addresses which (a) do and (b) do not qualify for grant status in 2004. [192303]

Mr. Morley: The Warm Front scheme managers, Powergen Warm Front Ltd. and Eaga Partnership are responsible for all marketing to promote the scheme.

A range of marketing techniques are used to reach those who may be eligible for assistance. This includes direct marketing, local and national campaigns and advertising through leaflets in various facilities such as doctors surgeries, libraries and community centres. The Scheme Managers also use range of techniques to target those areas likely to contain a higher proportion of eligible households. The success rate of the various marketing strategies are monitored by the Scheme Managers to assess their impact.

Detailed information on the delivery of these activities is commercially sensitive.

WALES

Consultants

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many consultancy firms or companies have been retained by the Department since June 2001; what the projects are for which each has been retained; and what the total is of the fees paid or incurred in each case. [193426]

Mr. Touhig: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by the Secretary of State for Wales on 12 March 2003, Official Report, column 129W.

Since the beginning of financial year 2004–05 the Wales Office have used only one consultant firm to provide floor plans, at a cost of £569.

Ministers' Private Offices

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what the running costs of Ministers' private offices in his Department have been in each year since 1997. [191375]

Mr. Hain: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my predecessor gave on 15 April 2002, Official Report, column 750W.

The Wales Office annual report was published in April 2004 as Cm 6228, instead of a departmental report. It is available in the Library and gives information on Wales Office running costs.

Press Officers

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many press officers the Department has employed in each of the past five years. [195271]

Mr. Touhig: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 3 June 2003, Official Report, column 314.

TRANSPORT

Air Cargo

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what volume of cargo arriving at each British airport has been (a) inspected and (b) searched in each year since 2001; [194706]

(2) how many staff have been employed to inspect and search air cargo at each airport in each year since 2001. [194711]

Charlotte Atkins: Responsibility for the security of cargo flown to UK airports from outside the country rests with the relevant authorities in the country of export. Cargo that is to be carried on any commercial flight originating in the UK, whether being flown to a domestic destination or internationally, must be screened to a standard sufficient to ensure that it is safe. The screening processes can be carried out either by the airline, or by a regulated agent in the vicinity of the airport, or by exporters whose security arrangements have been approved by DfT-accredited independent validators.

The Department carries out regular visits to cargo agents and airlines to monitor compliance with the regulations.

Air Navigation Services

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to change the basis for charging airlines for air navigation services; and if he will make a statement. [194537]

Charlotte Atkins: The Single European Sky (SES) regulations, which came into force on the 20 April 2004, require the development of a common charging scheme for the recovery of the costs of air navigation services provided to airlines and other airspace users. An implementing rule to specify the details of the new charging scheme is under development by the European Commission but has not yet been finalised.

Airport Security

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on security inspections undertaken at British airports. [194704]

Charlotte Atkins: The Department carries out an extensive programme of aviation security compliance monitoring activity. This includes announced and unannounced inspections and tests of the security procedures implemented by industry at our direction. We seek corrective action from industry where necessary.

Commercial Cargoes

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what powers he can seek to exercise with EU agreement to prevent the transportation of commercial cargoes within EU waters. [190627]

Mr. Jamieson: EU waters do not exist, as the territorial waters adjacent to the European coast belong to the states concerned.

Cycling

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the number of people in the UK who used a pedal cycle at least once a week in the last period for which figures are available. [194913]

Charlotte Atkins: It is estimated from the National Travel Survey for 2003 that 8 million residents of Great Britain aged 5 and over (14 per cent.) used a bicycle at least once a week.

Gatwick Express

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his plans for the Gatwick Express franchise. [194643]

Mr. Darling: The Strategic Rail Authority (SRA) is consulting on the Brighton Main Line Route Utilisation Strategy, which includes possible changes to non-stop London Victoria to Gatwick airport services. The current Gatwick Express franchise runs until 2011 and any change would be subject to commercial negotiation between the National Express Group and the SRA.

M6 Toll Expressway

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many representations he has received in response to his consultation on a proposed toll M6 Expressway. [193817]

Mr. Jamieson: As from the closing date of responses for the M6 Expressway consultation, we had received approximately 5,260 responses as well as a number of petitions that amount to around 3,000 signatures.

Mark 1 Trains

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to ensure that all Mark 1 slam door trains from the South of England rail network are withdrawn from service by 30 November 2005. [194712]

Mr. McNulty: The revised deadline recently set by the Health and Safety Executive for the withdrawal of Mark 1 and vehicles from passenger service is 30 November 2005. In fact, we expect all Mark 1s to have been taken out of service ahead of that deadline.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has caused the delay in the withdrawal of the Mark 1 slam door trains from the South of England rail network. [194645]

Mr. Darling: Power supplies to the south-of-the-Thames network are being upgraded to cater for new rolling stock, which draws more power than the Mark 1 trains it is replacing. The power upgrade project was not handled well by Railtrack but, the Strategic Rail Authority and Network Rail now have a firm grip on it. We expect it to be complete in good time to allow all Mark 1s to be removed from passenger service ahead of the deadline of November 2005 set by the Health and Safety Executive.

Motorcycle Direct Access Scheme

Lembit Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for the future of the Motorcycle Direct Access Scheme; and if he will make a statement. [194509]

Mr. Jamieson: The Advisory Group on Motorcycling (AGM), which submitted its report to Government on 2 August, commented that since the majority of novice riders choose to pass their test via the Direct Access route, as a relatively fast route to big bike riding, it is timely for Government to consider a range of issues in reviewing its effectiveness. It also recommended that the Government seek to negotiate a third EC licensing Directive to retain UK subsidiarity, in so far as possible, over training and testing arrangements, and especially with respect to Direct Access. A copy of the report is lodged with the House.

The AGM conducted a five-year programme of work and its report includes wide-ranging suggestions and recommendations for the future of motorcycling. The future of Direct Access is just one of a range of issues on training and testing discussed by the AGM. We are reviewing these carefully in drawing up a national motorcycling strategy that we are aiming to have developed by the end of the year. Should that review lead to proposals for change, we would consult before implementing them. Our review will need to take account of the third licensing Directive. The Commission's proposals do include arrangements which member states will have to abide by on testing to gain a licence to ride a motorcycle. But we aim to achieve a Directive which furthers the interests of road safety in the UK, and allows maximum latitude for us, and other member states, to tailor future testing arrangements to suit our own needs, and especially in respect of Direct Access.

Night Flights

Mrs May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidance the Government have given to the British Airports Authority on the membership of the BAA Consultative Committee on night flights; and if he will make a statement. [195200]

Charlotte Atkins: Separate consultative committees exist at BAA (and other) airports to discuss various matters relating to the management of each airport, including (but not limited to) environmental issues such as night flights. The Department issued revised non-statutory guidance on the constitution and operation of airport consultative committees in December 2003. This may be viewed on and downloaded from the Department's website:

www.dft.gov.uk/stellent/groups/dft_aviation/documents/page/dft_aviation_026254.hsp

Mrs May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research his Department has undertaken into the effects of sleep deprivation in the context of night flights. [195201]

Charlotte Atkins: There is no unique technical definition of sleep 'deprivation' but it is generally taken to mean substantial periods of reduced sleep duration over one or more nights. It is distinct from sleep 'disturbance' which is also variously defined, but in general can encompass both transient arousals from sleep, and longer-lasting awakenings.

The principal UK Government research in this area was the "Report of a Field Study of Aircraft Noise and Sleep Disturbance", published by the then Department of Transport in December 1992. This study, which followed earlier work based mainly on social surveys, focused mainly on objective disturbance to sleep rather than overall sleep deprivation, but was nevertheless able to conclude that:

> "Aircraft noise itself is most unlikely to increase sleep disturbance rates to the point at which after-effects upon health or performance would be noticeable" (p35)

A smaller-scale methodology trial was conducted for the Department in 1999 by ISVR[1] Southampton and others ("Aircraft Noise and Sleep-1999 UK Trial Methodology Study"—http://www.isvr.co.uk/environm/sleep.htm). This included laboratory as well as field investigation.

A review of research in this area was published on behalf of the then DETR in 2000 ("Adverse effects of night-time aircraft noise", NATS/DORA[2] R&D Report 9964). This discussed potential deprivation effects including reduction in total sleep duration, reduction in slow-wave sleep and sleep-fragmentation, and consequential next-day effects; but was again unable to determine that such phenomena occurred to any significant extent due to aircraft noise, although it noted that:

> " . . . Nevertheless, the possibility of noise-induced sleep loss cannot be ruled out in the case of especially sensitive people." (p9, para 2.26)

A summary of Government-sponsored research into aircraft noise and sleep disturbance is available on the DfT website:

Pedestrian Crossings

Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the cost of the Highways Agency's new specifications for upgrading puffin pedestrian crossings; and what the reasons are for the upgrading. [194380]

Mr. Jamieson: My Department estimates the additional cost of installing a new Puffin crossing compared with a new Pelican crossing to be approximately £2,500. This is due to additional items of equipment required for the crossing operation. The cost of converting an existing Pelican crossing to a Puffin crossing may be higher depending on local factors, and often equipment upgrades and other improvements are made at the same time. Local authorities are not obliged to change to Puffin crossings.

The Puffin crossing was developed in response to complaints arising from poor understanding and use of Pelican crossings by pedestrians and drivers, especially confusion caused by the flashing green man and flashing amber vehicle signals. With Puffin crossings, drivers are held at a red signal when pedestrians are crossing and the crossing time is automatically extended for slower pedestrians. The advantages for drivers are that the lights will change back to green sooner than at a Pelican crossing and they will not be stopped if pedestrians cross in a gap in the traffic before the signals change.

The Puffin crossing pedestrian signal is at the near-side of the road. This allows pedestrians to watch the traffic and the pedestrian signal simultaneously. The position of the near side signal is also helpful to visually impaired pedestrians who may not see clearly signals mounted at the far side of the road.

Port of Newhaven

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the levels of (a) vehicular and (b) pedestrian traffic using the Port of Newhaven have been in each of the last five years. [193906]

Mr. Jamieson: The available information is as follows:

Thousand

	Road goods vehicles and trailers	Passenger cars and buses	Ferry passengers
1998	24	136	621
1999	1	78	337
2000	—	73	313
2001	9	76	337
2002	24	78	379

Notes:

1. '—' less than half the final digit shown.
2. Ferry passenger figures include drivers of road goods vehicles buses and cars, accompanying passengers, and foot passengers. The figures include traffic both in and out of the port.

Port Police

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many officers there have been in each port police force in each year since 2001. [194702]

Mr. Jamieson: We do not have a breakdown available for each of the last four years as the Port Authorities are not required to supply employment figures to the Department. However information collected by the Department showed that in 2003 the seven port police forces in England and Wales employed a total of 198 sworn-in officers (exclusive of civilian support staff). Figures for the individual ports were as follows.

Port	Number
Bristol	25
Dover	52
Falmouth	4
Felixstowe	27
Liverpool	65
Tees and Hartlepool	12
Tilbury	13

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to change the (a) powers, (b) remit and (c) number of port police forces. [194703]

Mr. Jamieson: We have no current plans to change the powers, remit or number of port police forces.

Public-Private Partnership Arbiter

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport who funds the Office of the Public-Private Partnership Arbiter; and if he will make a statement on the future funding of the Office. [194644]

Mr. Darling: The PPP Arbiter is funded by grant in aid from the Department for Transport. The level of grant is agreed each year.

Rail Crossing Orders

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many applications for rail crossing (a) extinguishment and (b) diversion orders have been (i) submitted and (ii) approved in each of the last five years. [194931]

Mr. McNulty: Applications for rail crossing extinguishment and diversion orders are made by rail infrastructure controllers to local highway authorities, who retain records locally.

Rail Security

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many suspicious bags and packages have been inspected on (a) London Underground, (b) national rail services and (c) at railway stations in each year since 2001. [194710]

Mr. McNulty: The number of suspect packages that have been inspected for London Underground, national rail services and railway stations is as follows:

	Number
2000–01	312
2001–02	410
2002–03	302
2003–04	676

Regulation UN/ECE104

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will report on (a) discussions in and (b) outcomes of the recent meeting of the Working Party on Lighting and Light-signalling of the United Nations Economic Committee for Europe in respect to the German proposal to make Regulation UN/ECE 104 mandatory in UN/ECE 48; and if he will make a statement; [194675]

(2) pursuant to the answer of 16 July 2004, Official Report, column 1391W, on heavy goods vehicles, who has been awarded the contract to conduct a cost-benefit analysis of making ECE 104 mandatory; when he expects the report to be completed; when he expects to publish the final report; what the earliest date is that action could be taken to implement measures recommended by the report; and if he will make a statement. [194676]

Mr. Jamieson: My Department has awarded the contract to Ergonomics and Safety Research Ltd., part of Loughborough University. We expect the report to be completed and published by the end of February 2005. Any recommendations from the report would then be subject to consultation with interested parties in the UK.

Any requirement for UNECE Regulation 104 reflective contour marking tape to be fitted to new vehicles would have to be agreed and implemented at a European level.

At the recent meeting of the UNECE Working Group of technical experts on vehicle lighting ("ORE"), the delegates agreed to await the results of a cost-benefit analysis that is being carried out by the European Commission before deciding whether or not to adopt the proposal by Germany to mandate the installation of Regulation 104 tape on newly designed heavy vehicles.

A report of the discussions will be published on the UNECE website when it is available.

The proposal will be discussed again at the next GRE meeting scheduled for April 2005. If it were agreed at that meeting, then it could be applicable to new approvals under UNECE Regulation 48 no earlier than 1 July 2006.

As UNECE Regulation 48 is not mandatory in the UK for heavy vehicles, this would then require national legislation to require new vehicles to be fitted with the tape.

Road Noise

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much has been spent by the Highways Agency on main road noise protection measures in each of the last five years; and how much is planned to be spent in each of the next three years. [193620]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 25 October 2004]: The Highways Agency invests in three separate noise protection measures. These are concrete road resurfacing, noise fencing and bunds, and secondary glazing. The total approximate cost of noise mitigation measures for the last five years is £163 million. The detailed breakdown of this figure is set out in the following tables.

In addition, new road schemes will have included noise mitigation measures within the scheme design. It is not possible to separate this element from the overall scheme costs.

Planned major maintenance schemes involving carriageway resurfacing now use lower noise materials.

Concrete resurfacing

£ million

	Cost
1999–2000	7.5
2000–01	6.0
2001–02	0
2002–03	50.1
2003–04	78.0
Total	141.6

Noise fencing and bunds

£ million

	Cost
1999–2000	[1]—
2000–01	3.6
2001–02	6.5
2002–03	5.9
2003–04	4.7
Total	20.7

[1] Separate data not available.

Secondary glazing

2000–01	3,400
2001–02	205,987
2002–03	121,363
2003–04	98,230
Total	428,980

Forward programmes of work are agreed on an annual basis and it is not possible to give an explicit indication of the amount to be spent on noise protection measures over the next three years.

Sea Containers

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many sea containers have arrived at each British sea port in each year since 1997. [194698]

Mr. Jamieson: The available information is as follows:

[2] Not available

Note:

Information for 1997–99 is not directly comparable with subsequent years because of changes to the reporting system in 2000 (containers carried on ship by shipborne port to port trailers were included in 1997–99, but only partially included from 2000. The ports mainly affected by this change are Grimsby and Immingham, Tees and Hartlepool and London). Estimates have been made of the number of inwards containers in 1997–99, from inwards and outwards traffic combined.

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many staff have been employed at each port of entry to inspect and search sea containers in each year since 2001. [194700]

Mr. Jamieson: All ports handling international traffic must meet Government set standards for security. However, the actual number of staff that are employed by a port is a commercial decision for the ports themselves. We therefore do not hold this information centrally.

Security (Clapham Junction)

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on security procedures at Clapham Junction. [194708]

Mr. McNulty: All railways stations are required to comply with certain security standards as set out in the Department for Transport National Railways Security Programme and the Station Security Instruction issued on 27 May 2004 under the terms of the Railways Act 1993. It is not our practice to detail the required security measures or procedures at individual stations for obvious reasons.

Strategic Rail Authority

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will set a date for the abolition of the Strategic Rail Authority. [194652]

Mr. McNulty: The Secretary of State for Transport said at the time of the publication of the White Paper "The Future of Rail" (July 2004), that the Strategic Rail Authority would be wound up 'probably in the second half of next year'. The exact timing of the closure of the SRA is dependent on the necessary legislation being in place. The Government will introduce legislation as soon as Parliamentary time permits.

Vehicle Checks

Mr. McCabe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many vehicle identity checks under the Vehicle (Crimes) Act 2001 have been recorded in each month since April 2003. [195054]

Mr. Jamieson: The number of vehicle identity checks undertaken each month since the scheme began in April 2003 are recorded in the table.

Mr. McCabe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many vehicles have been presented to each test station for vehicle identity checks since April 2003; and what the pass rate is at each test centre. [195055]

Mr. Jamieson: The number of vehicle identity checks conducted at each test station and the respective pass rate for each station since the scheme began in April 2003 are listed in the following table.

Very few vehicles fail the vehicle identity check. This was expected as the aim of the scheme was to deter ringing crime rather than detect it.

Vehicle Registrations

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to review the regulations controlling the display of motor vehicles' registration letters and numbers. [194328]

Mr. Jamieson: The regulations that govern the display of motor vehicles' registration letters and numbers were last reviewed in 1999. The British number plate is considered to be one of the clearest in Europe and there are no plans to review the regulations again at present.

ADVOCATE-GENERAL

Cullen Inquiry

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Advocate-General (1) what role she played in the decision to place a 100-year closure on the Cullen Inquiry into the Dunblane tragedy; [193769]

(2) on what basis the decision was taken to place a 100-year closure on the Cullen Inquiry into the Dunblane tragedy; [193770]

(3) what statutory basis was cited in placing a 100-year closure on the Cullen Inquiry. [193771]

The Advocate-General for Scotland: I played no role in the decision to place a 100-year closure on the Cullen Inquiry into the Dunblane tragedy and, accordingly, had no part in any decision regarding closure periods relating to that Inquiry.

Given the above, I was not involved in any citation of a statutory basis for placing a 100-year closure on Cullen Inquiry papers. I understand, however, that there is no statutory basis for the closure of records created by Scottish public bodies. The Public Records (Scotland) Act 1937 ("the 1937 Act") makes provision for the preservation, care and custody of the public records of Scotland. The terms of the legislation are permissive. I understand that the criteria for closures longer than 30 years were defined in the 1993 White Paper on Open Government (Cm 2290) and that the principles set out in that White Paper are relevant in decision-making on disclosure.

TREASURY

Stamp Duty

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the average amount of stamp duty charged on a Right to Buy council property was in the last year for which figures are available. [194689]

Mr. Timms: The information requested is not available. It is not possible from our survey data to identify Right to Buy council properties.

Betting and Duties Gaming Act

Mr. Byers: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what steps he will take to ensure that advertisements at English Premier League football grounds comply with the Betting and Duties Gaming Act 1981; [195187]

(2) what action he plans to take to ensure that Mansion.com complies with the provisions of the Betting and Duties Gaming Act 1981. [195188]

John Healey: Enforcement of the provisions of the Betting and Gaming Duties Act is an operational matter for Her Majesty's Customs and Excise. They are pursuing this issue with the relevant parties.

Civil Servants

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the average length of continuous service for civil servants within the Department is. [194406]

Mr. Timms: The information requested is shown in the following table:

	Years
HM Treasury	10.0
HM Customs and Excise	16.9
Inland Revenue	14.7

Civil Partnership Bill

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate the Government have made of the amount in forgone tax liabilities likely to arise from the amendments to the Civil Partnership Bill made by the House of Lords. [194727]

Dawn Primarolo: The information requested is not available.

Cleethorpes Constituency

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many residents in Cleethorpes constituency, broken down by electoral ward, are aged between (a) 60 to 64, (b) 65 to 69, (c) 70 to 74, (d) 75 to 79 and (e) over 80 years. [194614]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Colin Mowl to Shona McIsaac dated 1 November 2004:

The National Statistician and Registrar General for England and Wales has been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many residents of Cleethorpes constituency, broken down by electoral ward, are aged between (a) 60 to 64, (b) 65 to 69, (c) 70 to 74, (d) 75 to 79, and (e) over 80 years. I am replying in his absence. (194614).

Mid-year population estimates are not available at ward level. I have therefore provided figures taken from the 2001 Census.

The attached table shows the number of people in each age group who were resident in each ward within Cleethorpes constituency on Census day (29 April 2001). The figures have been extracted from Table S001 on the 2001 Census Standard Tables for wards for England and Wales DVD, which is available on request from Census Customer Services (census.customerservices@ons.gov.uk).

Departmental Policies (South Dorset)

Jim Knight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out, with statistical evidence relating as closely as possible to the South Dorset constituency, the effects of changes to departmental policy since 1997 on the South Dorset constituency. [194964]

Mr. Timms: The Government has put in place a radical programme of both macroeconomic and microeconomic reform since 1997 to improve the economic performance of all parts of the UK. There is significant evidence that these policies have already yielded considerable benefits for the South Dorset constituency. For example, since May 1997, claimant unemployment has fallen by over three quarters, long-term unemployment overall has been almost eradicated and long-term youth unemployment has fallen by over 90 per cent.

The Neighbourhood Statistics Service provides a wide range of statistical information at Parliamentary Constituency level, taken from the 2001 Census and other sources. This service is freely available via the National Statistics website at http://neighbourhood.statistics.gov.uk/.

Departmental Publications (Access)

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many and what proportion of publications issued by his Department are available in (a) Braille, (b) autoprint, (c) large print and (d) easy read format. [194296]

Mr. Timms: All documents published by HM Treasury, HM Customs and Excise and Inland Revenue are available on request in Braille, large print, audio tape or CD. These Departments have dealt with over 28,000 such requests in the past year.

The Treasury routinely produces Braille and audio versions of the Budget, Pre-Budget Report and Spending Review Summary Leaflets and Press Notices. Websites for all three Departments enable resizing and printing of documents in large text, are compatible with text-to-speech software, and contain links to pages providing advice for those who need to adapt on-line documents for ease of reading.

ECOFIN

Mr. Hood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the outcome was of the ECOFIN Council held on 21 October; what the Government's stance was on the issues discussed, including its voting record; and if he will make a statement. [194071]

Mr. Gordon Brown: The Council reviewed measures the Netherlands has taken following the Recommendation it issued under the EU's excessive deficit procedure. On the basis of a statement by the Commission, the Council took note that, at present, the action taken by the Dutch authorities in response to the Council's Recommendation of 2 June appears adequate to put an end, by 2005, to the present excessive deficit situation in the Netherlands. The Commission and the Council will continue to monitor the action taken.

The Council was briefed by the Commission on last month's fiscal notifications by member states. Six member states—Greece, Germany, Italy, Hungary Slovakia and Cyprus—would record 2004 deficits significantly higher than previously reported.

The Commission detailed that Greece's annual fiscal deficits were at least 2 percentage points higher than those stated in its returns every year starting from 2000. The Council looks forward to a detailed report from the Commission in time for the next ECOFIN, on Greece's deficit and debt data back to 1997.

Poland highlighted the fact that Eurostat's decision on the accounting treatment of pension funds had added up to 2 percentage points to their deficit. Ministers raised concerns that statistical treatment should not result in perverse incentives to undertake necessary pension reforms and will return to the issue.

The Council discussed the potential administrative burden for business of complying with legislation and regulation. The Council supported the development of a common European methodology, based on the recommendations of the EPC, to measure the administrative burden of EU legislation and regulation by, among others setting up pilot projects to determine the technical characteristics of the methodology and its application. The Council adopted Conclusions calling for the Commission to implement an administrative cost assessment for its proposals by 2005. ECOFIN will return to the topic of regulation, in particular the issue of competitiveness testing, later in the year, and regulatory reform will be discussed at 5 November European Council.

The Council took note of the presentation by the Commission on: the 2003 annual report on protection of the EU's financial interests in the fight against fraud; a proposal for an anti-fraud action plan for 2004 and 2005; and a proposal for a Regulation on mutual assistance in the protection of the EU's financial interests. The Council was also briefed by the Commission on the conclusion and ratification of the EU's anti-fraud agreement with Switzerland and on a 12-year anti-contraband agreement reached by the Commission and 10 member states with Philip Morris International.

The Council held an exchange of views on flexibility arrangements under the budget and the Commission's proposals for the 2007–13 period. The Council concluded that the current levels of flexibility were adequate, and that any changes to the Inter-Institutional Agreement would need to be taken in the context of the next Multi-Annual Financial Framework (2007–13). The Council received a presentation notifications by the Commission on proposals for modifying the EU's system of own resources.

Over lunch, Ministers were informed of the outcome of the Eurogroup meeting held on 20 October. They discussed the EU's financial framework for the 2007–13 period and met Mr. James Wolfensohn, President of the World Bank, for a discussion of progress toward the Millennium Development Goals.

Jon Cunliffe, Managing Director Macro-economic Policy and International Finance of the Treasury, represented the UK at ECOFIN.

Employment (Cleethorpes)

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many jobs have been created in Cleethorpes constituency since 1997. [194188]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Shona McIsaac, dated 1 November 2004:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question about jobs created in Cleethorpes (194188)

While statistics of new jobs created are not available explicitly, statistics from surveys enable comparisons to be made of net changes in numbers of jobs from year to year.

The attached table shows the information requested, relating to jobs in Cleethorpes, for 1997 and 2002, which is the latest year available.

Number of employees[1] with workplace in Cleethorpes parliamentary constituency, 1997 and 2002

Number, percentage

	Total
1997	27,700
2002	29,700
Change from 1997 to 2002[2]
Absolute	2,000
Percentage	7.1

[1] Employee jobs only, not self-employed jobs.

[2] The 1997 to 2002 change has been rounded to the nearest hundred separately from rounded levels for 1997 and 2002.

Financial Services Authority

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the performance of the Financial Services Authority in (a) recruiting and (b) retaining appropriate staff for discharging its role of regulating businesses in the financial sector. [194231]

Mr. Timms: The Financial Services Authority (FSA) is operationally independent of Government. The management of the recruitment and retention of appropriate FSA staff is a matter for the FSA Board.

The FSA annual report for 2003–04 noted that appropriate strategies are in place for staff recruitment and retention and that these are key to the delivery of the FSA's business priorities.

Household Debt

David Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent assessment has been made of the effect in socio-economic classes (a) 5, (b) 6, (c) 7 and (d) 8 of household debt on income levels in (i) North West Leicestershire, (ii) the East Midlands and (iii) England. [194503]

Mr. Timms: Information is not available in the form requested. Research on the relationship between debt and income includes the work of the Task Force on Tackling Over-indebtedness and the related Household Survey (www.dti.gov.uk/ccp/topicsl/overindebtedness.htm), and research reports such as "Characteristics of families in debt and the nature of indebtedness" (211, June 2004, www.dwp.gov.uk/iad/asd5/rports2003–2004/rrep211.asp) and "Low-income Families and Household Spending" (192, July 2003, www.dwp.gov.uk/iad/asd5/rrep192.asp). The Government set out its policy in the Consumer Credit White Paper (Cm 6040).

Immigration

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the level of net immigration into (a) England and (b) the United Kingdom over the next 20 years. [195125]

Mr. Timms: The most recent estimates come from the Government Actuary's latest (2003-based) national population projections. The information requested is available from the GAD website at: http://www.gad.gov.uk/Population/2003/methodology/migrass.htm

Income Tax

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many pensioners were paying income tax on the latest date for which figures are available; and if he will break down the total amount into amounts paid by each gender in five-year age ranges. [194837]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer the hon. Member to table 3.12 'Income and tax for the elderly, by region and country' on the Inland Revenue website at www.inlandrevenue.gov. uk/stats/income_distribution/table-312–2001–02.xls.

The total amount of income tax in 2001–02 paid by pensioners aged 65 and over by each gender and five-year age ranges is given in the following table.

	Amount of income tax (£ million)
Age range	Male	Female
65 to 69 years	2,410	710
70 to 74 years	1,580	620
75 to 79 years	980	490
80 to 84 years	470	350
85 + years	280	300
All (65 + years)	5,710	2,470

Note:
Estimates have been rounded so may not sum to the totals.

Estimates are based upon the Survey of Personal Incomes 2001–02.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect of increasing income tax on levels of tax avoidance. [195263]

Dawn Primarolo: This Government has committed itself not to increase the basic or top rates of income tax. Tax avoidance undermines the principle of fairness that underpins the tax system and the Government keeps under review factors that may influence the behaviours of taxpayers. When considering changes in tax policy, the Government takes into account behavioural impacts that have a significant and quantifiable effect upon the level of tax avoidance.

Local Councils

Mr. Drew: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the ability of town and parish councils administering funds on behalf of arm's length projects or organisations which are largely funded by Government to reclaim VAT expenditure incurred on behalf of those projects or organisations. [195294]

Dawn Primarolo: Local authorities can reclaim the VAT incurred on goods and services they purchase in connection with either their taxable activities or their non-business activities.

There are long-established guidelines on the recovery of VAT when other organisations are involved as well. To qualify for refunds in those circumstances, a local authority should place the order for the purchase; receive the goods or services ordered; be in receipt of a VAT invoice addressed to it; and pay for the purchase from its own funds.

Red Diesel

Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many litres of red diesel were purchased in the UK in each year since 1997. [194212]

John Healey: Hydrocarbon oils clearance figures are published by Customs and Excise in the Hydrocarbon Oils Bulletin a copy of which can be found on the UK Trade Information website www.uktradeinfo.com.

Royal Residences

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much has been spent in the last 10 years on refurbishment of the property in Windsor Great Park recently leased by HRH the Duke of York; and from what sources. [191343]

Mr. Timms: Under the terms of which the Queen Mother occupied Royal Lodge, the internal works were the responsibility of her office while The Crown Estate was responsible for the maintenance of the exterior of the building and the surrounding grounds. Total Crown Estate expenses on all such maintenance (exterior building and grounds) over the last 10 years amounts to £711,087. During that time no external work has been undertaken which could be described as refurbishment.

The Crown Estate has incurred no expenditure on internal refurbishment work.

Shareholder Executive

Gregory Barker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what appointments he has made to the Shareholder Executive. [192783]

Mr. Boateng: The Treasury makes no appointments to the Shareholder Executive.

Sustainable Energy (CHP Provisions) Order

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures (a) the Office for National Statistics, (b) the Board of Inland Revenue, (c) HM Customs and Excise and (d) his Department (i) has undertaken and (ii) plans to undertake to comply with the Sustainable Energy (CHP Provisions) Order 2003. [194436]

John Healey: Neither Inland Revenue nor Customs and Excise uses CHP. The estate properties do not generally lend themselves to offering good opportunities for CHP as there is little industrial or high consumption usage on individual facilities. Currently, PFI contractors are looking at certain Customs and Excise and Inland Revenue sites to see if they have the potential to use CHP.

The heating to the Treasury HQ in 1 Horse Guards Road is provided by the Whitehall district heating system, which is supplied from CHP plant.

ONS are currently negotiating with OGC for a CHP energy supply to meet the framework target. ONS purchase 100 per cent. of the Southport site's energy from renewable sources, this is equivalent to 10 per cent. of the estate's requirement. ONS are about to commission a feasibility study for a CHP plant at the Newport site.

Unemployment (Greater London)

Tom Cox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of people over the age of 60 years living within the Greater London area have been unemployed for longer than 12 months. [194154]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Colin Mowl to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 1 November 2004:

The National Statistician has been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question about unemployment. I am replying in his absence. (194154)

It is estimated that for the three months ending August 2004, the proportion of economically active people over the age of 60 (i.e. those either in a job or seeking a job) resident in the Greater London area who had been unemployed for 12 months or more, was 1.6%.

These estimates from the Labour Force Survey are, as with any sample survey, subject to sampling variability.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Ancient Churches

26. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners what representations the Commissioners have made to the Government about the use of public funds for the upkeep of ancient churches. [194593]

Sir Stuart Bell: The Commissioners have made no such representations. However, as members of the Church of England's Church Heritage Forum, they are joined in the statement "Building faith in our future" which celebrates the unique contribution of church buildings and seeks the kind of partnerships with Government, local authorities and others that will enhance that contribution for the benefit of future generations.

CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

Civil Servants (Yorkshire)

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how many full-time equivalent jobs (a) his Department and (b) its executive agencies had in (i) Yorkshire and the Humber and (ii) the City of York in (A) 1997 and (B) the latest year for which figures are available. [191838]

Mr. Lammy: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 25 October 2004, Official Report, column 1053W, by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Cabinet Office.

Licensing

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what the estimated saving to the Magistrates Courts Service is of the transfer of licensing functions from magistrates courts to local authorities. [194112]

Mr. Leslie: On 10 July 2003, the Licensing Act received Royal Assent. The Act transfers responsibility for the administration of licences from magistrates courts to licensing authorities, although magistrates will hear appeals against the licensing authorities' decisions.

Currently, the principle is that the cost to magistrates courts of the administration of licensing is covered by the licensing fees charged. As such there is no separate budget in the magistrates courts allocated to licensing which will be saved due to the changes. Fee levels for the new system are still being negotiated but they should allow the licensing authorities to recover the full costs associated with their administration, inspection and enforcement functions under the Licensing Act 2003.

Mental Capacity

Paul Holmes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what steps he plans to take to ensure that all individuals who manage the finances of those who lack capacity to manage their own finances (a) are bound by the first principles of the Mental Capacity Bill and (b) are subject to the safeguards and the new criminal offences that are in the Mental Capacity Bill. [194736]

Mr. Leslie: The principles in the Mental Capacity Bill will apply to all those who act under the provisions of the Bill on behalf of those who lack capacity. This will include anyone doing an act in connection with care or treatment to which clause 5 applies, attorneys under any Lasting Powers of Attorney, and deputies appointed by the Court of Protection.

It will also include any person appointed a receiver under Part 7 of the Mental Health Act 1983.

The Bill will be accompanied by a Code of Practice, which provides detailed guidance on how to comply with the principles of the Bill. The Public Guardianship Office will produce guidance for attorneys, deputies and receivers advising them of the principles of the Bill and that they must act in the best interest of the person lacking capacity at all times. The Department for Constitutional Affairs and Department of Health will provide guidance for health and social care professionals and all those who care for someone with incapacity.

The principles will not formally apply to attorneys under existing Enduring Powers of Attorney (EPAs). At the time of execution of the EPA the parties have a legitimate expectation that the power will be capable of being used in the future on the same basis as the one on which it was created. In addition, we do not know how many EPAs exist as they do not have to be registered before use, and therefore we have no means of contacting the attorneys to advise them of the Bill's first principles. However those appointed in such a capacity will still have fiduciary and common law duties towards the person lacking capacity. Guidance issued by the Public Guardianship Office advises attorneys that they must act in the best interests of the client at all times. We will be promoting the principles of the Bill as good practice for those involved with people lacking capacity.

Donees of EPAs and receivers are already monitored in similar fashion to the provisions for monitoring of attorneys and deputies in the Mental Capacity Bill. The Bill does, however, provide greater safeguards for registration of powers of attorney. People with capacity may therefore wish to replace their Enduring Power of Attorney with a lasting power of attorney, the benefits of which we will actively publicise.

The new criminal offence proposed in the Mental Capacity Bill is intended to capture those individuals who are in a position of trust, care and power over people who are then ill-treated or neglected. If an attorney under an EPA has the care of a person who lacks or whom he reasonably believes to lack capacity and ill-treats or wilfully neglects that person, he may be guilty of the offence.

Paul Holmes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what checks are undertaken by the Court of Protection if there is a complaint made about a receiver misusing the patient's money. [194737]

Mr. Leslie: All receivers are required to account annually to the Court of Protection. Any complaints of misuse on the part of a receiver are investigated by the Public Guardianship Office, which is the administrative arm of the Court. The outcome of the investigation is then referred to the Court for a decision on what action, if any, should be taken against the receiver. The Court has the power to replace a receiver and/or call in the security bond that the receiver deposited when the receivership order was made.

Paul Holmes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what checks are undertaken by (a) the Court of Protection and (b) the Public Guardianship Office to ensure that an individual's monies are being used in his best interests. [194814]

Mr. Leslie: Receivers appointed by the Court of Protection are required to account annually for monies received and spent.

The Lord Chancellor's Visitors report to the Court and the Public Guardianship Office (PGO) on whether clients' needs are being met and make suggestions on how to improve their quality of life.

ELECTORAL COMMISSION

General Elections

27. Bob Spink: To ask the hon. Member for Gosport, representing the Speaker's Committee on the Electoral Commission what recent advice the Electoral Commission has given regarding the regulation of General Elections. [194594]

Mr. Viggers: As provided for in the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act 2000, and other relevant legislation, the Electoral Commission regularly provides advice to political parties and others on the rules relating to elections.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

CAFCASS

Mr. Laxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what guidance is given to CAFCASS as to whether a parent should be present when a child is interviewed during proceedings to decide how much contact each parent should have with the child. [193013]

Margaret Hodge: The CAFCASS Service Principles and Standards state:

> "3.5 Except where the Practitioner is acting as a Reporting Officer, all children who are the subject of proceedings will normally be seen on one or more occasions by them."

"3.6 The Practitioner will also take all reasonable steps to see adult parties to the proceedings and any other relevant children and adults unless directed otherwise by the Court."

Thus, when the practitioner is acting in private law proceedings relating to contact between children and their parents following separation or divorce, CAFCASS expects that its practitioners will see all children who are involved in a case. CAFCASS practitioners have high level skills and experience and are relied upon to exercise their professional judgement in each case. It is important that CAFCASS practitioners tailor their approach to working with children and families, in accordance with the individual circumstances of each case.

Parental presence, during an interview with a child will depend on the following factors:

the circumstances specific to the case;

the age and developmental stage of the child; and the practitioner's professional judgement.

Rule 4.11 (1) of the Family Proceedings Rules 1991 requires the practitioner, among other things, to "have regard to the ascertainable wishes and feelings of the child concerned considered in the light of the child's age and understanding".

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what proportion of families involved in separation and divorce cases were referred to the Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Service in (a) 2001–02, (b) 2002–03 and (c) 2003–04. [194218]

Margaret Hodge: Such information as is available is in the table. It refers to the total number of private law cases referred to the Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Service (CAFCASS) and residence and contact applications to the courts (the cases most commonly associated with divorce and separation).

	Number
CAFCASS referrals (financial years)
2001–02	17,352
2002–03	34,761
2003–04	33,803
Private law contact and residence applications (calendar years)
2001	92,382
2002	97,323
2003	106,534

Notes:

1. Family Justice System (FJS) Data obtained from Judicial Statistics 2001–2003, published by the Department for Constitutional Affairs.

2. FJS Statistics are measured by calendar year and CAFCASS statistics are measured by financial year. The two sets of data are not comparable and therefore a proportion cannot be derived. In addition, there is a time lag between application to court and referral to a CAFCASS officer, and there may be more than one application per family.

3. FJS applications are in respect of all tiers of the courts and they show the total number of applications for residence and contact orders, whether or not they are withdrawn or refused.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what percentage of cases dealt with by the Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Service (CAFCASS) in (a) 2001–02, (b) 2002–03 and (c) 2003–04 resulted in orders reached by consent following intervention by CAFCASS staff. [194219]

Margaret Hodge: The Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Service does not collect the data requested. CAFCASS's intervention has helped parties to reach agreement in many cases. CAFCASS is aiming to collect such data in the future.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what role the presumption of co-parenting plays in the policy of the Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Service. [194221]

Margaret Hodge: The Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Service strongly supports the principles of children maintaining a strong relationship with both parents where it is safe for them to do so. Co-operation between parents who separate is critical for the well-being of the children and is encouraged by CAFCASS. The service works to ensure that both parents and wider family members continue to have a real and meaningful relationship with their children through high quality, supported contact arrangements.

Capital Funding

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills pursuant to the answer of 26 October 2004, Official Report, column 1156W, on capital funding, if he will list the specific capital programmes and the expenditure on each for (a) 2001–02, (b) 2002–03, (c) 2003–04, (d) 2004–05 and (e) 2005–06. [194953]

Mr. Miliband: I will write to the hon. Member with the information requested and place a copy of my reply in the Library.

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills pursuant to the answer of 26 October 2004, Official Report, column 1156W, on capital funding, what capital funding was received in (a) 2001–02, (b) 2002–03, (c) 2003–04, (d) 2004–05 and (e) 2005–06 by local education authorities (LEAs) and schools within LEAs taking part in the pilot and wave 1 projects in Building Schools for the Future. [194954]

Mr. Miliband: We do not hold information in the form requested. The following table shows total capital allocations to date to LEAs and schools in wave 1 of Building Schools for the Future (BSF), including pathfinders, from 2001–02 to 2005–06. These figures include specific devolved formula capital allocations to schools. However, since local authorities devolve other funding to schools, and formulaic allocations will include abatements for BSF areas to avoid double funding, actual information of capital received by schools is held locally.

Ann Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much has been spent on the (a) repair and (b) modernisation of school buildings in the London borough of Hounslow in each of the past five years. [192588]

Mr. Miliband: We do not hold this information centrally. The bulk of capital funding is allocated to local authorities and schools by formula so that they can decide their priorities for investment in line with locally decided asset management plans. Records of how this funding is used should therefore be held locally.

The following table shows the capital allocations to Hounslow and its schools from 2000–01 to 2004–05.

Children Bill

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how proposals in the Children Bill [Lords] on information exchange and proposed new systems developed by local authorities will deal with children who enter and leave the jurisdiction of England from or to other parts of the UK; and what discussions his officials have had with officials from the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety in Northern Ireland on this matter. [192915]

Margaret Hodge [holding answer 25 October 2004]: Clause 12 of the Children Bill, now before Parliament, sets out proposals for databases, to be established at local, regional or national level or a combination thereof, containing information about all children in England. The databases are a tool to facilitate early intervention and help ensure effective action to meet the needs of children before a crisis develops. Practitioners working with children will be able to see who else is working with a child and if a concern about a child has been recorded. This will prompt them to get in touch with other practitioners and, together, gain a better, all-round picture of the child's needs and how they might best be met.

Our intention is that children entering England from other parts of the UK will be included on the databases following their first contact with the health or education service or another children's service. Although the databases will not contain detailed case data, they will include basic identifying data and contact details of professionals who are or have recently been working with a child, and an indicator if a professional has a concern about that child and therefore wishes to be contacted by others. We recognise the desirability of having effective mechanisms for transfer of such data between the databases in England and any appropriate systems in Northern Ireland, Wales and Scotland.

Clause 29 of the Children Bill contains provisions for Wales which parallel those for England. My officials will work closely with the Welsh Assembly as databases are implemented in both countries to ensure data can be transferred.

Although Scotland does not yet have parallel provisions in legislation, a number of information-sharing pilots in Scottish local authority areas are under way and officials from the Scottish Executive are keeping in close touch with my officials as the proposals are developed.

My officials are also in contact with officials in the Department for Health, Social Services and Public Safety in Northern Ireland to improve mutual understanding of the position in respective countries and will continue to develop these links as the DHSSPS develops its Strategy for Children in Need for children's services.

Children's Commissioner

Stephen Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what role children and young people will have in the selection of a Children's Commissioner for England. [194132]

Margaret Hodge: I confirm that the Government intend to involve children and young people in the selection of the Children's Commissioner. A Government amendment to the Children Bill was tabled on 26 October 2004, which would require the Secretary of State, to the extent and in such manner as he saw fit, to involve children in the appointment of the Children's Commissioner.

Contact Centres

Mrs May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills pursuant to his answer of 25 October 2004, Official Report, column 977W, on contact centres, how much funding was announced in March for establishing supervised contact centres; if he will list the 14 new centres; and what the cost of each is expected to be. [194886]

Margaret Hodge: Funding has been made available to establish 14 new supervised contact centres. This funding was announced in March 2004, just before the start of the current financial year. £2.5 million of the total £3.5 million DfES/Sure Start joint investment fund is designated to support the operation of these new services in the period up until March 2006. The 14 supervised centres and the amounts allocated to each are as follows:

York (Family Mediation Service)	190,519
Stoke (Mediation Advisory Service)	174,370
Nottinghamshire (Nottinghamshire Domestic Violence Forum)	148,500
North Wiltshire (Family Mediation Service)	140,508
Merseyside (National Youth Advocacy Service)	196,000
Blackburn (Diocese)	137,785
South London (African Caribbean Family Mediation Service)	254,066
Cambridge (Pyramids Family Centres)	40,000
West London (Domestic Violence Intervention Programme)	201,565
Scunthorpe (The Forge)	68,050
Leeds (Family Service Unit)	157,423
Northamptonshire (Spurgeons)	94,441
NCH Herefordshire	209,263
NCH Bristol	265,209
Total	2,477,699

Education Maintenance Allowances

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) how many and what percentage of young people starting post-16 education in 2004 have been awarded education maintenance allowances in (a) Kirklees and (b) England; [194068]

(2) how many students have been awarded education maintenance allowance in (a) Kirklees and (b) England in 2004; and how much each was awarded. [194069]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: By the end of September 1,292 young people from the Kirklees local authority area had received an EMA Notice of Entitlement, of which 987 had enrolled for EMA at a school or college and 899 had received an EMA payment. The percentage of 16-year-olds awarded EMA in Kirklees as a proportion of the total estimated number in full time education is 24 per cent.—987 enrolled on EMA compared to an estimated 4,120 16-year-olds in full-time education. These figures continue to improve as those who applied late have had their applications assessed and are enrolled for payment.

Nationally, it is estimated that just over half (50.5 per cent.) of 16-year-olds in full-time education will be eligible for EMA. By the end of September 150,000 16-year-olds had received an EMA Notice of Entitlement, 113,000 had enrolled for EMA with their school or college, and 103,600 had received an EMA payment. The numbers enrolled for EMA at the end of September represents about 22 per cent. of the estimated 16-year-old population in full-time education (506,310). The percentage of those on EMA receiving the full £30 award is 78 per cent., with 10 per cent. receiving the £20 rate and 12 per cent. the £10 rate.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. George Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what guidance is provided to procuring authorities within the education system about the treatment of PFI arrangements in the accounts of public bodies. [193890]

Mr. Miliband: For schools PFI projects, the appropriate guidance is the Treasury Taskforce Technical Note 1: How to Account for PFI Transactions.

Social Inclusion

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department is taking to improve social inclusion for children and young people with complex health needs. [193338]

Margaret Hodge: The children's national service framework sets standards for children's health services and social services, and how these services should interface with education. The NSF addresses the particular needs of children who are often at risk of achieving poor outcomes and devotes an entire standard to services for disabled children and children and with complex health needs.

The children's national service framework addresses the needs of the 'whole child' and recognises that services must promote social inclusion for all children to enable them to participate in childhood, family and community activities. Children with complex health needs and their families are also expected to receive the information that enables them to make decisions about how their services are designed and delivered. From September 2005 and over the following three years, joint area reviews of children's services between Ofsted, the Healthcare Commission, the Commission for Social Care Inspection and other inspectorates, will assess the extent to which NHS and local authorities are able to demonstrate that their services are improving and promoting inclusion.

Teachers' Pay (Lincolnshire)

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the average full-time equivalent gross pay of teachers in the state sector in (a) North East Lincolnshire and (b) North Lincolnshire was (i) across all grades and (ii) at each grade in each year since 1997. [194183]

Mr. Miliband: The following table gives the gross average salary, across all grades and for each grade, of full-time regular qualified teachers in the maintained schools sector in North East Lincolnshire and North Lincolnshire local education authorities in each year from 1997. The latest information available is for 2003.

	1997	1998	1999	2000	2001	2002	2003

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

School Sport

12. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans her Department has to promote sport in schools; and if she will make a statement. [194577]

Mr. Caborn: The Government is investing over £1 billion in England to transform school sport. This is delivering an ambitious Public Service Agreement target to increase the percentage of 5–16 year olds who spend a minimum of two hours each week on high quality PE and school sport to 75 per cent. by 2006 and to 85 per cent. by 2008.

Gambling Bill

13. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, what representations she has received regarding grandfather rights for certain gambling operators in the Gambling Bill. [194578]

Mr. Caborn: All sectors of the industry have sought assurances that gambling which is now permitted under the current law will continue to be permitted under the Bill. Where we are satisfied that this reassurance can be provided without compromising necessary protections for children and the vulnerable we have provided it; and Schedule 15 of the Bill makes provision for this. But in other cases we have made it clear that protection in the public interest must take priority.

15. Alistair Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, what assessment she has made of the effect on the number of people with gambling problems of the provisions of the Gambling Bill. [194581]

Mr. Caborn: We are providing in the Gambling Bill a comprehensive package of new protections for children and the vulnerable which are designed to ensure that problem gambling does not increase. We shall, however, keep the position under close and continuing review, and will not hesitate to make use of the powers in the Bill to adjust the balance of regulation should the need arise. Without the Bill it is very likely that problem gambling in Britain will increase, as those concerned with prevention and treatment have recognised.

Regional Opera Companies

14. Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, what plans she has to increase the support given to regional opera companies. [194579]

Estelle Morris: Arts Council England investment in regional opera will increase by almost £1 million next year, bringing funding to over £17 million.

This increasing level of support for regional opera funds the equivalent of 57 touring weeks every year, bringing high quality opera to every region.

A further £500,000 has been allocated to smaller scale touring opera, producing an additional 124 performances in 89 venues across the country.

British Grand Prix

16. Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, what representations her Department has made regarding the future of the British grand prix. [194582]

Mr. Caborn: While we support and desire a British Grand Prix at Silverstone, the Government's role has been one of dialogue and facilitation. The current commercial negotiations between the British Racing Drivers Club (BRDC) and Formula One Management (FOM) to reach an agreement to secure the British Grand Prix on the 2005 Formula 1 Calendar are a matter for them. However, where appropriate, Derek Mapp, Chair of the East Midlands Development Agency and I have done everything we can to help bring the parties together to broker a suitable outcome.

National Guild of Jesters

17. Mr. Dhanda: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, what recent discussions she has had with the National Guild of Jesters. [194583]

Mr. Caborn: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has not had discussions with the National Guild of Jesters. The Minister for Media and Heritage has recently written to the hon. Member for Salisbury about the concerns of the National Guild with the recent appointment of a jester by English Heritage.

Olympic Games

19. Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the impact will be on North Yorkshire of the Olympic bid for London 2012. [194585]

Mr. Caborn: Yorkshire Forward fully support the London bid for the 2012 Olympics. We and London 2012 will work with them and with RDAs throughout the country to ensure that North Yorkshire and the whole UK can benefit.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment she has made of the benefits to Romford of holding the 2012 Olympics in London. [192658]

Mr. Caborn: The London Development Agency have advised that potential benefits to Romford would include:

The opportunity to motivate young Romford schoolchildren to take up sport and get more active,

Romford residents will be just minutes by train from the biggest sporting and cultural event on earth,

The games will need the support of a huge variety of businesses,

And people in the local community will be free to access job opportunities in sectors such as tourism, construction, food and the media.

Organisations like the London Development Agency and the East London Business Alliance have recognized these opportunities and are fully supportive of the bid.

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport whether she has made an assessment of the response of voluntary organisations in relation to the proposed London Olympics. [194171]

Mr. Caborn: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has noted the response of voluntary organisations to the London Olympic bid. Some organisations have expressed concern at the potential impact of the proposed Olympic lottery games on income to the existing lottery good causes. There is, however, widespread support in the voluntary sector for the Olympic bid generally, because of the benefits the games would bring to the UK, including opportunities for volunteering.

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans she has for events in the proposed London Olympics to be held (a) in Scotland and (b) outside London. [194172]

Mr. Caborn: London 2012 is responsible for selecting the venues for the bid to host the Olympic and Paralympic games and their plans are for the Olympic football competition to be held in stadia across the country including Hampden Park, Glasgow. Sailing events will take place in Weymouth and Portland, the rowing events at Eton Dorney and mountain bike events in Brentwood.

Key agencies in Scotland and throughout the UK have been meeting to co-ordinate arrangements and to agree how best to maximise the benefits that can be derived from a London Olympics.

In addition the Cultural Olympiad will take place across the UK over the four years up to and including 2012 and the 2012 Olympic Torch Relay is likely to involve every major city and town throughout the UK over several months.

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what her most recent assessment is of the cost to public funds of the proposed London Olympics in 2012; and if she will make a statement. [194207]

Mr. Caborn: As set out in the Command Paper 5867, laid before the House in June 2003, provision has been made for a public sector funding package of up to £2.375 billion to fund Olympic costs.

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport whether Sportscotland will be contributing funding for the proposed Olympic games in London in 2012. [194208]

Mr. Caborn: In the event of a successful London bid, the sports lottery distributors, including Sportscotland, will contribute a total of £340 million to the overall lottery funding package of up to £1.5 billion. This money will be used to fund elite sport and associated sports infrastructure development. Sport England has already committed £40 million towards the development of an aquatics centre in the Olympic Park. Exactly how the remaining £300 million expenditure will be allocated is a matter for the sports lottery distributors. They are now collectively considering how best to contribute to this element of the lottery funding package in order to maximise Olympic opportunities for elite sport and on-going community legacies. Any expenditure by Sportscotland as part of its contribution will be entirely for the benefit of Scotland, for investment in its elite athletes and associated sports infrastructure.

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what her latest estimate is of the proportion of funding for the proposed London Olympics which will come from the national lottery. [194211]

Mr. Caborn: As set out in paragraph 12 of the Command Paper 5867, laid before the House in June 2003, the expectation is that public funding for Olympic staging will be met in the ratio 11:24, where 11 is the Olympic precept in London, and where 24 is grants by the national lottery. Additionally, as set out in paragraph 11 of the Command Paper, up to £300 million from the sports lottery distributors will be used to fund elite sport and associated sports infrastructure development. A substantial proportion of the overall costs will be met by Olympic revenues or by the private sector.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much of the allocated spending for the 2012 Olympics will be used on (a) construction costs and (b) promotional costs. [191901]

Mr. Caborn: We are in the process of finalising the budget for staging the Olympic and Paralympic Games in London in 2012 should we be successful in our bid. However, the current intention, which is unlikely to change significantly, is that the bulk of the expenditure will go on the construction of venues, provision of transport facilities and the various operational costs associated with staging the games, and that the promotional costs will only be a small proportion of the total.

Mr. Mark Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) whether Point 17 of the Olympic Funding: Memorandum of Understanding between the Government and the Mayor of London requires council tax payers in London to fund any overspend associated with the proposed London 2012 Olympics; [194016]

(2) whether the Olympic Funding: Memorandum of Understanding between the Government and the Mayor of London requires the Government to fund any cost overspend associated with the proposed Olympics in London in 2012. [194017]

Mr. Caborn: The robust and business-like approach to planning and financial controls on the part of the Olympic Stakeholders is designed to prevent such overspend. As the memorandum of understanding, laid before Parliament as Command Paper 5867, states in paragraph 17, in the event of any overspend the Government will be the ultimate guarantor. We further reported this to Parliament in a departmental minute dated 2 December 2003. As the memorandum goes on to say, the Government expects to discharge that responsibility (should it arise) in a sharing agreement to be agreed as appropriate with the Mayor of London and through seeking additional national lottery funding in amounts to be agreed at the time. At this stage however, no such specific sharing arrangements exist. Whatever the arrangements which might apply, levels of any London council tax precept would be a matter for the Mayor of London.

Arts Grants (Barking and Dagenham)

Jon Cruddas: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much the arts in the London borough of Barking and Dagenham have received in Government grants in each year since 2001. [194422]

Estelle Morris: The Department for Culture, Media and Sport does not fund the arts directly, but through Arts Council England, who are responsible for distributing public money from Government.

The following table supplied by Arts Council England provides a breakdown of the information requested.

Funding stream	Grant programme	2001–02	2002–03	2003–04
Grant in aid	Regularly Funded Organisations	33,530	43,542	38,030
	Grants for the arts, Individuals[1]	—	—	5,000
Lottery	Regional Arts Lottery Programme	22,000	75,040	17,399
	Grants for the arts, Organisations[1]	—	—	233,500
	Capital	—	—	40,000
	Total	55,530	118,582	333,929

[1] Grants for the arts, Individuals and Organisations, was launched in 2003–04.

Chorley Football Club

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what grants are available to Chorley Football Club to enable it (a) to stay at Victory Park and (b) to move to a new ground. [194622]

Mr. Caborn: Grants are available from the Football Foundation's Football Stadia Improvement Fund (FSIF) to clubs playing in the football league, conference or national league system, down to step seven and below, who wish to improve their facilities or relocate to new grounds.

The type of projects which qualify for FSIF funding and the amount of grant available depend upon the level at which clubs are playing.

Clarence House

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what accommodation is occupied by (a) HRH Prince Charles and (b) his staff at Clarence House. [193942]

Mr. Caborn: Clarence House is the official London residence of HRH The Prince of Wales and the main office for His Household.

The ground floor rooms of Clarence House are used by The Prince of Wales for receiving and entertaining official guests and visitors; approximately 4,000 were received or entertained during the last year. The rooms are open during the summer when His Royal Highness is not in residence; approximately 42,500 members of the public visited Clarence House this summer.

The first and second floors provide private accommodation for The Prince of Wales and for Princes William and Harry when they are in London.

The third floor provides permanent accommodation for one member of staff and overnight accommodation for staff when The Prince of Wales is in London on official duties.

There are 37 rooms in Clarence House that accommodate 48 of The Prince of Wales's office staff.

Consultants

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will list the contracts awarded by her Department to consultants in (a) 1996, (b) 1997 and (c) 1998; what the (i) name of the consulting company, (ii) value of the contract and (iii) purpose of the contract was in each case; and if she will make a statement. [194662]

Mr. Caborn: Detailed records of contracts are not retained for the years 1996, 1997 and 1998. In the financial year 1995–96 the cost of consultants was £164,000, in 1996–97 it was £309,000 and in 1997–98 it was £728,000.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many consultancy firms or companies have been retained by the Department since June 2001; what the projects are for which each has been retained; and what the total is of the fees paid or incurred in each case. [193415]

Mr. Caborn: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 18 October 2004, Official Report, columns 442–43 to the hon. Member for Stratford-on-Avon (Mr. Maples).

Creative Partnerships

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much her Department spent on Creative Partnerships in each year from 2003–04 (a) in total and (b) as a percentage of the total budget of Creative Partnerships; how much she estimates her Department will spent in each year until 2007–08; and if she will make a statement. [194661]

Mr. Caborn: The information requested is set out in the table. Outturn figures for the current financial year and budget figures for 2006–07 and 2007–08 are not yet available.

	Budget allocated by DCMS	Outturn	Percentage of budget
2003–04	33,500	23,100	69
2004–05	25,300	n/a	n/a
2005–06	45,000	n/a	n/a

Departmental Documents

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the Department's target is for the interval between publication of (a) departmental announcements and documents and (b) material published by public bodies for which her Department has oversight and their posting online; and what the average interval was in the latest year for which figures are available. [195399]

Mr. Caborn: The Department aims to make all announcements and documents available online at the same time as they are otherwise released. No 30-minute target exists. However, we require a maximum of three days lead-in time to make documents compliant with the Disability and Discrimination Act accessibility guidance when they are to be published online so, in certain circumstances, simultaneous publication is not possible. The information on the targets set by DCMS bodies for publishing online could be discovered only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental IT

Brian White: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what percentage of the Department's (a) implemented and (b) planned computer systems use open source software; and what plans are in place to raise this level. [195660]

Mr. Caborn: My Department uses a number of open source applications but it would not be meaningful to express those in terms of a percentage of computer systems.

My Department was involved with the recent OGC led review of open source and our future plans will take account of the revised Open Source Software Policy Version 2.0.

Departmental Press Officers

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many press officers are employed in her Department; and how many were employed in each year since 1996–97. [195361]

Mr. Caborn: There were 12 press officers, including two non-permanent staff, employed by the Department in 2003–04. Numbers of press officers employed in each year from 1996–97 are as follows:

	Number
1996–97	7
1998–99	9
1999–2000	8
2000–01	9
2001–02	8
2002–03	9

Departmental Salaries

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many people in her Department earn more than a whole-time equivalent salary of £57,485 per year. [195330]

Mr. Caborn: The Department for Culture, Media and Sport have 25 people who earn more than a whole-time equivalent salary of £57,485 per year.

Digital Broadcasting

Tom Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will make a statement on the timetable for providing free to air digital broadcasting to High Peak. [194267]

Estelle Morris: Free to air digital services via Digital Terrestrial Television are unlikely to be available throughout the High Peak area until Switchover because of spectrum constraints. The BBC and Ofcom believe that Switchover could start to happen as early as 2007 and be completed by 2012.

Discussions are taking place between the Government, Ofcom, and the Public Service Broadcasters and other stakeholders on the detailed plans for switchover. However, no specific dates have been set for the conversion of individual transmitters (with the exception of the Technical Trial transmitter in Ferryside where we plan Switchover in March 2005).

Some free to air services are available via digital satellite. Unfortunately, a regional breakdown of digital satellite reception is not possible, but, according to Ofcom figures, digital satellite coverage currently stands at between 96 per cent. and 98 per cent. of all UK households.

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will make a statement on the date for the switch-off of analogue television transmissions. [194584]

Estelle Morris: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Members for Torbay (Mr. Sanders) and Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Carmichael).

Football

Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions she has had with the relevant authorities regarding codes of conduct within football. [194361]

Mr. Caborn: The Government understand the important role that sports men and women have as role models in our society. As Minister of Sport I have impressed upon the Football Association, Premier League, and the Football League, on a number of occasions, the importance of upholding codes of conduct within the game. I have also written to all the football club chairmen highlighting this.

Gambling

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what protocols are in place governing the attendance of her departmental officials at trade conventions promoting the interests of the foreign gaming industry. [193799]

Mr. Caborn: Officials attend trade conventions, conferences or similar outside events when it is judged that this use of official time is justified by the opportunity to obtain information relevant to the conduct of policy which will enhance their ability to advise Ministers, or to pursue discussions with commercial and other interest groups which are relevant to the assessment of the benefits, costs and risks of policy options or proposals and their implementation. All attendances are subject to the rules laid down in the Civil Service Code and the Department's Staff Guide.

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will make a statement on her proposals for gaming machines. [194574]

Mr. Caborn: I am proposing that machines which may be played by children will be available in fewer places than at present, and will have lower stakes and prizes than at present. Machines with the highest stakes and prizes will be available only in the strictly regulated environment of regional casinos—unlike Australia. And the Bill provides new and extensive controls over the operation of all gaming machines, wherever sited.

Licensing Act

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what estimate she has made of the cost to local authorities of implementing the Licensing Act 2003, in terms of (a) set-up and transition costs and (b) ongoing costs. [194693]

Mr. Caborn: We estimate that the costs falling on licensing authorities of start up and during the transitional period, which is expected to last for nine months, will be approximately £41 million and that the costs in each of the first three years after the regime becomes fully operational would be approximately £34 million, £30 million and £31 million. These costs would be recovered through fees charged for authorisations under the Act. The fees are to be set centrally by the Secretary of State by regulations made under the provisions of the Licensing Act 2003. We expect to commence a public consultation on our estimates of costs and proposed fee levels imminently. A small number of licensing authorities are not local authorities.

New Deal

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many personnel the Department has recruited under the New Deal in each of the past five years. [194853]

Mr. Caborn: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 25 October 2004, Official Report, columns 1052–54W.

Public Libraries

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will make a statement on her Department's policies towards provision of public libraries in north east Lincolnshire. [194595]

Estelle Morris: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has a duty under the Public Libraries and Museums Act 1964 to superintend the provision of public library services by the 149 library authorities in England to secure the proper discharge by them of their responsibilities, under the same legislation, to provide a "comprehensive and efficient" service. Public libraries are funded through a combination of the Local Authority Settlement, locally raised taxation, and income that they generate for themselves. Public library funding is a matter of local discretion and it is a matter for each library authority to decide how much to spend on their libraries. The Department issues national standards for public libraries and last year produced "Framework for the Future" a ten year vision for public libraries.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will conduct a review of the way libraries are funded. [192667]

Estelle Morris: The Department with the Museums, Libraries and Archives Council will shortly commission a study of the book supply chain and the most effective and efficient ways for libraries to spend, which will include a look at the sources of libraries income.

Quality Schemes

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much funding her Department has provided for England's Quality Schemes in this financial year; and what expenditure on such schemes is planned for future years. [195228]

Mr. Caborn: There are three quality schemes for accommodation in England; managed by the AA, the RAC and VisitBritain. The AA and RAC schemes are run as part of their commercial operations and receive no public funding.

VisitBritain supports its National Quality Assurance Standards for accommodation and the Visitor Attraction Quality Assurance Scheme from the grant in aid it receives from the Department of Culture Media and Sport. The budget for these schemes for this financial year is £1,454,000. It is anticipated that this figure will remain broadly constant for the foreseeable future, but detailed forward plans have not been finalised.

St. James' Palace

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what accommodation HRH Princess Anne and her staff occupy at St. James' Palace. [193941]

Mr. Caborn: HRH The Princess Royal has a private apartment in St. James's Palace. The Princess's office, and office accommodation for her immediate staff are in Buckingham Palace. None of The Princess Royal's staff live in either St. James's Palace or Kensington Palace.

Television Licences

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many households in (a) North Southwark and Bermondsey, (b) Camberwell and Peckham and (c) Dulwich and West Norwood are receiving a free television licence for over-75s. [194232]

Estelle Morris: TV Licensing, who administer free television licences for people aged 75 or over as agents for the BBC, are not able to provide geographical breakdowns of the number of free licences issued. However, 2001 Census data indicate that there are approximately (a) 5,400 people in the North Southwark and Bermondsey constituency, (b) 3,500 people in Camberwell and Peckham and (c) 5,100 people in Dulwich and West Norwood aged 75 or over.

Tourism

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what action her Department is taking to improve collection of data about the tourism industry. [195229]

Mr. Caborn: Better business data for the tourism sector is one of the key priority work areas set out in Tomorrow's Tourism Today, which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State launched in July. The Review of Tourism Statistics, published in June in co-operation with the Office of National Statistics, recommended a number of changes to the UK Tourism Survey and other sources of sectoral data. The Tourism Statistics Implementation Planning Group, which is led by my Department and includes representatives of the Devolved Administrations and Tourist Boards, is considering the recommendations and will publish an action plan before the end of the year.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what her estimate is of the percentage growth per annum required to reach the £100 billion target value for the tourism industry by 2010. [195267]

Mr. Caborn: The target of a £100 billion UK tourism industry by 2010 was agreed by my Department with VisitBritain, the Tourism Alliance, the Regional Development Agencies and the Local Government Association, and included in the national strategy document, Tomorrow's Tourism Today, in July. The target was based on a baseline figure of £76 billion for 2002.

Since that target was agreed, my Department has adopted a revised method of calculating the value of the tourism sector. Tourism Satellite Accounting produces a more accurate estimate of total turnover, and is the accepted international standard. Using the revised method, the total value of expenditure by tourists on UK trips in 2002 was £73.7 billion.

The target of £100 billion by 2010, against the revised baseline of £73.7 billion, stands. The achievement of that target would entail a percentage growth rate of 3.9 per cent. per annum.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are held in each asylum detention centre. [191452]

Mr. Browne: Information on the number of persons recorded as being in detention in the United Kingdom solely under Immigration Act powers as at 26 June 2004 is shown in the following table.

Information on numbers detained, by place of detention, is published on a quarterly and annual basis. The next quarterly statistics, providing the numbers detained at the end of September, will be available on 16 November on the Home Office Research Development and Statistics Directorate web site at http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/immigration1.html.

Persons recorded as being in detention in the United Kingdom solely under Immigration Act powers as at 26 June 2004, by place of detention[1,2]

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many appeals against a refusal to grant asylum are awaiting hearing in the Greater London area. [193969]

Mr. Lammy: I have been asked to reply.

As at 26 October 2004, information drawn from the Immigration Appellate Authority (IAA) database IRIS indicates that, at IAA Hearing Centres within the boundaries of the M25, there are approximately 2,229 appeals against a refusal of being granted asylum which are awaiting a hearing before an Immigration Adjudicator. This information does not include appeals which are currently in the process of being created following receipt by the IAA, or cases where a subsequent appeal has been made to the Immigration Appeal Tribunal (IAT) on a point of law.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have used the channel tunnel illegally to gain access to the United Kingdom to seek asylum. [191255]

Mr. Browne: Information on entry routes of those claiming asylum, including on the number of asylum applicants entering the UK via the channel tunnel, is unavailable. Most asylum applicants conceal their route of entry.

Information on asylum applications is published on a quarterly and annual basis. The next publication covering the third quarter of 2004 (July to September) will be available on 16 November on the Home Office Research Development and Statistics Directorate website at:

http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/immigration1.html.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his latest estimate is of the number of asylum applicants who have been refused section 4 support; and if he will make a statement. [189981]

Mr. Browne: Since January 2004 a total of 788 unsuccessful asylum seekers have been refused section 4 support.

Biometric Identifiers

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the results of the UK Passport Service's trial into biometric identifiers will be made available. [191328]

Mr. Browne: The enrolment of volunteers on the UK Passport Service biometrics trial is expected to be completed in November 2004. This will be followed by evaluation and quality assurance of the results with the findings being released as soon as possible thereafter.

Vehicle Crime

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what initiatives his Department have implemented to reduce the number of car thefts. [194168]

Ms Blears: The Home Office is taking forward work within the broad strategy published by the Vehicle Crime Reduction Action Team in 1999 for meeting the Government's target to reduce vehicle crime by 30 per cent. over five years.

The initiatives on which the Home Office has taken the lead include:

bringing into effect the Motor Salvage Operators Regulations in October 2002; working to improve police performance including, with the Association of Chief Police Officers, publication in 2003 of good practice advice in tackling vehicle crime; getting across car crime prevention advice to motorists through national communications campaigns and by using opportunities provided by the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency;

providing funding to support vehicle crime reduction work undertaken by the National Criminal Intelligence Service (£1.41 million between 2000–01 and 2004–05) installing CCTV schemes in 1,222 car parks (£106 million between 1999–2000 and 2002–03);

the Safer Parking Scheme (£865,000 between 2001–02 and 2004–05, including its predecessor the ACPO Secured Car Park Scheme) and the Tenants Participation Advisory Service 'Partnership into Practice' competitions to identify and disseminate good practice for community groups (£37,000 in 2003–04 and £40,000 estimated for 2004–05).

In addition, other Home Office funding available to support vehicle crime reduction work, as well as other interventions to reduce crime according to local priorities includes that available to the police through the Police Standards Unit (£23.1 million in 2003–04 and £20 million in 2004–05); the Basic Command Unit Fund (£50 million in both 2003–04 and 2004–05); and that available to Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnerships through the Building Safer Communities Fund (£9[illegible] million from 2002–03 to 2004–05, including its predecessor, the Safer Communities Initiative).

These, together with other initiatives undertaken by other Government Departments and key stakeholders, have resulted in British Crime Survey estimates from interviews in the year ending June 2004 showing a reduction of 33 per cent. in vehicle related thefts against 1999 (British Crime Survey 2000).

Consultants

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, if he will list the contracts awarded by his Department to consultants in each of the last five years, stating in each case (a) the name of the consulting company, (b) the value of the of the contract and (c) the purpose for which the contract was awarded; and if he will make a statement. [191731]

Fiona Mactaggart: The Home Office does not hold central records of all the contracts awarded to consultants in each of the last five years. To obtain the information requested for each of the last five years would result in disproportionate costs.

The Home Office is currently addressing this problem with the implementation of an Oracle Enterprise Resource Planning (ERP) system, Adelphi, in the core Home Office and in the Prison Service, Phoenix, which will provide accurate management information on the Department's use of consultants.

The use of external consultants in the Home Office provides the Department with specialist knowledge, skill, capacity and technical expertise that is not otherwise available in the House.

Correspondence

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for The Home Department what the average time for a reply to be sent to an hon. Member from a Minister in the Home Office was in the last period for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [191969]

Fiona Mactaggart: My Home Office colleagues and I replied within 15 working days to 70 per cent. of letters received in August, an improvement on the 60 per cent. achieved in respect of letters received in January.

We aim to reply to 95 per cent. of Members' letters within 15 working days except in the case of correspondence relating to the Immigration and Nationality Department and HM Prison Service, when we aim to reply within 20 working days.

Improving performance against targets is recognised as a priority across the Department. The computerised Correspondence Tracking System has recently been extended to cover the immigration and nationality areas and this should result in further improvements in performance.

Data on the average time for a reply to be sent is not held and could be made available only at disproportionate cost.

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for The Home Department whether it is the policy of his Department to send acknowledgement cards to honourable Members who have written to his Department; and if he will make a statement. [191970]

Fiona Mactaggart: All Members' correspondence processed on the Home Office's correspondence tracking system should be acknowledged.

During August and September technical difficulties meant that in some cases no acknowledgement was sent and in others multiple acknowledgements were generated. These problems have now been resolved.

Counter-terrorism

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much of the extra £90 million for counter-terrorism measures announced on 29 September will be made available to the Metropolitan Police Service; and when the breakdown of allocations will be announced. [192534]

Mr. Blunkett: For security reasons we would not wish to comment on the allocation of specific counter terrorism funding. However I can say that additional funding is being made available to the Police Service in England and Wales and on which we are currently consulting with the Association of Chief Police Officers, which includes senior officers from the Metropolitan Police Service.

Custody Suites

Mr. Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for The Home Department how many custody suites were available in each police authority area in England and Wales in each year from 1993 to 2004. [192146]

Ms Blears: This information is not held centrally.

English Language Testing System

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the new requirement for Ministers of Religion who wish to come to the UK to provide an international English Language Testing System certificate. [190795]

Mr. Browne: I would refer my hon. Friend to the written statement which my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary, made to the House on 22 July.

Under the new Rules, which came into force on 23 August, those seeking entry as a Minister of Religion are required to demonstrate that they have a basic command of spoken English by providing an International English Language Testing System (IELTS) certificate at the "limited user" level (Level 4). We intend to raise this requirement to level 6 spoken and written English after an interim period of two years.

For people with existing English skills—for example those educated in an English speaking nation—discretion may be applied to allow entry where evidence is provided that an individual speaks competent English.

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Sikh ministers of religion have taken the International English Language Testing System certificate test this year. [190796]

Mr. Browne: International English Language Testing System (IELTS) is jointly managed by the University of Cambridge Local Examination Syndicate, the British Council and IDP Education Australia.

We would only become aware of a person's IELTS qualification once an application to enter the United Kingdom under the Immigration Rules as a Minister of Religion had been made.

ICT Consultants

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for The Home Department how much the Department spent on outside information technology and communication specialist consultants and engineers in the 2003–04 financial year. [191906]

Fiona Mactaggart: The Home Office does not hold central records on how much was spent on outside information communications and technology (ICT) specialist consultants and engineers in the financial year 2003–04. To obtain the information requested would incur disproportionate costs.

The Home Office is currently addressing this problem with the implementation of an Oracle Enterprise Resource Planning (ERP) system, Adelphi and Prison Service Phoenix, which will provide accurate management information on the Department's use of consultants and engineers.

The use of specialist consultants and engineers in the Home Office and its agencies provides the Department with specialist knowledge, skill, capacity and technical expertise that is not otherwise available in House.

Much technical ICT consultancy and engineering is provided by the Home Department's ICT service providers, notably in 2003–04 by EDS, Fujitsu, Siemens and Steria, as part of their overall service provision charge.

Identity Cards

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for The Home Department whether the identity card scheme will be covered by the Data Protection Act 1988. [191891]

Mr. Browne: The identity cards scheme will be covered by the Data Protection Act 1998.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were employed in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate in (a) 1996–97 and (b) 2003–04. [190961]

Mr. Browne: In 1996–97 5,432 full-time equivalent staff were employed in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate; the figure for 2003–04 was 13,716.

Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the average time taken was at the latest available date for cases received by the Immigration and Nationality Department's Appeals Processing Centre, to be processed and sent to the Independent Appellate Authority. [191370]

Mr. Browne: Data on the average time between appeals being processed by the Appeals Processing Centre and the papers being sent out to the Immigration Appellate Authority is unavailable and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost by examination of individual case records.

It is planned that performance against PSA targets relating to 2003–04, including those relating to the speed of processing, will be published in due course (once the data is judged sufficiently reliable) in the regular quarterly asylum statistics, a copy of which is available in the Library and from the Home Office's Research Development and Statistics website:

http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/immigration1.html

Immigration Officers

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the pay scales for immigration officers are. [191267]

Mr. Browne: The pay scales for immigration officers are as follows:

	Minimum	Target rate
Inner London	18,757	23,930
Gatwick	18,757	23,930
National	18,380	23,449

Knives

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many attacks involving knives used by under-aged offenders the Leicestershire police authority has recorded in 2004. [194759]

Ms Blears: This information is not collected centrally.

Manchester Airport

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received concerning the standard of immigration checks at Manchester Airport. [190499]

Mr. Browne: The Secretary of State has received no representations about the standard of immigration checks at Manchester Airport this year. There have been four formal complaints to the Immigration and Nationality Directorate about the conduct of immigration officials at Manchester Airport this year. In addition, immigration officials at Manchester Airport have received nine complaints about local procedures and issues, such as the standard of facilities, at the airport during that time.

Muslim Council

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his recent meetings with the Muslim Council. [191539]

Fiona Mactaggart: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary holds regular meetings, on a roughly quarterly basis, with the Secretary General of the Muslim Council of Britain. These meetings enable the Home Secretary to keep abreast of issues relating to the safety and security of Muslim communities, their relations with other communities and progress in addressing concerns about equality and discrimination.

The Government are keen to have good relations with all faith communities in the UK. The Home Secretary and his colleagues both in the Home Office and in other departments engage with members of faith communities in a number of ways and are always open to meetings with faith leaders and representatives.

Naturalisation

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for The Home Department what qualifications suffice for the purposes of establishing a sufficient knowledge of English for the purposes of an application for naturalisation. [191362]

Mr. Browne [holding answer 15 October 2004]: Any qualifications which establishes knowledge of English at a level equivalent to, or higher than ESOL (English for Speakers of Other Languages) Entry 3, will be accepted as establishing a sufficient knowledge of English for naturalisation purposes.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for The Home Department when it will be possible for applicants for naturalisation to obtain a certificate from a designated person to demonstrate sufficient knowledge of English; and when he intends to publish the list of designated persons. [191471]

Mr. Browne [holding answer 15 October 2004]: They can do so now. The Home Office website indicates which people are designated to certify that a person is a native English speaker or has English language skills at a similar level. Notaries are currently designated for that purpose, and following discussions with their professional bodies, solicitors will shortly be added. Other professional groups may be added in due course.

EU Accession States

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many citizens from EU accession countries have registered with the workers' registration scheme; and what the five professions with the most registrations are. [190792]

Mr. Browne: I would refer my hon. Friend to my statement of 7 July 2004, Official Report, columns 35–37WS, which sets out published (provisional) figures for May and June 2004. In May and June just under 20,000 applications to the Worker Registration Scheme were approved. The top five sectors were: hospitality and catering; administration, business and management; agriculture; manufacturing; and retail.

Data for July, August and September will be published later this year.

Passports

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when free passports will be available to all over 75-years-old; [189426]

(2) what discussions he has had with the Treasury about the cost of providing concessionary passports to over 75-year-olds; and how the scheme will be funded. [189427]

Mr. Browne: My right hon. Friend, the Home Secretary announced on 13 October that the scheme to grant free passports to those who were 16 or over at the end of World War II—on 2 September 1945, will be implemented on Monday 18 October 2004.

All British Nationals who were born on or before 2 September 1929 will be able to apply for their free passports from that date.

The Home Office will fund the scheme this year, and will seek to recover the costs in future years from the general passport fee.

We have no plans to issue free passports to all over 75-years-old on an ongoing basis.

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will implement his policy of free passports for the elderly; and if he will make a statement. [190690]

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department from what date he intends to make passports for people over 75 years free of charge. [189115]

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when older pensioners will be able to apply for free passports. [191474]

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when free passports for people over 75 years will be introduced; and if he will make a statement. [187457]

Mr. Browne: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary announced on 13 October that the scheme to grant free passports to those who were 16 or over at the end of World War II—on 2 September 1945, will be implemented on Monday 18 October 2004.

All British nationals who were born on or before 2 September 1929 will be able to apply for their free passports from that date.

Press Officers

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his projection is of the number of press officers employed in his Department for 2004–05. [187553]

Fiona Mactaggart: The number of press officers is currently 39 and this is the projection of the total number that will be required for 2004–05.

In 2003–04 the Press Office news desk answered 60,039 calls, and the Press Office issued 583 press notices and held 29 briefings for the media.

Racist Attacks

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many racist (a) attacks and (b) threats the Leicestershire police authority has recorded in 2004. [194758]

Ms Blears: The available information relates 2003–04 and covers offences of racially or religiously aggravated less serious wounding and common assault. There were 101 offences of racially or religiously aggravated less serious wounding and 110 offences of racially or religiously aggravated common assault recorded in Leicestershire. Information on racist threats is not collected centrally.

Sikh Ministers of Religion

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Sikh Ministers of Religion have been denied entry to the UK this year. [190875]

Mr. Browne: Information on the number of Sikh Ministers of Religion denied entry to the UK is not available except by examination of individual case files at disproportionate cost.

Terrorism Act

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will give the reasons for the differences in the figures for the number of searches under section 44(1) of the Terrorism Act 2000 conducted in (a) England and Wales and (b) the Metropolitan Police district in 2002–03 given in the answer of 27 January 2004, Official Report, column 268W, and page 39 of the Home Office report Statistics on Race and the Criminal Justice System-2003; [190780]

(2) if he will give the reasons for the differences in the figures for the number of searches under section 44(1) of the Terrorism Act 2000 conducted in (a) England and Wales and (b) the Metropolitan Police district in 2001–02 given in the answer of 27 January 2004, Official Report, column 268W, and page 38 of the Home Office report Statistics on Race and the Criminal Justice System-2003. [190821]

Mr. Blunkett: The Statistics on Race and the Criminal Justice System 2003 report is concerned with detailing stop-searches by ethnicity, therefore, the number of stop-searches carried out on vehicles and not the occupants is omitted. The Home Office Statistical Bulletin, the source for the answer of 27 January, includes instances where the police have stop-searched just the vehicle and not any of the occupants.

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the reasons for the differences in the three figures for the number of searches under section 44(1) and (2) of the Terrorism Act 2000 conducted in Gloucestershire in 2002–03 as given in (a) the answer of 27 January 2004, Official Report, column 268W, (b) the answer of 6 February 2004, Official Report, column 1121W, on police and (c) page 37 of the Home Office report Statistics on Race and the Criminal Justice System 2003. [190781]

Mr. Blunkett: The Statistics on Race and the Criminal Justice System 2003 report is concerned with detailing stop-searches by ethnicity, therefore the number of stop-searches carried out on vehicles and not the occupants is omitted. The Home Office Statistical Bulletin, the source for the answer of 27 January, includes instances where the police have stop-searched just the vehicle and not any of the occupants.

I can confirm that the correct number of stop-searches under Section 44 (2) for the period is nil. The figure 299 was wrongly quoted in the response of 6 February due to an administrative error, for which I apologise. A breakdown of these figures from the Home Office Statistical Bulletin is shown in the following tables. This can be found on the Research and Statistics section of the Home Office website.

Work Permits

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether there are differences in the procedures for granting work permits from overseas in the public and the private and voluntary sectors. [190775]

Mr. Browne: There are no differences in the procedures for considering work permit applications for work in the public, private and voluntary sectors. All work permits applications pass through the same set of procedures irrespective of the sector from which the application is made.

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment has been made of (a) the time taken to process and (b) the success rate of applications for a permit to work in the (i) private and voluntary and (ii) public sector. [190776]

Mr. Browne: No assessment has been made. This information is not recorded centrally and could be obtained only by incurring disproportionate costs.

Youth Crime

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures his Department is taking to tackle youth crime during the summer holiday period; and if he will make a statement. [185360]

Paul Goggins: As set out in the Home Office Strategic Plan, "Confident Communities in a Secure Britain", published on 19 July, the Home Office works with other Departments to deliver a wide-ranging programme to tackle youth crime.

This programme includes the Positive Activities for Young People programme which again this year provided a range of activities for young people, aged 8 to 19, during the school summer holidays in high crime areas. Over 75,000 young people benefited from the programme in 2003, and a similar level of provision was available this year.

The Positive Activities for Young People programme is in addition to year round youth crime prevention activity, such as the Youth Inclusion Programme which at present targets the 13 to 16-year-olds assessed as being at greatest risk of criminality in 72 of the most deprived neighbourhoods in England and Wales. Following the SR2004 Spending Review we intend to increase the coverage of the Youth Inclusion Programme.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Council Tax

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how much revenue is projected to be raised from council tax in England in 2004–05. [194690]

Mr. Raynsford: The total council tax requirement budgeted by local authorities and police and fire authorities in England for 2004–05 is £20.299 billion.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how much revenue from council tax each (a) London borough and (b) Metropolitan authority received in (i) 2003–04 and (ii) 2004–05. [194753]

Mr. Raynsford: The information requested for 2003–04 is tabled as follows. The figures exclude amounts funded from council tax benefit.

Comparable figures for 2004–05 will not be available until after the end of the financial year.

QRC4 returns to ODPM

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what discount on council tax is applicable for (a) second homes and (b) empty properties in each local authority area. [195056]

Mr. Raynsford: Since 1 April this year, billing authorities have had the freedom to reduce council tax discounts for second homes in all or part of their area from 50 per cent. to between 10 per cent. and 50 per cent., and to reduce or remove the 50 per cent. discount for domestic properties in all or part of their area that have been empty for more than six months. Information on the actual use of these freedoms this year is currently being collected from local authorities. Figures are expected to be available early next year.

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will estimate the total council tax revenue (a) raised by local authorities from charging on empty homes in 2004–05 and (b) to be raised by local authorities from charging on empty homes in 2005–06. [195057]

Mr. Raynsford: This information for 2004–05 is currently being collected from local authorities. An estimate is expected to be available in January.

The information for 2005–06 is due to be collected in October and November 2005, and an estimate is expected to be available in January 2006.

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will estimate the total council tax revenue (a) raised by local authorities from charging on second homes in 2004–05 and (b) to be raised by local authorities from charging on second homes in 2005–06. [195058]

Mr. Raynsford: Information that will allow the requested estimate to be made for 2004–05 is currently being collected from local authorities. An estimate is expected to be available early next year.

Information that will allow the requested estimate to be made for 2005–06 is due to be collected in October and November 2005, and an estimate is expected to be available in early 2006.

Diego Garcians

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what measures he is taking to assist Reigate and Banstead Borough Council in housing and feeding the exiled Diego Garcians recently arrived from Mauritius; and if he will make a statement. [194857]

Mr. Raynsford: It is understood that Reigate and Banstead Borough Council are currently accommodating a number of persons recently arrived from Mauritius.

Local housing authorities' obligations to provide temporary accommodation under the homelessness legislation apply principally in cases where the Council have a reason to believe that the applicants may be eligible for assistance, unintentionally homeless and in priority need. I understand that the recent arrivals from Mauritius were found by the Council to be ineligible for homelessness assistance on the basis that, despite being British citizens, they are persons from abroad who are not habitually resident. The Council originally decided not to exercise their power to provide them with accommodation pending an internal review of that decision. The decision is now the subject of judicial review proceedings and the Council are currently accommodating them pending the outcome of those proceedings.

Local housing authorities are funded for the provision of homelessness services through revenue support grant and are expected to meet the costs of dealing with situations such as the need to provide housing support for small groups of migrants, or, as in the case of the Chagossians, the return of British citizens from abroad, from within existing provision.

Reigate and Banstead Borough Council are a district council and do not have social services functions. District councils do not have a statutory obligation under housing legislation to meet the subsistence needs of homeless persons.

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what representations he has received, and when, regarding the cost to Reigate and Banstead Borough Council of housing exiled Diego Garcians now resident in Horley; and what action he has taken. [194859]

Mr. Raynsford: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has received one letter dated 19 October on this issue from the hon. Member. A reply will be given shortly.

High Hedges

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he will produce the regulations under Part 8 of the Anti-social Behaviour Act 2003. [194339]

Phil Hope: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 27 October 2004, Official Report, column 1301W.

Houses in Multiple Occupation

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what estimate he has made of the (a) number and (b) proportion of three storey houses in multiple occupation in Wales that will not be subject to the mandatory HMO licensing scheme envisaged in the Housing Bill. [194519]

Keith Hill: No such estimates have been made by the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister as these are matters for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Jon Trickett: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what recent estimate he has made of the (a) number and (b) proportion of three-storey houses in multiple occupation (HMOs) in England that will not be subject to the mandatory HMO licensing scheme envisaged in the Housing Bill. [194808]

Keith Hill: The information requested is not held centrally, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Housing

Jon Cruddas: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many empty homes there are in each (a) Inner London and (b) Outer London local authority. [194420]

Keith Hill: The latest information on empty dwellings in each local authority in inner and outer London is tabled as follows. This data has been provided from the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's annual Housing Investment Programme returns and Housing Corporation's annual Regulatory Statistical returns, as reported by local authorities and registered social landlords respectively.

Local Authority Income

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the total net income of local authorities in England is projected to be for 2004–05. [194691]

Mr. Raynsford: The projected total net income for all local authorities in England in 2004–05 is £78,711 million. This figure is as reported by local authorities and is taken from the revenue account (RA) budget form for 2004–05.

The net income figure is calculated as the sum of police grant, revenue support grant, redistributed non-domestic rates, general Greater London authority (GLA) grant, special and specific grants inside aggregate external finance (AEF) and the council tax requirement. It excludes any income from sales, fees and charges.

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how much (a) North East Lincolnshire council and (b) North Lincolnshire council received in Government grant in (i) cash and (ii) real terms in each year since each council was established; and by how much in real terms the grant changed in each of those years. [194181]

Mr. Raynsford: The amount of Government grant North East Lincolnshire council and North Lincolnshire council has received in (i) cash and (ii) real terms each year since 1996–97 and the real terms percentage change is tabled as follows.

	North East Lincolnshire			North Lincolnshire
	Cash	Real terms	Real percentage terms change	Cash	Real terms	Real percentage terms change
1996–97	101,899	123,891	—	91,583	111,349	—
1997–98	102,620	121,645	-1.8	94,622	112,165	0.7
1998–99	109,554	126,228	3.8	97,542	112,387	0.2
1999–2000	117,798	132,830	5.2	100,972	113,857	1.3
2000–01	126,909	141,462	6.5	109,688	122,266	7.4
2001–02	137,538	149,503	5.7	115,957	126,045	3.1
2002–03	144,007	151,439	1.3	126,042	132,547	5.2
2003–04	154,867	158,441	4.6	137,020	140,182	5.8
2004–05	166,272	166,272	4.9	139,028	139,028	-0.8

The data shown, as reported by the local authority, are outturn figures for all years except 2003–04 and 2004–05 which are budget estimates.

Government grants is defined here in terms of Revenue Support Grant, SSA Reduction Grant, Police Grant, Central Support Protection Grant and the distributed amount from non-domestic pool i.e. Formula Grant, plus specific and special grants within Aggregate External Finance (AEF).

The figures have been revalued for previous years at 2004–05 prices using the latest GDP deflators.

The data have been taken from returns made by local authorities and so do not allow for transfers of funding and function. In particular the figures for 2003–04 and earlier years include funding for Fire where as the 2004–05 figures exclude such funding which now goes directly to the combined fire authority.

Local Government Finance

Lembit Öpik: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans he has to link tax with income to fund local government; and if he will make a statement. [194653]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government has appointed Sir Michael Lyons to undertake an independent inquiry that will consider, in the light of the report by the Balance of Funding Review, the detailed case for changes to the present system of local government funding and make recommendations on any changes that are necessary and how to implement them. The inquiry will, among other things, make recommendations on how best to reform council tax, taking into account the forthcoming revaluation of domestic property and conduct thorough analysis of options other than council tax for local authorities to raise supplementary revenue, including local income tax, reform of non-domestic rates and other possible local taxes and charges, as well as the possible combination of such options.

Local Government Pension Scheme

Mr. Grieve: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the total cost was in the financial year 2002–03 of the employers' contribution to the Local Government Pension Scheme. [194813]

Phil Hope: The total cost of the employers' contributions to the Local Government Pension Scheme in 2002–03 was £2.91 billion.

Manufacturing (Glass)

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the number of planning applications for new glass container manufacturing plants in England since 2000; and what the estimated output of each new plant is. [194721]

Keith Hill: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether his journey to and from the studio for the BBC's Politics Show on 24 October incurred public expenditure. [195208]

Phil Hope: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister's journey was conducted in accordance with "Travel by Ministers".

New Deal

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many personnel the Department has recruited under the New Deal in each of the past five years. [194854]

Phil Hope: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, West (Ruth Kelly) on Monday 25 October 2004, Official Report, column 1052W.

Park Homes

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what recent representations he has had from park home site owners; and if he will make a statement. [194463]

Keith Hill: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has recently consulted on our proposals to follow up the provisions on park homes in the Housing Bill through subsequent secondary legislation. These are aimed at strengthening the contractual terms which are implied by law and which form part of the agreements that allow park home occupiers to place a park home on site and occupy it.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is currently analysing the 300 or so replies received, and will consider laying the necessary order once the Bill receives Royal Assent.

Park-and-ride Schemes

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what his Department's latest guidance is on proposed developments on designated green belt land, with particular reference to proposals for park and ride schemes. [195708]

Keith Hill: National planning policy on development in the green belt is set out in Planning Policy Guidance note (PPG) 2. Policy on park and ride schemes is set out in PPG 13 (2001) on transport. This, at Annex E, updated PPG2 to take account of park and ride schemes. The key elements are that green belt locations should only be chosen where they are the most sustainable option, and they will not seriously compromise the purposes of including land in the green belt. Park and ride proposals which fail to satisfy these and the other criteria set out in PPG2 (as amended by PPG13) will be inappropriate development.

Planning (Port Sunlight)

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what representations he has received on planning proposals at Port Sunlight. [194143]

Keith Hill: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has received five letters from local residents who are opposed to proposals for housing development at Port Sunlight. Those proposals are currently the subject of planning applications which are before Wirral metropolitan borough council.

Reviews (Lancashire and Chorley)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the implications of the (a) Gershon Review and (b) Spending Review on the budgets of (i) Lancashire county council and (ii) Chorley borough council. [194625]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government looked with local authorities in the context of the Spending Review 2004 (SR04) at the pressures councils face up to 2007–08, along with the scope for efficiency savings. SR04 provides continued investment in local government services with £7.2 billion more in general grant for local government programmes by 2007–08 over 2004–05. The Gershon Review's expectation is each authority creates efficiency gains from existing budgets of at least 2.5 per cent., at least half of which is cashable. There will be no impact on authorities' overall budgets as there is no intention to increase or reduce planned budgets as a result of implementing the review. Efficiency gains made by each authority can be re-invested into front line local services. The provisional local government finance settlement for 2005–06 will be announced shortly which will be followed by a consultation period where authorities will be able to make written representations on the Government's proposals.

Social Housing

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many properties are available for rent from Housing Associations in each local authority area in Tyne and Wear; and how many were available in 1997. [193342]

Keith Hill: Housing Association properties available for rent in each local authority area in Tyne and Wear in 2003, and 1997, are tabled as follows:

Local authority	2003	1997
Gateshead	4,441	4,374
Newcastle	7,365	7,595
North Tyneside	4,921	4,529
South Tyneside	4,135	4,138
Sunderland	39,145	4,711

Youth Services (London)

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the average expenditure per capita of each London borough on youth services was in each year since 1996–97; and if he will make a statement. [194010]

Mr. Miliband: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is contained within the following table:

Notes:
1. Data are collected at local education authority (LEA) level. Included here are the data for all London LEAs.
2. Recorded here is expenditure in relation to the authority's youth service. This includes provision at residential and non-residential youth centres, including activity, outdoor and urban studies centres related to youth service provision. Also includes development workers, advisors and youth leaders not based at youth centres. This excludes any capital expenditure.
3. The expenditure data to 1998–99 are drawn from the annual 'RO1' spending returns which local authorities submitted to the ODPM. Figures for 1999–2000 to 2001–02 were drawn from section 52 (table 3) outturn statements which LEAs submitted to the DfES. Figures for 2002–03 are taken from section 52 (table A) outturn statements.
4. The priority age group for youth services is 13–19 (although youth services can also provide support for targeted groups in the 11 to 13 and 19 to 25 age ranges). In order to provide a figure for expenditure per capita on youth services we have divided each London LEA's net current expenditure on youth services by the total population aged 13–19 within that authority. The population figures are estimated resident mid year population figures from the Office for National Statistics (ONS) and these have recently been revised following the 2001 Census. Thus for financial year 1996–97 we have used the population estimate from mid year 1996 and for 1997–98 we used the mid 1997 estimate (and so on).
5. Data (cash terms) are as reported by the LEA at 24 October 2004.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Afghanistan

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the expected crop of opium poppies in Afghanistan in 2004 is, expressed in (a) area of land cultivated and (b) tonnes of opium produced. [194268]

Mr. Rammell: The United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime will publish on 4 November its annual survey into the level of opium poppy cultivation and production in Afghanistan. The figures are not yet available. However, we anticipate a significant increase in cultivation levels this year. Increases in production may be proportionally lower given lower yields due to drought and disease.

As lead nation on counter narcotics in Afghanistan, co-ordinating international assistance, the UK works closely with the Afghan Government to support delivery of the Afghan National Drug Control Strategy. We have committed more than £70 million over three years for counter narcotics activity plus significant development funding and support for alternative livelihoods. We will be looking to increase that activity over the coming year and are also encouraging the international community to do more in order to achieve a reduction in cultivation next year.

Angola

Mike Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's relations with Angola. [R] [192605]

Mr. Mullin: The UK has good relations with Angola. I met the Angola Finance Minister in April 2004. My right hon. Friend the International Development Secretary met Angola's Minister for Assistance and Social Reintegration in London on 17 March. We have worked closely with Angola for the last two years in the Security Council. The UK, through the Department for International Development, provided £9.4 million in bilateral assistance in 2003/2004.

Cayman Islands

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the executive body of the Cayman Islands relating to illicit drug trafficking. [192611]

Mr. Rammell: The UK adopted a Security Co-operation Plan with CARICOM partners, of which the Cayman Islands is an associate member, when I visited Jamaica on 20 October. We already fund a regional maritime training initiative that encompasses the Cayman Islands.

Correspondence

Sir Gerald Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) when he will reply to the letter to him dated 6 September 2004 from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mr. Usman Ilyas and Mrs. Iram Usman; [190619]

(2) when he will reply to the letter to him dated 6 September 2004 from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mr. Ilyas; [192540]

(3) when he will answer the letter to him dated 6 September 2004 from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton, with regard to Mr. Ilyas. [193936]

Mr. Mullin: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary replied on 20 October 2004.

Sir Gerald Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) when he will reply to the letter to him dated 1 September 2004 from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mr. Abdul Rauf; [192541]

(2) when he will answer the letter to him dated 1 September from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton, with regard to Mr. Abdul Rauf. [193937]

(3) when he will reply to the letter to him dated 23 August from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Ms Saira Asif; [192542]

(4) when he will answer the letter to him dated 23 August from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton, with regard to Ms Saira Asif. [193938]

Mr. Mullin: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary replied on 29 October.

Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when UKvisas intends to reply to the letters dated (a) 14 July regarding Mr. M. A., ref ISB/725541, (b) 16 July regarding Mr. M. A., Yemen, ref 301/04, (c) 4 August regarding Ms H. E. and (d) 19 August regarding Mrs. R O, ref GV 100/83235. [193026]

Mr. Mullin: The information is as follows:

UKvisas had no trace of having received my hon. Friend's letter of 14 July, regarding Mr. M. A. UKvisas has since obtained a copy of this letter and a reply was sent on 28 October.

UKvisas replied to my hon. Friend's letter of 16 July, regarding Mr. M. A., on 8 September.

UKvisas replied to my hon. Friend's letter of 4 August, regarding Ms H. E., on 28 October.

UKvisas replied to my hon. Friend's letter of 19 August, regarding Mrs. R. O., on 14 September.

Further copies of UKvisas' letters of 8 and 14 September were sent to my hon. Friend on 28 October.

Sir Gerald Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will answer the letter to him dated 14 September from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton, with regard to Pastor D. Lindsay. [193939]

Mr. Mullin: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary replied on 29 October.

Cuba

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made by the UK Government to the Cuban Government for the release of (a) Jorge Perez (Autunez) and (b) Dr. Biscet. [195053]

Mr. Rammell: We regularly raise human rights cases—including these two—with the Cuban authorities in London and in Havana. We have been monitoring their situation and health, and embassy staff maintain close contacts with local human rights groups involved in their cases and with friends and family of the individuals. Dr. Biscet visited the embassy in November 2002 shortly before his arrest, and the Embassy last met his wife, Elsa Morejon, on 14 July. We are aware of considerable public interest in the fate of both prisoners.

UK policy on Cuba is governed by the EU Common Position, which has human rights enshrined as its key principle and which was reaffirmed on 14 June. The EU regularly issues statements condemning the imprisonment of human rights activists and other political prisoners.

Diego Garcia

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has made of the number of exiled Diego Garcians who have been granted British citizenship with the right to reside in the UK; and if he will make a statement. [194858]

Mr. Rammell: There are no precise figures but it is estimated that there are about 5,000 Chagossians who enjoy British citizenship with the right of abode in the UK following the coming into force of the British Overseas Territories Act in May 2002. Since then, the British High Commissions in Mauritius and Seychelles have issued more than 900 British passports to Chagossians.

EU-Israel Association Agreement

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to the answer of 20 October 2004, Official Report, column 753W, on the EU-Israel Association Agreement, whether Israel is in full compliance with the human rights conditions of the EU Israel Association Agreement; whether there is an equivalent trade agreement with the Palestinian Authority; and what the official (a) UK and (b) EU definition of sanctions is. [194830]

Mr. MacShane: Article 2 of the EU-Israel Association Agreement states that "Relations between the Parties, as well as the provisions of the Agreement itself, shall be based on respect for human rights and democratic principles, which guides their internal and international policy and constitutes an essential element of this Agreement".

We have raised our concerns about Israeli actions on human rights grounds with the Israeli Government both bilaterally and through the EU. Following the recent violence in Gaza, EU Foreign Ministers, at the 11 October General Affairs and External Relations Council, condemned "the disproportionate nature of the Israeli military actions in the Gaza Strip". The EU has also regularly raised issues of concern, including human rights, at EU/Israel Association Councils.

I can confirm that an interim trade agreement with the PLO has been agreed and is in force.

Neither the UK nor the EU uses a particular definition of sanctions in the context of the EU-Israel Association Agreement. However, Article 79 of the EU/Israel Association Agreement provides that a Party may take "appropriate measures" where either Party considers that the other Party has failed to fulfil an obligation under the Agreement.

European Trade Agreements

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the main (a) logistical and (b) institutional obstacles to the implementation of (i) Europe agreements with the countries of central and eastern Europe and (ii) free-trade agreements with the Baltic States addressed by the committee on the arrangements for implementing Europe agreements with the countries of central and eastern Europe and free-trade agreements with the Baltic States during the Greek presidency of the EU; which of these were brought to the attention of the committee by the UK Government expert present; what recommendations the committee made for each; and if he will make a statement. [192494]

Mr. MacShane: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 26 October 2004, Official Report, column 1175W.

Under the Greek presidency, various EU bodies handled Europe agreements with countries with whom accession negotiations were underway.

Information on these discussions is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportional cost.

Human Rights Annual Report

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what changes have been made to the text of the Annual Report on Human Rights since the decision to delay publication. [195243]

Mr. Rammell: The text of the Annual Report is changed and updated throughout its editorial and publication process, which usually begins in January and ends in September. Owing to the tragic events in Beslan, my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary decided to delay the launch of the Annual Report which was originally due to be held on 16 September. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has subsequently updated the text of the Annual Report to reflect the tragedy in Beslan. There have been no other significant changes to the text. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has not delayed publication of the Annual Report on Human Rights to dilute criticism of any country. The Foreign Secretary will launch the Annual Report on Human Rights on 10 November.

Iraq

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of meetings of the Iraqi National Security Committee have been attended by a British representative. [192990]

Mr. Rammell: The Iraqi Ministerial Committee for National Security, the MCNS, issues strategic policy direction and guidance on national security issues. It is chaired by Prime Minister Allawi. It is always attended by a senior British diplomat, usually now Ambassador Chaplin.

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information was provided by the United Kingdom to United Nations Security Council members on Iraq's alleged weapons of mass destruction prior to the vote on UNSC Resolution 1441 on 8th November 2002; what steps were taken to test the reliability of this information prior to passing it on to other UNSC members; and what steps he has taken to correct inaccuracies in this information following the publication of the Iraq Survey Group report. [191732]

Mr. MacShane: The Government made available its September 2002 dossier to members of the Security Council to inform them of Iraq's weapons of mass destruction programmes prior to the vote on UN Security Council Resolution 1441. The dossier was compiled by the Joint Intelligence Committee following analysis of intelligence available to it at the time.

The genesis of the dossier, and the background information that formed its basis was examined in detail by the review headed by Lord Butler of Brockwell. Following further investigation by the SIS in the light of Lord Butler's conclusions, my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary announced in a written statement to the House on 12 October 2004, Official Report, column 14WS, the formal withdrawal of the lines of intelligence relating to the "45 minute claim" and Iraqi production of biological agent.

Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his answer of 13 October 2004, Official Report, column 306W, on Iraq, if he will request US authorities to furnish him with a copy of the (a) terms of reference and (b) findings of the investigation; and if he will place copies in the Library. [192987]

Mr. Rammell: This is a matter for the US military authorities. The UK is not party to this investigation. We have asked the US military authorities in Baghdad for a copy of the investigation report. We will place a copy in the Library of the House provided the US security classification of the report permits this.

New Agenda Coalition

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have been held with members of the New Agenda Coalition in advance of the Non-Proliferation Review Conference in 2005; and if he will make a statement. [194003]

Mr. MacShane: The Government regularly includes discussions of nuclear non-proliferation in its bilateral contacts with New Agenda Coalition countries. In that context, we make clear that we are fully committed to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty and emphasise the importance of full compliance with the Treaty by all States Party. We also express our desire to see the immediate resumption of substantive work at the Conference on Disarmament, starting with the negotiation of a Fissile Material Cut-off Treaty.

Non-proliferation Treaty

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have been held with Iran on (a) the inspection of nuclear facilities and (b) its policy on the Non-Proliferation Treaty; and if he will make a statement. [194004]

Mr. MacShane: Senior officials from the UK, France and Germany held discussions with Iranian counterparts in Vienna on 21 and 27 October on a range of nuclear issues.

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have been held by officials of his Department with (a) North Korea, (b) India, (c) Pakistan and (d) Israel on the Non-Proliferation Treaty Review Conference in New York in 2005; and if he will make a statement. [194005]

Mr. MacShane: There have been no discussions by officials with North Korea, India, Pakistan or Israel on the Non-Proliferation Treaty Review Conference to be held in New York in 2005. However, non-proliferation issues form a regular part of our continuing dialogue with all four states.

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to publish a statement of the UK Government's aspirations for the Non-Proliferation Treaty Review Conference in 2005. [194006]

Mr. MacShane: At this time, the Government have no plans to publish a statement of their aspirations for the Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT) Review Conference in 2005. However, the Government are strongly committed to the NPT, which is the cornerstone of the nuclear non-proliferation regime. The UK's goals for the review conference are to make the case for stronger and more effective counter-proliferation measures and to emphasise the importance of compliance with the treaty. We will do this in the context of emphasising the UK's good record on nuclear disarmament, and we will produce a final report of the studies that we have conducted on the verification of nuclear disarmament. We look forward to working with the chair and other countries before and during the Conference itself to help secure a successful outcome.

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who the members of the UK delegation to the Non-Proliferation Treaty Review Conference in 2005 will be. [194007]

Mr. MacShane: Current plans are that the UK delegation to the 2005 Non-Proliferation Treaty Review Conference will be headed by ambassador John Freeman, the United Kingdom's Permanent Representative to the Conference on Disarmament in Geneva. He will be accompanied by officials from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the Ministry of Defence and the Department of Trade and Industry.

People's Mojahedin Organisation

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to the answer of 15 September 2004, Official Report, column 1617, on the People's Mojahedin Organisation, what information has been passed to the UK Government about the status of the residents of Camp Ashraf, with particular reference to the activities of the People's Mojahedin Organisation of Iran personnel; whether this information has been passed to the Secretary of State for the Home Department; and if he will make a statement. [190302]

Mr. Rammell: The situation of the residents of Camp Ashraf was until 28 June a matter for the US authorities. The Iraqi Interim Government (IIG) is now responsible for Ashraf. With the concurrence of the IIG, US forces continue to provide security there. The US has informed us that most residents are being treated as protected persons under the Fourth Geneva Convention, some have unresolved claims to be Prisoners of War from the Iran/Iraq war, and a small number are the subject of US or international warrants. The IIG, US and other interested parties are continuing to discuss practical arrangements for their future.

The Mojahedin-e Khalq (MEK, or People's Mojahedin Organisation of Iran) is proscribed in the UK under the Terrorism Act 2000. We take a close interest in the activities of MEK personnel, and have discussed them on many occasions with foreign Governments, including those of Iran, Iraq and the US. FCO and Home Office officials are in regular contact about the MEK.

Special Advisers

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many unpaid special advisers the Department has; what their names are; and which Government (a) bodies, (b) committees and (c) strategy groups each unpaid adviser (i) belongs to, (ii) advises and (iii) works alongside. [194065]

Mr. Straw: None. My noble Friend the Lord Carter of Coles is heading a review of public diplomacy work and has assisted in reviewing efficiency in the Department. He is unpaid, but does not have the status or role of special adviser.

Sudan

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment his Department has made of the effect that China's economic interests in Sudan might have on China's position in relation to an UN Security Council resolution calling for oil sanctions against Sudan. [194134]

Mr. Rammell: China made clear that it opposed the threat of oil sanctions and gave reasons for its position in its explanation of vote during the adoption of resolutions 1556 and 1564, copies of which I have placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the (a) implementation and (b) effects of the concept of safe areas in the August Plan of Action agreed by the United Nations and the Sudanese Government. [194459]

Mr. Mullin: The concept of areas of enhanced security, or "safe areas", agreed by the United Nations and the Government of Sudan in the August Plan of Action, was envisaged as an initial basis on which to improve the overall security situation in Darfur. The United Nations Special Representative to the Secretary-General, Jan Pronk, reported throughout August and September that security in the camps had improved, although overall insecurity continued to be a major problem due to violations of the ceasefire by all sides and continuing banditry. The expanded African Union mission will help facilitate improvements in security for the whole of Darfur.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Government of Sudan on direct and indiscriminate attacks by Government forces on civilians and civilian objects. [194479]

Mr. Mullin: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister raised the continuing insecurity and ceasefire violations with President Bashir and First Vice President Taha during his visit to Sudan on 6 October. He made clear that the fighting must stop and that there can be no impunity for the grave crimes against humanity which have been committed in Darfur. There is an urgent need to deploy the expanded AU mission as soon as possible in order to address the continuing insecurity in Darfur. The UK has allocated £12 million to support this. We have also impressed on the rebels the need to abide by the ceasefire and cease attacks on aid workers.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of Sudan about the case for amending Article 3 of its National Security Forces Act. [194480]

Mr. Mullin: Our embassy in Khartoum has made regular representations to the Government of Sudan on the need to repeal the National Security Forces Act. Article 3 of this Act defines the various bodies referred to in the text: we have made no representations on this specific article. Article 33, however, deals with the criminal trials of members or agents of the National Security Forces. We have made very clear to the Government of Sudan that there can be no impunity for any crimes against humanity or violations of human rights perpetrated in Darfur, or elsewhere. The International Commission of Inquiry will investigate reports of violations of human rights in Darfur and identify the perpetrators, with a view to ensuring those responsible are held accountable.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of Sudan about the need to amend the decrees instituting the special courts or specialised criminal courts in Darfur to ensure their fair trial without the possibility of the death penalty or cruel, inhuman or degrading punishments. [194481]

Mr. Mullin: Our embassy in Khartoum follows cases that pass through these courts and raises, both bilaterally and through the EU-Sudan dialogue, our concerns with the Sudanese Government, focusing not only on the sentences passed but also the lack of due legal process and the right to a fair trial. The Government of Sudan have given assurances that no death and cross-amputation sentences have been carried out since the creation of the specialised courts on 31 March 2004. However, there are no reliable means of verifying this. We continue to press for the specialised courts to be removed and the full rights of appeal to be made available.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of Sudan about the need to ensure that victims of past human rights violations have access to redress. [194482]

Mr. Mullin: During my visit in September, I raised with the Government of Sudan the need for reparations to be made to the victims and families of victims of human rights violations. I also stressed the importance of rapid progress on the comprehensive peace agreement: this provides that the parties will initiate a process of national reconciliation throughout the country, based on mechanisms to be worked out by the Government of National Unity.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Sudan on ensuring that investigations into alleged war crimes in the country include (a) forensic examinations of graves, (b) a systematic documentation of sexual violence and rape, (c) compilation of lists of people killed and (d) mapping of villages that have been destroyed. [194483]

Mr. Mullin: There are several mechanisms deployed across Darfur to monitor allegations of violations of human rights and extra-judicial killings. These include the National Darfur Investigation Committee, three Rape Committees, the African Union Ceasefire Monitoring Commission, the International Commission of Inquiry and UK-funded human rights monitors from the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights. Recent visits by Amnesty International and Human Rights Watch, facilitated by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary, also documented human rights violations in Darfur. Their reports are available online.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assurances he has received from the Government of Sudan about the centrality of human rights in the peace talks in Naivasha, Kenya and Abuja, Nigeria. [194484]

Mr. Mullin: Respect for the rights of internally displaced persons and refugees, together with measures to ensure that violators of those rights are held accountable, are central to the Humanitarian Protocol negotiated by the parties in the Abuja peace talks. On 6 October, the Government of Sudan gave its commitment to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to immediately and unilaterally implement this protocol.

The Protocol on Power Sharing, agreed by the Government of Sudan and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement in Naivasha in May 2004, commits the parties to comply in full with their obligations under international human rights treaties to which they are, or become, a party. The Protocol also provides for the establishment of a National Human Rights Commission.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Sudan about the need to ensure the participation of women in the peace process. [194485]

Mr. Mullin: We regularly remind the Government of Sudan and the rebel groups of the need for the peace processes to be as fully inclusive as possible. The equal right of men and women to all civil, political and fundamental human rights is one of the principles set down in the power sharing protocol agreed between the Government of Sudan and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement, in Naivasha, Kenya in May 2004.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of progress in disarming and disbanding the Janjaweed militias, including those members who have been incorporated into the Popular Defence Forces, the People's Police and other paramilitary forces. [194487]

Mr. Mullin: In August, the Government of Sudan claimed to have disarmed 30 per cent. of the Popular Defence Forces, although this could not be independently verified. The September report of the UN Special Representative made clear that not enough progress had been made on disarmament of militias or on security issues. The Government of Sudan has committed itself to further disarmament of the Popular Defence Forces, its allied militias and the "Janjaweed". The expansion of the African Union monitoring mission will allow independent verification of disarmament by both the Government of Sudan and the rebel groups.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many people in Darfur who are suspected of violations of international human rights or humanitarian law have been removed from posts in the (a) army, (b) judiciary, (c) police and (d) civil service. [194488]

Mr. Mullin: Exact figures for the number of officials removed from their posts in Darfur are not available. However, the Government of Sudan has provided our embassy in Khartoum with numbers of armed forces and National Security Forces personnel tried and convicted there between January and June 2004 of crimes under various articles of the criminal act.

These figures show that in Darfur, 24 members of the armed forces were either tried and convicted or were awaiting trial as of 31 May 2004 for crimes under Article 130 of the Criminal Act. 28 members of the National Security Forces were tried for various offences in the same period, 25 of whom were convicted.

The Government of Sudan also informed our embassy that, as of 31 May 2004, 266 members of the police force were under investigation for various crimes.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of Sudan about the need to train the country's police in international human rights standards. [194491]

Mr. Mullin: During my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's visit to Khartoum on 6 October, the Government of Sudan agreed to a civilian police monitoring role as part of the expanded African Union mission in Darfur. Various UN agencies have also started to establish training programmes in humanitarian and human rights law for the Government of Sudan police force.

The UK's Department for International Development, together with the UN Joint Assessment Missions, has been engaged with the Government of Sudan and Sudan People's Liberation Movement on the issue of police training following the successful completion of a peace deal. This would include the mainstreaming of human rights training and increased accountability within the police forces.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the monitoring mission of the African Union in Sudan. [194492]

Mr. Mullin: The current African Union (AU) mission of approximately 150 military observers is now carrying out regular investigations into alleged violations of the ceasefire agreement. The information from these investigations helps the international community to monitor the situation on the ground and to hold the parties to account for their activities. The AU's strategy is to use monitoring to reduce the scope for the parties to the ceasefire to violate it with impunity.

However we have been pressing for some time for a larger, and better-equipped mission which could have a more direct impact on the ground in terms of improving the security situation, and building confidence. This is why we fully support the planned expansion of the mission and have allocated £12 million for this purpose.

UN Relief and Works Agency

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the UN on the statement made by the head of the UN Relief and Works Agency (UNRWA) that UNRWA employs Hamas members. [194816]

Mr. Rammell: We have not raised this matter formally with the United Nations, but British officials in New York have discussed the issue with other UN Security Council members and the UN Secretary-General. Kofi Annan has stated that although the United Nations Relief and Works Agency (UNRWA) could not question its staff about their political affiliations, the UN is fastidious about their behaviour, insisting that all employees act in accordance with the established principles and practices of the UN.

The UK provides funding to UNRWA and supports its work, which includes delivery of essential relief supplies to civilian communities in Gaza.

Uzbekistan

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many cases of torture have been brought to his Department's attention in the last 10 years in (a) Uzbekistan and (b) all countries. [194447]

Mr. Rammell: We receive reports of incidents of torture and human rights abuses from various sources, including individuals and NGOs, from all over the world, including Uzbekistan. The UK has a strong record, in conjunction with international partners, of acting on such reports.

We do not keep lists of all reported incidents of torture we receive. However, the Government have published an Annual Report on Human Rights since 1997. It provides an overview of the main challenges to human rights around the world, including torture, and explains the Government's overall activities and policies to address those challenges, in both bilateral and multilateral contexts. The report incorporates comments and recommendations we receive over the year from the House of Commons Foreign Affairs Committee and from a number of NGOs.

The report has been critical of Uzbekistan's human rights record and we shall be equally forthright in the 2004 report when it is published in November.

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he received on (a) promoting democracy and (b) eradicating human rights abuses in Uzbekistan. [194448]

Mr. Rammell: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office monitors and takes action on reports of human rights abuse in Uzbekistan as well as lobbying the Uzbek Government to introduce democratic reform. We benefit from a regular dialogue with NGOs such as Human Rights Watch and Amnesty International, both at Ministerial and at official level, in London.

We also have frequent, informal contact with local NGOs in Uzbekistan. We receive reports from and have regular consultations with organisations such as the Initiative Group of Independent Human Rights Defenders of Uzbekistan and Mothers against the Death Penalty and Torture, as well as from families and other human rights defenders. Our Embassy in Tashkent has also received representations from independent political parties regarding registration and the forthcoming parliamentary elections.

We value the NGO expertise we receive concerning Uzbekistan and will continue to be in regular contact with the NGO community on issues of human rights and democracy there in the future. As an example of this, our Embassy in Tashkent is funding an NGO Registration and Capacity Building Project to improve the capacity of local independent human rights NGOs in Uzbekistan.

Water Supply (Iraq/Turkey)

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions his Department has initiated between Iraq, Syria and Turkey on water supply issues. [194798]

Mr. MacShane: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has not initiated any discussions between Iraq, Syria and Turkey on water supply issues.

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the relevance of international treaties covering water supply issues to the dispute between Iraq and Turkey over water. [194932]

Mr. MacShane: There is a longstanding dispute over the distribution of water resources between Iraq and Turkey. A committee was set up in 1983 between Iraq, Turkey and Syria to agree an equitable water-sharing arrangement but it has not met for a number of years. Modern international law provides few specific guidelines to resolve water-sharing disputes. Turkey is not a signatory of the 1997 UN Watercourses Convention. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has not carried out a detailed assessment of the relevance of international treaties covering water supply issues to the dispute between Iraq and Turkey over water.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Alternative Fuels

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much funding the Government have given to investigations into alternative fuels for transport in the last year; and how much they plan to invest in research and development of alternative fuels for transport in each of the next five years. [193285]

Mr. Jamieson: I have been asked to reply.

The Government have in place a large number of programmes to help fund the research, development and demonstration of low carbon vehicles and fuels. Details of some of the most significant programmes are set out in the Second Annual Report of the Powering Future Vehicles Strategy, published in October 2004 and available on the Department for Transport's website. Over £1 million of spending on programmes in the financial year 2003–04 was specifically for alternative fuels for transport.

Brumark Case

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether she plans to change the statement on behalf of Crown Departments relating to the Brumark case to take account of National Westminster Bank plc. v. Spectrum. [193816]

Mr. Sutcliffe: No. The case of National Westminster Bank plc. v. Spectrum is still finally to be determined and is subject to an appeal to the House of Lords.

Car Repair Industry

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many (a) government and (b) non-government schemes have been introduced to monitor the motor car repair industry in the past 30 years; and if she will make a statement. [194679]

Jacqui Smith: My Department is not aware of any Government introduced schemes to monitor performance in the motor car repair industry in the past 30 years (although there have been some ad hoc research exercises). There have been a number of non-government schemes and codes of practice which have incorporated some elements of performance monitoring. The Office of Fair Trading monitors complaints and enforcement action in relation to specific offences across all consumer activity including the car repair sector.

The Office of Fair Trading has recently approved the code of the Vehicle Builders and Repairers Association. One of the criteria to be met in order to achieve approval is that there should be in place effective means of monitoring performance against code content. The OFT also recently approved a code by the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders which in part covers manufacturers' activity in relation to repairs required under new car warranty.

China

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much UK investment there has been in China since 1999. [194127]

Mr. Timms: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Colin Mowl to Mr. Tom Brake, dated 1 November 2004:

The National Statistician has been asked to reply to your recent question about UK investment in China since 1999. I am replying in his absence. (194127)

The results for the annual surveys into Foreign Direct Investment are published in the Business Monitor MA4 "Foreign Direct Investment", which is available on the National Statistics Website at: http://www.statistics.gov.uk/downloads/theme_economy/MA4_2002.pdf

The latest information is for the year 2002. Figures for China do not include Hong Kong, which is shown separately.

Citizens Advice Bureaux

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many citizens advice bureaux are operating. [194166]

Mr. Sutcliffe: From information provided by Citizens Advice and Citizens Advice Scotland, the umbrella organisations for the Citizens Advice Bureaux Service in the UK, there are 566 Citizens Advice Bureaux operating in the UK. Many of these operate from more than one source, including for example, hospitals and magistrates courts, and in total there may be some 2,800 points of delivery.

Coal Health Scheme

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what the average cost paid by the Department under the Coal Health Scheme to each of its contractors was when a living claimant (a) agreed an expedited settlement and (b) settled after going through the Medical Assessment Process in the last period for which figures are available; [194412]

(2) what the average cost paid by the Department under the Coal Health Scheme to each of its contractors was (a) when a living widow accepted an expedited settlement and (b) when the settlement followed the appraisal of the deceased's documentation by the Medical Assessment Process in the last period for which figures are available; [194413]

(3) what the average cost paid by the Department under the Coal Health Scheme to each of its contractors was (a) when a claim on behalf of the estate agreed an expedited settlement and (b) when the settlement followed the appraisal of the deceased's documents by the Medical Assessment Process in the last period for which figures are available. [194414]

Nigel Griffiths: The Department's claim handlers do not record the information in the format requested. Processing expedited settlements is not costed separately. There are not expected payments to widows or their estates for deceased claims.

The average cost paid to contractors for handling a respiratory disease claim—live and deceased—is approximately £1,300. I am advised that more than half this cost is accounted for by medical assessments.

Copyright

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what her policy is on the extension of the term of copyright protection granted in the EU to the creators of sound recordings; [193045]

(2) what response she intends to make to the Internal Market Directorate-General's consultation on the review of the Term of Protection Directorate (DIR 93/98/EEC). [193046]

Ms Hewitt: The Term of Protection Directive harmonises copyright term across the EU. The Commission has argued against pursuing any extension of the term of protection for sound recordings at the moment. We believe that the copyright term for sound recordings in the EU must take into account all relevant factors, and we are therefore currently examining the Commission's views and the evidence presented to us by UK industry.

We agree with the light-touch approach to updating the EU copyright framework, including the Term Directive (93/98/EEC), as set out in the Commission's staff working paper. The Commission has made it clear that its consultation is directed at interested parties but not member states. We are therefore urging the creative industries and other key sectors in the UK to make their views known to the Commission.

East Midlands Development Agency

Mr. Dorrell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many full-time equivalent employees were working for the East Midlands Development Agency in each year since its establishment. [192939]

Jacqui Smith: I am advised by the East Midlands Development Agency that the number of full time equivalent employees working for it in each year since its inception is as follows:

	Number of full-time equivalent employees
1999–2000	113
2000–01	124
2001–02	141
2002–03	170
2003–04	185

Energy Research

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps the Government are taking to ensure basic energy research is being carried out in the UK; and how much her Department spent on such research in each of the last three years. [191182]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 15 October 2004]: The Science and Innovation Framework for 2004–14, published in July, sets out the Government's ambition for UK science and innovation over the next decade. Sustainable energy is a key theme and priority. The Office of Science and Technology will review departmental science and innovation plans for their quality and effectiveness following the spending round negotiations and assess the extent to which these align to wider Government priorities, including those in support of sustainable energy.

The Government support energy research through two main mechanisms. Industrial research is supported under the DTI New and Renewable Energy Programme, which has now been subsumed within the DTI Technology Programme. Research in universities and academia, including basic research, is supported by the Research Councils.

Expenditure under the DTI New and Renewable Energy Programme, the fusion research programme, and by the Research Councils on energy related research for the last three years is as follows:

	Expenditure (£ million)
2001–02	35.8

Responsibility for funding for fusion research transferred from DTI to the Engineering and Physical Sciences Research Council (EPSRC) in April 2003.

The main Research Council energy related research programmes are currently: "Towards a Sustainable Energy Economy" with £28 million funded jointly between Natural Environment Research Council, EPSRC and Economic and Social Research Council, which includes funding for the UK Energy Research Centre; "SuperGen" with £25 million for sustainable energy generation funded by EPSRC; "Carbon Vision" with £14 million funded jointly by EPSRC and the Carbon Trust for research into energy efficiency and low carbon innovation; and the fusion programme with £48 million from EPSRC.

The Tyndall Centre for Climate Change Research (with a budget of £10 million over 2000–05 from NERC, ESRC and EPSRC) also undertakes energy related research.

Export Control Advisory Committee

Mr. Godsiff: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the purpose is of the Export Control Advisory Committee; when it was set up; which organisations are represented on it; and if she will make a statement. [194756]

Nigel Griffiths: The Export Control Advisory Committee was set up to enable the Export Control Organisation (ECO) to engage in a structured dialogue with representatives of industry who are subject to the strategic export control regulations administered by ECO. This is particularly important following the implementation of the Export Control Act 2002 which imposes new controls on exporters of strategic goods. The Committee is chaired by the Director of ECO and consists of representatives of trade associations whose members are users of the export licensing system. It meets every six months starting from 13 May 2004.

Fair Trade

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make it her policy to ensure that all Government-funded hospitality is sourced from fair trade producers. [192901]

Mr. Alexander: The Department of Trade and Industry works closely with other Government departments to promote fair trade, and the Government are committed to supporting fair trade through its own suppliers wherever possible within the boundaries set by the public procurement rules.

Since September 2002 the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has ensured that Fairtrade products were made available throughout the DTI offices, and many of her Cabinet colleagues have responded to her urging to do likewise. Government departmental restaurants and cafeterias are continually adding to their range of FairTrade products. In addition to FairTrade coffee and tea, staff, visitors, and Ministers can now enjoy FairTrade cereal and chocolate bars, and FairTrade hot chocolate, sweetened with FairTrade sugar.

Glass Packaging Sector

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent reports she has received on the glass packaging sector, with particular reference to its (a) market structure, (b) output levels and (c) key characteristics, including job losses; and if she will make a statement. [194720]

Jacqui Smith: The Department has recently received an ECOTEC Report commissioned by Barnsley Development Agency on the economic impact assessment of the glass packaging sector on the Yorkshire and Humber economy.

The report considers the current as well as the likely future impacts of a proposed new glass packaging plant in Cheshire which is the subject of an RSA application currently with the Department.

Officials are currently considering developments on this case and will respond in more detail when they are in a position to do so.

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the (a) recent development of the glass container industry and (b) impact that development of the industry will have on jobs in the Yorkshire region. [194724]

Jacqui Smith: The recent ECOTEC report commissioned by Barnsley Development Agency suggests that since 2000 demand for glass packaging has grown by 1 per cent. per year. In the near future, growth in demand for glass packaging is expected to continue at approximately 1–2 per cent. per annum.

It is difficult to say what the impact on the development of the industry will have on jobs in the Yorkshire region but it is for Industry, in partnership with Government and key stakeholders such as the Regional Development Agency, to help manufacturing companies fulfil their potential.

Research and Development

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the forthcoming competition deadlines are for grants for research and development in each region. [193784]

Nigel Griffiths: The first round of competitions in all English regions closed on 28 May 2004. A second competition in West Midlands closed on 8 October 2004 and a second competition is underway in the North East which closes on 12 November 2004. We are working closely with the Regional Development Agencies on the timing of future competitions.

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the value is of the awards offered by her Department from the grant for research and development regional competitions held in May this year (a) in total and (b) broken down by region. [193785]

Nigel Griffiths: The value of Grant for Research and Development offers made in the first round of regional competitions that closed on 28 May 2004 are shown on the following table:

Region	Value of Awards (£000)
East	4,039,232
East Midlands	490,041
London	1,591,000
North East	621,759
North West	1,684,309
South East	711,954
South West	127,564
West Midlands	490,736
Yorks and Number	849,129
Total	10,605,724

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to involve staff from the regional development agencies in the administration of the grant for research and development. [193789]

Nigel Griffiths: Regional Development Agency (RDA) staff will administer the Grant for Research and Development from 1 April 2005. Officials in the Small Business Service, the current administrators of the product, are working closely with RDA staff to ensure business continuity at the handover date.

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what change there has been in her Department's spending priorities to accommodate an increase in funds for grants for research and development in 2003–04 and 2004–05. [193790]

Nigel Griffiths: The increased expenditure on Grant for Research and Development are contained within DTI's overall expenditure.

National Institute for Medical Research

Mr. Pollard: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions she has had with the Medical Research Council on alternatives to the closure and dispersal of the National Institute for Medical Research; and if she will make a statement. [193157]

Ms Hewitt: The future of the National Institute for Medical Research (NIMR) is a matter for the Medical Research Council (MRC). However, my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under Secretary of State for Science and Innovation met with NIMR staff and Union representatives last year and has discussed with MRC the handling of the process. I have not been personally involved in any discussions with MRC. OST is continuing to monitor developments and remains in close contact with the MRC on this matter.

DEFENCE

Armed Forces Deployment

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in how many different combat zones British forces are deployed. [191664]

Mr. Ingram: British Service personnel are deployed on operations in the principal locations as follows:

Afghanistan
Balkans
Cyprus
Democratic Republic of Congo
Gulf Region
Georgia
Iraq
Liberia
Sierra Leone

The list does not include personnel serving in loan/diplomatic posts, in permanent garrisons, personnel stationed on British overseas territories or on training detachments.

Arms Exports

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many F680 applications (a) received clearance and (b) did not receive clearance in each year since 1997, broken down by applicant country. [194360]

Mr. Ingram: Information on F680 applications cleared and refused is set out in the following tables.

Army

John Thurso: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the (a) establishment, (b) funded liability and (c) actual strength was for the Army in each year since 1997; what it is in 2004–05; and what it is expected to be in 2005–06. [192160]

Mr. Caplin: I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence upon which sectors of the Army the 6,500 reduction in manpower is expected to fall; and if he will make a statement. [194383]

Mr. Caplin: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence made clear in July, the force structure, organisation and capabilities of the armed forces are to be modernised in order to meet the challenges of the 21st century. The decision to cease the infantry arms plot and encouraging progress in Northern Ireland has meant that we are able to restructure the infantry as part of this process and reduce the number of infantry battalions from 40 to 36. As I have made clear in my previous answers to the hon. Member, all of the manpower freed up from the reduction in infantry battalions will be reinvested across the army, to strengthen key enabling capabilities such as engineers, signals and intelligence.

For the future we envisage an Army of about 102,000. This is however, dependent on achieving full normalisation in Northern Ireland. In the meantime therefore, the strength of the Army will remain broadly as it is today.

Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what financial saving is expected from reducing Infantry Battalions from 40 to 36. [194388]

Mr. Ingram: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 20 October 2004, Official Report, column 713W.

Black Watch

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what meetings he has had with US officials to discuss lines of command if UK soldiers are to be redeployed in US controlled areas in Iraq. [193247]

Mr. Hoon: The Black Watch remain under the operational command of General Rollo, the UK General Officer Commanding Multi-National Division (South-East). On a day-to-day basis, the Black Watch co-ordinates its activity with the US chain of command in the locality, but any changes in the mission or the tasking would be referred back to General Rollo.

Bowman Radios

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many complaints he has received about Bowman radios; and what the nature of the complaints was. [191106]

Mr. Ingram: I am aware of media reports about Bowman radios. In common with other MOD equipment, the Bowman tactical communications system has an incident reporting system which captures any user comments about the performance of the system.

Combat Clothing

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many contracts for combat wear for the Army were awarded to UK companies and manufactured in the UK since 2001; and what percentage of the total number of contracts awarded this represented in each year. [194391]

Mr. Ingram: The total number of contracts for all combat wear awarded to UK companies and manufactured in the UK since 2001 are as follows:

	Total number of contracts awarded	Number awarded to UK companies manufacturing in UK	Percentage of UK based contracts
2001	42	33	78
2002	48	22	46

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment was made of the financial position of Cooneen Watts and Stone Textiles before the recent award of a contract by his Department; and what representations he has received since then regarding the company's financial situation. [194536]

Mr. Ingram: The financial position of the individual companies within Cooneen Watts and Stone Ltd. was evaluated by the Ministry of Defence accountants and based upon the nature of the contract the company was assessed as acceptable. Unsolicited representations have recently been received concerning the company's financial position and the validity of these comments is being investigated.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department made of whether there would have been a cost saving by splitting the Cut and Sew tender between Cookson and Clegg. [194534]

Mr. Ingram: The selected contractor was assessed as having the best overall ranking against the published award criteria. They also offered the best price.

Our assessment was that Cookson and Clegg Ltd did not offer the most economically advantageous solution for any single work package within this competition, to be the sole supplier. Splitting the contract award, on a lowest price basis, would not in any case have been compliant with the award criteria and the aim of appointing a single supplier with whom we could develop a partnering relationship for the next five years.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether Factory Number 3533 will be used to print and supply the camouflage fabric for the Cut and Sew tender DC4BESL/1002. [193791]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 25 October 2004]: The terminology "Factory Number 3533" is not a designation known to the Ministry of Defence team responsible for this contract. The selection of where manufacturing takes place is a commercial matter for the United Kingdom Prime Contractor and would be withheld under Exemption 7 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

End to End Review

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the final decision will be announced on the conclusions of the End to End Review. [193480]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 25 October 2004]: The End to End Review into logistics support in Air and Land concluded with a written report on 1 July 2003. This led to a six-month period of Demonstration activities to test the efficacy of the assumptions, conclusions and recommendations contained in the Final Report.

Since 1 April 2004, all End to End focused activities have been combined with the extant Defence Logistics Organisation Change Programme, to form the Defence Logistics Transformation Programme, under the guidance of the Chief of Defence Logistics as logistics process owner across Defence.

Delivery of the Defence Logistics Transformation Programme is likely to require announcements and decisions on future logistics support solutions. The announcement I made on 16 September 2004, Official Report, columns 164–65WS, on the future locations of air depth maintenance support was the first major statement and represents a key component of the programme.

FRES Programme

Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to the Answer of 4 October 2004, Official Report, column 1874W, on the FRES Programme, if he will outline the procurement procedure for the family of medium weight armoured vehicles. [191858]

Mr. Ingram: The Assessment Phase of the Future Rapid Effects System (FRES) Programme was formally launched in May 2004. On 6 October, Atkins was nominated as Preferred Bidder for the role of Systems House to lead a number of Assessment Phase activities. It is anticipated that a contract will be in place by the end of the year. The Systems House is independent of product and manufacturing capabilities, and is therefore in a strong position to obtain the widest possible industrial involvement in the Programme.

Studies, analysis and technology risk reduction activities conducted during the Assessment Phase will consider a range of options for FRES. The results of this work will be used to develop optimum procurement and support strategies and to inform decisions for future phases of the programme. All such decisions will take account of the Defence Industrial Policy.

Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Future Rapid Effects System is expected to be fully operational. [191868]

Mr. Ingram: As I said on 4 October 2004, Official Report, column 1874W, the Future Rapid Effect System (FRES) is still early in its Assessment Phase, which will determine when the initial operating capability and full operating capability could be achieved. Our current planning assumption, however, is that early FRES variants will be introduced around the turn of the decade, with further variants introduced at the most appropriate point in the programme, using a phased approach to achieving full operational capability.

Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which British Army medium vehicles have the technological capability to contain the Future Rapid Effects System. [194387]

Mr. Ingram: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 4 October 2004, Official Report, column 1875W.

Future Offensive Air System

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the Future Offensive Air System project; what the project's objectives are; which countries are participating in it; which UK and European aerospace companies are involved; what funding his Department has contributed to its work to date for each of the last five years; and when he expects to make public the outcome of this work. [193496]

Mr. Ingram: The Future Offensive Air System (FOAS) work is assessing our future strike capability requirement from around 2020 onwards.

FOAS is a MOD programme. Work on FOAS is supported in part by the European Technology Acquisition Programme (ETAP), which is designed to develop European technologies for future combat air systems. France, Germany, Italy, Spain and Sweden participate in ETAP along with the UK. FOAS also has links with Australia.

The principal companies involved in FOAS are BAE Systems, MBDA, Thales UK, LogicaCMG, and QinetiQ.

MOD expenditure on FOAS in the last five years has been:

	£ million
1999–2000	15
2000–01	20
2001–02	20
2003–04	14

As the project consists of a number of studies, and outcomes are study-dependant, there is no planned schedule of announcements related to FOAS at this time.

Harpoon Missile

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has (a) to remove Harpoon from Type 22 and Type 23 frigates and (b) to develop a successor to Harpoon; and if he will make a statement. [189753]

Mr. Ingram: Harpoon, in its current or future variants, is expected to remain in service on Type 22 and Type 23 frigates until their planned out of service dates. There is an ongoing surface warfare study considering future weapons solutions.

Helicopters (Sheppey)

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many military helicopters have flown over the Isle of Sheppey at a height of (a) less than 1,000 metres, (b) 1,000 metres, (c) 2,000 metres and (d) over 2,000 metres since May; [195141]

(2) what permission military helicopters require when flying over the Isle of Sheppey below 2,000 metres. [195140]

Mr. Caplin: The western tip of the Isle of Sheppey lies within the Thames Valley Avoidance Area (TVAA). To operate within the TVAA below 2,000 feet military aircraft require permission from MoD Head Office, must make a booking with the low flying booking cell and will also be under air traffic control.

The Isle of Sheppey lies predominantly within Low Flying Area 18, which includes most of Kent and parts of Sussex. If Military helicopters are flying below 500ft they are operating in the Low Flying System, in which case flights need to be pre-planned, and suitably authorised. Otherwise no specific permission is required for flying over the Isle of Sheppey below 2,000 metres. There is an avoidance for all helicopters over the Swaleside Prison.

The information in respect of overflights is not available in the form requested. Details of the number of helicopter flights above 500ft are not held. Data for flights below that height is recorded according to the Low Flying Area (LFA) within which aircraft are operating. Since May 2004, 247 helicopter sorties, totalling 157 hours have been recorded for LFA 18.

Iraq

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many depleted uranium tipped shells have been used in Iraq since March 2003; and what the total weight is of depleted uranium so used. [192722]

Mr. Ingram: There are no depleted uranium (DU) tipped shells in UK service.

I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 19 April 2004, Official Report, column 339W, in respect of the use of DU by United Kingdom armed forces since March 2003.

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for maintaining a reserve battalion in south east Iraq following the redeployment of (a) the Black Watch and (b) other troops in Iraq. [193303]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 5 October 2004]: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made by the right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence in the House on 21 October 2004, Official Report, columns 1035–37.

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what weapons are available to (a) US, (b) British and (c) Iraqi troops serving in Iraq. [193647]

Mr. Ingram: British forces in Iraq deploy with the appropriate weapons and other capabilities for the situation they face, which varies over time and different geographical areas. These range from Challenger II tanks and Warrior Armoured Vehicles, through to small arms. For reasons of operational security, I am not able to go into further details. I am therefore withholding that information under Exemption la of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

The equipment provided to US forces in Iraq is a matter for the US Government.

The equipment and weapon systems used by the Iraqi Security Forces (ISF) are matters for the Iraqi Interim Government, and it would not be appropriate for me to release details. A procurement programme is in place to ensure that the ISF have the right capabilities for the security tasks they face now and in the coming months.

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the Order of Battle in the Iraq theatre of operation will be from 1 November; and if he will make a statement. [193967]

Mr. Hoon: As I announced in the House on 17 June 2004, Official Report, columns 48–49WS, land forces in Iraq are currently undergoing a roulement between the component units of 1 Mechanised Brigade and 4 Armoured Brigade. By 15 November, the roulement will be complete and the anticipated Order of Battle for UK forces in Iraq will be as follows:

Land contribution

Headquarters 4 Armoured Brigade
The Queens Dragoon Guards
The Royal Dragoon Guards
1st Battalion Welsh Guards
1st Battalion Scots Guards
1st Battalion The Duke of Wellington's Regiment
40 Commando (Royal Marines)
1st Battalion Black Watch
4th Regiment Royal Artillery
Phoenix Battery 32 Regiment Royal Artillery
21 Engineer Regiment
Field Support Squadron, 28 Engineer Regiment
1 Battalion REME
Logistic elements from 7 Transport Regiment RLC
Squadron from General Support Medical Regiment
East and West Riding Rifles (TA Force Protection)

At 1 November, the roulement will still be under way, and elements of 1 Mech Brigade will still be in theatre. Troop levels in Iraq are kept under constant review.

Maritime Contribution

HMS Somerset
HMS Echo
RFA Bayleaf (also supporting other operations)

Air Contribution

14 Squadron Tornado GR4 Detachment
10 Squadron VC 10 Detachment
Kinloss Maritime Wing Nimrod MR2 Detachment
24/30 Squadron Hercules Detachment
Joint Helicopter Force—Iraq
32 Squadron HS 125 Detachment
51 Squadron RAF Regiment

Joint Strike Fighter

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations the Government has had with the US Administration about technology transfer and access with regard to the Joint Strike Fighter. [193109]

Mr. Ingram: Ministers and officials regularly discuss Joint Strike Fighter technology access and data release issues with the US Administration.

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what effect the changes to the internal weapons bays of the Joint Strike Fighter will have on the UK's future weapons requirement for that aircraft. [193110]

Mr. Ingram: The longer term trend is toward smaller, more accurate weapons, and therefore the changes to the internal weapons bay of the Short Take Off Vertical Landing Variant of the Joint Strike Fighter are not seen as a major impediment to future weapons capability. If the need arose, the variant could still carry large weapons externally. The changes do not impact on the weapons requirements at the In Service Date.

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to sign a contract for the STOVL variant of the Joint Strike Fighter. [193122]

Mr. Ingram: Contracts will be let by the US on behalf of all Joint Strike Fighter partner nations, and will cover all variants of the aircraft, as required nationally. In common with all the nations, the United Kingdom's first contribution to the production phase is likely to be in 2007, when a commitment to non recurring production costs for the overall production run will be required. Actual orders for UK aircraft are not planned before 2009.

Naval Procurement

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the fabrication of individual blocks, in addition to design, final assembly and integration, is covered by his commitment that warships for the Royal Navy will be built in the UK. [194449]

Mr. Ingram: It is government policy that the fabrication and assembly of new Royal Navy warship hulls should be undertaken in United Kingdom yards. This includes the fabrication of individual blocks of warship hulls.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his proposals for aligning the future naval procurement programme with UK domestic industrial capacity. [194452]

Mr. Ingram: The Ministry of Defence is currently engaged in discussions with appropriate members of United Kingdom industry to align the future naval procurement programme and available UK industrial capacity. The detail will be refined in the coming months as work to develop an industrial strategy for the UK naval shipbuilding industry matures.

Offshore Patrol Vessels

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the lease of the three River Class Offshore Patrol Vessels is due to expire; and what plans he has to (a) purchase these vessels, (b) extend their lease and (c) return them to Vosper Thorneycroft (UK) Ltd. [194681]

Mr. Ingram: The current lease for the three River class OPVs will expire in 2008. We have not yet taken any decisions regarding our future requirement for these ships.

Race Relations Act

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions his Department has had with the Commission for Racial Equality concerning the applicability of the Race Relations Act 1976 to service personnel serving on sovereign bases outside the European Union. [193710]

Mr. Caplin: There have been no such discussions to date. However, with the adoption of the EU Race Discrimination Directive in July 2003, the Race Relations Act has been amended, so that it would apply to service personnel serving on sovereign bases outside Great Britain, and in relation to allegations of race discrimination, which took or take place after the change in the law.

Scottish Regiments

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the percentage of personnel in each of the Scottish regiments are originally from (a) Scotland, (b) the rest of the United Kingdom and (c) overseas. [193162]

Mr. Caplin: The information is as follows:

Nationality of UK trained regular army personnel in each of the Scottish regiments as at 1 September 2004

Percentage[1]

	Nationality
	Scottish[2]	Rest of UK	Overseas
The Royal Scots Dragoon Guards	61	35	4
1st Battalion the Scots Guards and F Company Scots Guards	60	37	3
1st Battalion The Royal Scots	70	13	16
1st Battalion The Royal Highland Fusiliers	85	10	5
1st Battalion The Kings Own Scottish Borderers	82	16	2
1st Battalion The Black Watch	80	15	5
1st Battalion The Highlanders	71	22	7
1st Battalion The Argyle and Sutherland Highlanders	88	11	2

[1] The sum of percentages may not add up to 100 per cent. due to rounding.

[2] Scottish includes those who have specified themselves as British/Scottish. It will not include those who are Scottish but recorded as British.

The information in the table refers to the nationality recorded on the individual's Record of Service and is their current nationality, not necessarily their nationality at birth.

Figures do not include Full-Time Reserve Service (FTRS), Gurkhas or mobilised reservists. The information relates to the strength of UK Trained Regular Army personnel in the Scottish Regiments, regardless of whether they serve away from the main body of the regiment. It does not include members of other regiments and arms/services attached to these regiments.

Seyntex

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to the answer of 25 October 2004, Official Report, column 950W, on Seyntex, if he will make a statement on the bid by Cookson and Clegg with specific reference to delivery. [194535]

Mr. Ingram: Cookson and Clegg did not bid in the competition to supply General Service Tents, to which my hon. Friend refers.

SFOR

Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to the answer of 19 October 2004, Official Report, column 596W, on SFOR, how many of the 1000 UK personnel on the SFOR mission Operation Althea will be infantry. [194382]

Mr. Ingram: The EU-led Operation Althea will be launched on 2 December 2004, following the termination of NATO's SFOR mission. Manning levels will not change significantly from those in SFOR which, at 15 October 2004, were around 1,000 troops in theatre. The British contribution to Operation ALTHEA will include an infantry deployment of 1st Battalion Grenadier Guards, which will comprise up to 500 personnel.

Submarines

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the cost was of the rescue operation for HMCS Chicoutimi and returning her safely to port; and if he will make a statement. [194440]

Mr. Ingram: The full internal costs for the rescue of the HMCS Chicoutimi are not yet available. The cost of the tow, including the hire of the tug, Anglian Princess, is an estimated £190,000. It is not MOD policy to recover costs for assistance in life threatening situations.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when ownership of HMS Upholder transferred from his Department. [194467]

Mr. Ingram: The Ministry of Defence remains the owner of HMS Upholder. Canada is leasing the submarine, re-named as HMCS Chicoutimi, over an eight-year period which commenced at handover on 2 October 2004. Under the terms of the contract between the United Kingdom and Canada, Canada has the right to buy out the lease of the submarines at any time. Canada will pay a token £1 at the end of the lease period to assume full ownership.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who was responsible for the cost of the (a) refit, (b) maintenance and (c) crew training for HMS Upholder. [194468]

Mr. Ingram: Prior to the handover to, and acceptance by Canada of, the Upholder Class Submarines, the Defence Procurement Agency was responsible for the costs of the reactivation (refurbishment) and maintenance of the submarines. Shore training associated with the lease of the submarines to Canada was covered in a separate contract between BAE Systems and Canada. To oversee the shore training, the Ministry of Defence created a specialist team that also provided further onboard training under a Memorandum of Understanding with Canada.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what payments have been received by the Government from the Canadian Government in respect of the Upholder class of submarines. [194469]

Mr. Ingram: The United Kingdom Ministry of Defence has received to date Canadian $310 million in respect of the lease to Canada of the four Upholder Class submarines.

Suez Medal

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many veterans who are eligible for the Suez medal he expects will (a) not have received them and (b) have received them by 14 November; [194925]

(2) what progress has been made in distributing the Suez medals; and when he estimates distribution will be completed. [194918]

Mr. Caplin: By 14 November 2004 it is estimated that 19,100 applications will be awaiting assessment. Assumptions based upon the ratio of veterans found eligible from applications assessed to date suggest that some 15,300 eligible veterans who have applied will not have received their Suez Medal. It is estimated that by 14 November some 18,600 medals will have been issued.

As at 22 October 17,291 Suez Medals had been issued, and it is estimated that all eligible personnel who have applied should have received their medals by December 2005.

Tomahawk Cruise Missiles

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer of 9 March 2004, Official Report, column 1405W, on Tomahawk Cruise Missiles, what estimate he has made of the (a) cost and (b) practicability of fitting Tomahawk cruise missiles to a Type 45 destroyer; and which would be the first in the series of these ships to which the missiles could be fitted. [170655]

Mr. Ingram: There is currently no requirement for the Type 45 destroyer to be fitted with Tomahawk cruise missiles, and so no requirement for a detailed costing to be undertaken. If a requirement is subsequently identified, the appropriate ship in the build or upkeep cycle would be identified as the first to receive such missiles.

Type 23 Frigate

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the running costs of a Type-23 frigate were in the last financial year for which figures are available. [194466]

Mr. Ingram: We do not now manage costs on the basis of individual types of ships. There is therefore no distinct, identifiable budget for Type 23 frigates. But we estimate the average direct running costs for any of the 16 ships of this type in 2003 to be £8.93 million.

Typhoon

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on Tranche 3 of Typhoon. [194620]

Mr. Ingram: The first tranche of 55 Typhoons is on order, and the aircraft are now successfully entering service with the RAF. Negotiations for the second tranche of 89 aircraft are making good progress. Negotiations on an order for Tranche 3 are not expected to start before 2007.

Warships

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to transfer (a) HMS Newcastle, (b) HMS Cardiff and (c) HMS Glasgow to an overseas navy. [194470]

Mr. Ingram: There are currently no plans to transfer HMS Newcastle and HMS Glasgow to an overseas navy. The Ministry of Defence's Disposal Services Agency (DSA) will investigate the possibility of a commercial sale. The disposal route for HMS Cardiff is yet to be agreed.

Whittington Barracks, Lichfield

Michael Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) which bases will be used in England over the next five years for the Army Training Regiment; [193946]

(2) if he will make a statement on the future use of the army barracks at Whittington, Lichfield; [193947]

(3) what plans he has to sell land occupied by the Whittington barracks near Lichfield; [193944]

(4) whether he plans to move the Army Training Regiment for Lichfield. [193945]

Mr. Caplin: The Army Training and Recruiting Agency (ATRA) is currently conducting a study to evaluate the capacity requirements for Phase 1 soldier training and to determine the most long term economical use of the existing Phase 1 training real estate, which includes four Army Training Regiments (ATRs); ATR Bassingbourn, ATR Winchester, ATR Pirbright, ATR Lichfield and the Army Foundation College Harrogate. The study will identify and develop a range of options including the feasibility of closing one of the ATRs. No decisions have yet been reached as the study involves a detailed business case and economic appraisal to determine value for money in any restructuring of Phase 1 training. It is hoped to conclude the study early in 2005.

Any site identified for possible closure would be assessed for alternative uses within the MOD. In the event that another user could not be identified, the site would be closed. The site that is recommended for closure would result in its recruits being reallocated to the remaining three ATRs, with some expansion at the remaining sites to create greater efficiencies in training.

PRIME MINISTER

Black Watch Deployment

Alan Simpson: To ask the Prime Minister if he will give an assurance that when Black Watch troops return to the UK for Christmas they will not be replaced by other British troops in forward deployments outside the Basra area. [194757]

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the right hon. Member for Ross, Skye and Inverness, West (Mr. Kennedy) at Prime Minister's questions on 27 October 2004, Official Report, column 1425.

Gambling

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Prime Minister which (a) UK and (b) international organisations have submitted written representations to his office concerning the Government's proposals for changes to legislation on gambling; and on what dates each representation (i) was received and (ii) was given a substantive response. [194513]

The Prime Minister: The information is not available in the format requested. Since the beginning of the year I have received over 65 letters on the issue of gambling. Given the volume of correspondence I receive, over one million letters and cards in the last year covering a broad spectrum of issues, my office records letters by subject rather than by the view expressed. My office works hard to ensure that all letters receive appropriate responses.

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the overseas visits made by (a) Ministers and (b) officials in his office in relation to proposed changes to legislation on gambling; what the itinerary was for each visit; how long each visit lasted; which hotels were used; what the cost was in each case; and how each visit was funded. [194544]

The Prime Minister: Since 1999 the Government have published an annual list of all visits overseas undertaken by Cabinet Ministers costing £500 or more during each financial year. Copies of these lists are available in the Library of the House. Information on the number of officials accompanying me on overseas visits is included in the list. All travel is undertaken in accordance with the rules set out in the Ministerial Code and Travel by Ministers, and the Civil Service Management Code.

Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what the basis is for the statement he made at his monthly press conference at Downing street on 25 October that the granting of additional powers to local authorities to give planning permission for large leisure complexes and casinos will aid regeneration in these areas. [195389]

The Prime Minister: The evidence of the potential regenerative benefits of resort casinos is summarised in chapter 8 of the report of the Joint Committee on the Draft Gambling Bill (HC 139–1), copies of which are available in the Vote Office and on the Parliament website.

Iraq

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Prime Minister what assurances were given to the US Administration in March 2002 regarding the policy of the British Government on regime change in Iraq. [194617]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Mr. Alexander) to the hon. Member for Montgomeryshire (Lembit Opik) on 27 October 2004, Official Report, column 1254W.

Press Releases

Pete Wishart: To ask the Prime Minister how many press releases have been issued by his Department in each month of 2004; and if he will make a statement. [195452]

The Prime Minister: Press releases issued by my office since the beginning of this year are available on the No. 10 website.

Strategy Unit Budget

Paul Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what the sources of funding for the Strategy Unit budget are in 2004–05. [190749]

Mr. Milburn: I have been asked to reply.

The Strategy Unit is funded mainly by the Cabinet Office with contributions for some projects from other Government Departments.

Travel Costs

Charles Hendry: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to ensure there are no costs to the taxpayer for visits abroad by his wife for (a) personal and (b) business purposes. [195270]

The Prime Minister: Subject to the usual security considerations, there should be no additional cost to the taxpayer from any purely private visit.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Agency Staff

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many agency temporary staff have been working for his Department in each of the last five years, excluding those working for agencies for which no data are kept centrally. [195246]

Maria Eagle: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

ATOS Origin

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) pursuant to the answer of 18 October 2004, Official Report, column 478W, on telephone inquiries, whether ATOS Origin employs an incentive or rating scheme in relation to (a) inquiries and (b) mailings related to the direct payment of pensions and benefits; [193486]

(2) pursuant to the answer of 18 October 2004, Official Report, column 478W, on telephone inquiries, what the terms are of the contract with ATOS Origin; and whether incentive schemes are in operation for ATOS Origin operatives. [195293]

Mr. Pond: There is a commercial contract in place to deliver the conversion of benefit and pensions customers to Direct Payment through a customer conversion centre. Elements of the contract contain commercially confidential information and we are unable to disclose them, however I can say that there is no incentive scheme within the terms of this contract for staff involved in the process of converting customers to Direct Payment.

Benefit Payments (Pensioners)

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many pensioners are in receipt of (a) council tax benefit and (b) housing benefit in (i) Angus and (ii) Scotland. [193450]

Mr. Pond: Information on the numbers of pensioners receiving housing benefit and council tax benefit is not available below National or Government Office Region level. The available information is in the table.

Housing benefit and council tax benefit recipients aged 60 and over in Scotland: May 2003

	Benefit units [1]	Beneficiaries [2]
Housing benefit	197,000	230,000
Council tax benefit	275,000	324,000

[1] Pensioners are defined as pensioner benefit units where the claimant and/or partner are aged 60 or over. This may be a single person, couple or family.

[2] 'Beneficiaries' are the sum of claimants and partners aged 60 or over.

Notes:

1. The figures are based on a 1 per cent. sample and are therefore subject to a degree of sampling variation.

2. The figures have been rounded to the nearest thousand.

3. Council tax benefit totals exclude any Second Adult Rebate cases.

4. Housing benefit figures exclude any Extended Payment cases.

Correspondence

David Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a reply to his letter of 9 August sent to the Department for Education and Skills, transferred to the Department for Work and Pensions on 17 August, and passed to Jobcentre Plus, ref. POS(7)10644/0039; and what the reasons are for the delay in replying. [194944]

Jane Kennedy: The administration of Jobcentre Plus is a matter for the Chief Executive of Jobcentre Plus, David Anderson. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Stephen Hewitt to Mr. David Winnick, dated 29 October 2004:

The Secretary of State for Work and Pensions has asked me to reply to your question concerning your letter of 9 August to the Department for Education and Skills and to explain the reasons for the delay. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to David Anderson as Chief Executive of Jobcentre Plus. I am replying on his behalf as a member of the Jobcentre Plus Board.

Your letter was transferred to the Correspondence Team in Jobcentre Plus on 17 August but, unfortunately, we did not receive it. It was only when you enquired about the lack of response that this problem came to light. We finally received your letter on 8 October. I am currently in the process of investigating the issues you have raised and will send you a reply by 5 November. I apologise for the delay and, in light of the problems you have experienced, we will review the processes of both the Department and Jobcentre Plus to ensure this does not recur.

I hope this is helpful.

CSA

Rob Marris: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions for what reason the net administration costs of the Child Support Agency increased by 9.75 per cent. from 2002–03 to 2003–04. [190708]

Mr. Pond: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mr. Doug Smith. He will write to the hon. Member with the information requested.

Letter from Doug Smith to Rob Marris, dated 25 October 2004:

In reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the Child Support Agency the Secretary of State promised a substantive reply from the Chief Executive.

You asked the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, for what reason the net administration costs of the Child Support Agency increased by 9.75 per cent. from 2002–03 to 2003–04.

The total increase in gross administrative costs between the two years is £28.716 million. £23.149 million of this increase relates to non-staff costs and £5.567 million relates to staff costs.

Non-Staff Costs

All fixed price IT services are reported in the accounts of the Department for Work and Pensions. This year there was a change in methodology for recharging this cost. This increased our charge by £6.785 million.

Departmental corporate re-charges for services such as finance, personnel, commercial management, postage, accommodation and assurance increased by £6.974 million.

The expenditure on Child Support Reform is reported in the accounts of the Department for Work and Pensions. The Department for Work and Pension reimburse the Agency for activity on these programmes. The amount of this reimbursement fell in the 2003–04 financial year by £18.202 million.

Efficiencies in other areas have resulted in other non-staff costs principally Agency expenditure on postage, printing and stationery, travel and subsistence and office services falling by £8.812 million.

Staff Costs

Last years pay settlement added 4 per cent. to the Agency pay costs, and changes to employer national insurance rates added a further 1 per cent. This was offset because the average number of staff employed was slightly lower in 2003–04 than in the previous year. This is explained further in Note 2 to the Administration Accounts.

Rob Marris: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions for what reason the non-staff administration costs of the Child Support Agency increased by 27 per cent. from 2002–03 to 2003–04. [190709]

Mr. Pond: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mr. Doug Smith. He will write to the hon. Member with the information requested.

Letter from Doug Smith to Mr. Rob Marris, dated 25 October 2004:

In reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the Child Support Agency the Secretary of State promised a substantive reply from the Chief Executive.

You asked the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, for what reason the non-staff administration costs of the Child Support Agency increased by 27 per cent. from 2002–03 to 2003–04.

The increase in non-staff costs between the two years is £23.149 million. This is referred to at Note 5(b), 5(c) and 5(d) to the 2003–04 Administrative Account. In summary the main factors increasing expenditure are:

All fixed price IT services are reported in the accounts of the Department for Work and Pensions. This year there was a change in methodology for recharging this cost. This increased our charge by £6.785 million.

Departmental corporate re-charges for services such as finance, personnel, commercial management, postage, accommodation and assurance increased by £6.974 million.

The expenditure on Child Support Reform is reported in the accounts of the Department for Work and Pensions. The Department for Work and Pensions reimburses the Agency for activity on these programmes. The amount of this reimbursement fell in the 2003–04 financial year by £18.202 million.

Efficiencies in other areas have resulted in other non-staff costs principally Agency expenditure on postage, printing and stationery, travel and subsistence and office services falling by £8.812 million.

Departmental Redundancies

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what funding has been set aside to retrain staff from job centres and benefits agency offices who lose their jobs. [190677]

Jane Kennedy: The administration of Jobcentre Plus is a matter for the Chief Executive of Jobcentre Plus, David Anderson. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from David Anderson to Mr. Chris Ruane, dated 1 November 2004:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions concerning the funding that has been set aside to retrain staff from job centres and Benefits Agency offices. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of Jobcentre Plus.

The Department for Work and Pensions will only consider compulsory redundancies when absolutely necessary. However where redundancies are deemed necessary the department will fund outplacement support for staff affected and is currently working with external partners regarding this provision. As we are currently in negotiation with the providers we are not able to divulge outplacement costs at this stage as this would be to provide contractual information prior to the contract being signed.

I hope this is helpful.

Gangmasters/Employment Agencies

Jim Sheridan: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions whether his Department has access to the data collated from the ACU1 forms, ACU2 forms and 46ACU forms that are returned to the Inland Revenue Agricultural Compliance Unit by those using the services of a gangmaster or employment agency. [192596]

Mr. Pond: DWP has access to the data collated on forms ACU1, ACU2 and 46ACU through Section 109 of the Social Security Act 1992 when the documents are held at a place of work and through Section 122 of the Social Security Act 1992 when the documents are held by the Inland Revenue.

Gas Installers Qualifications

Helen Southworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what training opportunities are available for older workers who wish to retrain to achieve Council for Registered Gas Installers qualifications; and how local information on access to those opportunities can be obtained. [193628]

Jane Kennedy: Training opportunities may be available through Ambition:Energy which is a national pilot programme aimed at addressing skill shortages in the energy sector, whilst providing quality job opportunities for unemployed or inactive people aged 18 and over. Ambition:Energy recently won a prestigious National Training Award for the partnership between Jobcentre Plus and Energy and Utility Skills.

Ambition:Energy offers training to NVQ level 2 in Domestic Gas Installation and Maintenance, which enables the qualification holder to become CORGI registered. The training comprises 27 weeks' technical and lifeskills training plus work experience with a potential employer, while the individual remains on benefit plus a training allowance. Participants also receive driving tuition, if required. Once in employment, participants complete a further eight weeks' training and assessment to achieve the full NVQ2, normally within the first six months.

Although Ambition:Energy is a national programme, courses are only run where employer commitment to real jobs has been clearly defined. As a result, 929 people have successfully secured jobs as domestic gas installers (69 per cent. of those starting the programme) and 89 per cent. remain in employment for at least six months.

When employer engagement has been defined, intensive advertising is undertaken in the recruitment area through the Jobcentre Plus network. This involves a combination of Jobcentre Plus Adviser awareness activities, publicity materials and engagement with outreach organisations.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the average time taken to process housing benefit claims was in each local authority in each of the last two years. [194538]

Mr. Pond: Since September 2002, DWP has published a range of performance indicators showing the speed and accuracy for all local authorities in the administration of housing benefit and council tax benefit. The statistics are published on the DWP website on a quarterly basis at www.dwp.gov.uk/asd/asd1/hb_ctb/performance.asp and are also available in the Library.

The publication of the fourth quarter's data of 2003–04 on 24 June 2004 provided the final audited figures for 2002–03, and un-audited annual figures for 2003–04.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what percentage of housing benefit claims were refused in the last period for which figures are available. [194539]

Mr. Pond: In 2003–04 the percentage of housing benefit claims that were refused was 11.8 per cent. This figure is based on un-audited data provided to the Department by local authorities on a quarterly basis.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what percentage of those claiming incapacity benefit also received (a) income support and (b) disability premiums in each year since 1997; and if he will estimate the cost of income support and disability premium payments to incapacity benefit claimants in each year since 1997. [193001]

Maria Eagle [holding answer 21 October 2004]: The information is in the tables.

Working age claimants of Incapacity Benefit (IB), Severe Disablement Allowance (SDA), or National Insurance credits only (Credits only)

Notes:

1. Figures are rounded to the nearest hundred and shown in thousands.
2. Working age claimants are men aged 16–64 and women aged 16–59.
3. Numbers are taken from a 5 per cent. sample and are subject to a degree of sampling error.
4. Working age client group dataset excludes a small number of Incapacity Benefit (IB) claimants who are over State Pension Age (SPA), and Income Support claimants above SPA (whether or not they have a partner under SPA).
5. Figures cover individuals claiming both IB/SDA and IS. There will be some additional cases where a person claims IB/SDA with their partner claiming IS on behalf of the benefit unit. The number of such cases is unknown.

Notes:

1. Figures show total cost of Income Support paid to Incapacity Benefit recipients, and people receiving National Insurance Credits on grounds of incapacity, whether they receive a Disability Premium in Income Support or not, and separately, spending only for those that receive a Disability Premium. Spending on the latter group is a subset of the expenditure on the former group.
2. Figures are estimates based on a 5 per cent. sample of the caseload, taken in February, May, August and November each year. They have been calculated by multiplying weekly average amounts for each group by the caseload in each group. This figure was multiplied by 52 to give an estimate of annual costs.

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions which medical services that receive referrals from Jobcentre Plus with reference to incapacity benefit have since appointment (a) hit and (b) missed their 32 working-day target by which they aim to complete their part of the examination process. [194739]

Maria Eagle: The current target of an Average Actual Clearance Time (AACT) of 32 working days for ATOS Origin Medical Services to complete their part of the incapacity benefit examination process has been in place since April 2003. The target is measured in each of the three contract package areas.

The level of achievement against the target up to the end of September 2004 is in the table.

Contract package area	Number of months where target was achieved	Number of months where target was missed
North	17	1

Incapacity/Severe Disablement Benefit

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many people in receipt of invalidity benefit prior to 12 April 1995 were transferred to incapacity benefit and have been continuously in receipt to the present date, broken down by (a) age, (b) gender, (c) region and (d) diagnosis group. [190906]

Maria Eagle: As at 31 May 2004, a total of 781,300 incapacity benefits claimants began their claim on or before 12 April 1995.

The requested breakdown of the available information has been placed in the Library.

Notes:

1. The figure in the answer above has been rounded to the nearest hundred.
2. It is based on a 5 per cent. sample, and therefore subject to a degree of sampling variation.
3. The figure includes all those who were in receipt of invalidity benefit, sickness benefit, non-contributory invalidity pension or national insurance credits only, prior to 13 April 1995 and who have remained continuously in receipt of incapacity benefit, severe disablement allowance or national insurance credits only up to 31 May 2004.

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the cost was of administering the appeal system for incapacity benefit and severe disablement allowance in each year since 1997. [191679]

Maria Eagle: This is a matter for Christina Townsend, Chief Executive of the Appeals Service. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Norman Egan to Mr. Paul Goodman, dated 1 November 2004:

The Secretary of State has asked Christina Townsend to respond to your question regarding the cost of administering the appeal system for Incapacity Benefit and Severe Disablement Allowance in each year since 1997. Christina is away from the office at the moment and I have been asked to reply.

The information you have requested is only available from 2001 and is attached in the table below. Please note that we do not hold exact figures for each benefit type, so the amounts quoted are calculated on average administrative and judicial costs, including overheads.

2001–02	8.2
2002–03	9.5
2003–04	11.6

I hope this reply is helpful.

Job Centres

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions which job centres are to be closed in north Wales; which job centres will remain open; and what the timescale is for those remaining open to become Jobcentre Plus. [190675]

Jane Kennedy: The administration of Jobcentre Plus is a matter for the Chief Executive of Jobcentre Plus, David Anderson. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from David Anderson to Chris Ruane, dated 1 November 2004:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions concerning the closure of Jobcentres in North Wales. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of Jobcentre Plus.

The Jobcentre Plus District of Wrexham and North Wales Coast covers the four counties of Wrexham, Flintshire, Denbighshire and Conwy. Under the current Service Delivery Plan, the new Jobcentre Plus integrated service should be delivered from the following locations:

Colwyn Bay
Rhyl
Flint
Wrexham (Ty Maelor, Grosvenor Road)
Llandudno
Mold
Connah's Quay

All offices scheduled under the current plan to deliver this service will be fully converted by the end of March 2006. The work will be phased to minimise the disruption to our customers whilst the conversion work is undertaken.

The following Jobcentre sites will remain open until the sites delivering the new service have been fully enhanced and Flexible Service Delivery is in operation across the four counties:

Conwy
Prestatyn
Holywell
Cefn Mawr
Llanrwst
Denbigh
Llangollen.

These seven offices will then close.

The Jobcentre Plus District of North West Wales and Powys covers the three counties of Ynys Mon, Gwynedd and Powys. This District already delivers the new integrated Jobcentre Plus service from offices in the following locations:

Amlwch
Bangor
Brecon
Caernarfon
Dolgellau
Holyhead
Llandrindod Wells
Llangefni
Machynlleth
Newtown
Porthmadog
Pwllheli
Welshpool
Ystradgynlais

In addition Flexible Service Delivery operates in the following locations:

Barmouth
Beamaris
Blaenau Ffestiniog
Builth Wells
Knighton
Penygroes
Tywyn

I hope this is helpful.

Jobcentre Plus

Paul Holmes: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) what steps he is taking to increase awareness of the Jobcentre Plus Customers Charter among (a) customers and (b) staff; and if he will make a statement; [193260]

(2) what steps he will take to (a) improve the quality and volume of information on benefit entitlements available to customers in relation to Jobcentre Plus, (b) provide an improved telephone service and (c) improve staff attitudes; and if he will make a statement; [193263]

(3) if he will make a statement on the Jobcentre Plus National Customer Satisfaction Survey 2004. [193281]

Jane Kennedy: The administration of Jobcentre Plus is a matter for the Chief Executive of Jobcentre Plus, David Anderson. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Mr. David Anderson to Mr Paul Holmes, dated 1 November 2004:

The Secretary of State for Work and Pensions has asked me to reply direct to your questions about increasing awareness of the Customers' Charter amongst customers and staff; about the steps being taken to improve the quality and volume of information on benefit entitlements available to customers, providing an improved telephone service and improving staff attitudes and about the National Customer Satisfaction Survey 2004. These are matters which fall within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of Jobcentre Plus.

The current Customers' Charter was developed before the launch of Jobcentre Plus and involved consultation with customers, their representative groups and our staff. Its aim was to make clear the minimum standards of service customers could expect from the new agency.

Awareness of the Charter is high amongst staff. However, the results of the 2003 National Satisfaction Survey showed that less than a third of customers knew about the Charter and understood its purpose. That finding was explored in greater depth in late 2003 when an independent research organisation (GHK) was commissioned to complete a review of the Charter involving customers, their representatives' groups and our staff.

A number of recommendations were made from staff and customers about style, content and the need to raise awareness of our customer service commitments. We are considering these recommendations with a view to making changes to the existing Charter and how we communicate our service standards in 2005.

Jobcentre Plus has robust systems and procedures in place to ensure that both written and verbal information offered to customers on benefit entitlements is accurate. In addition, Jobcentre Plus checks the accuracy of written information it provides to its customers by a 6 monthly review of the content of all leaflets about benefits and services for people of working age. This forms part of an agreement made with the Secretary of State each year.

In April 2004, we conducted research into our customers' requirements of information on work and benefits. As a result of these findings the existing leaflets for working age customers are being replaced with a new range of products, restructured to better meet customer requirements and fit into Jobcentre Plus' business processes. We anticipate that the new leaflets will become available on a rolling basis during 2005.

We have also changed the way we provide information and guidance to our own staff in order to ensure that it is accurate and up to date. We have implemented an electronically based system which all staff can access through their desk top PCs. The guidance is centrally maintained to ensure currency and accuracy and it is structured to provide links to learning material and other relevant guidance.

Jobcentre Plus is establishing a network of modern contact centres to answer calls from customers about claims to benefit and looking for work. When the network is complete, access to Jobcentre Plus by telephone will be simpler and more straightforward.

We are committed to ensuring our staff have the appropriate skills and professional approach when dealing with our customers. We have a range of learning products available on areas such as customer service, equal opportunities, interviewing and communication skills.

Furthermore, we expect managers to play an important part in ensuring that correct attitudes and behaviours are displayed by observing and giving feedback as part of their role. In support of this activity, we are developing a Quality Assurance Framework which defines our customer service standards and the behaviours which support them. This product will be available in early 2005 and will help managers work with their staff to identify levels of attainment and on-going learning needs.

The first National Customer Satisfaction Survey was published in September 2003 and acts as a baseline measure against which subsequent surveys can be measured. The Surveys seek to determine customers' levels of satisfaction with the delivery of customer service standards as described in the Customers' Charter.

The 2004 National Customer Satisfaction Survey was undertaken by the Policy Research Institute (PRI), Leeds Metropolitan University. The research showed that overall level of satisfaction with the customer service provided is high, with 80% of respondents reported being very or fairly satisfied with the standard of service they received.

The findings in 2004 are consistent with the 2003 baseline results with improvements showing in a number of areas of service. These include the proportion of customers considering staff attitudes as a reason for complaining which has fallen from 26% in 2003 to 19% in 2004.

We also asked respondents whether they thought service had improved, stayed the same or deteriorated in the past 12 months. 24% felt it had improved, while 69% felt it had stayed the same.

While we are encouraged by these findings, we recognise the importance of continually improving customer service and, in relation to the service standards in the Charter, will continue to focus on improving the ability of staff to determine the needs of customers and provide relevant and appropriate information.

Paul Holmes: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a statement on training provisions for Jobcentre Plus staff. [193279]

Jane Kennedy: The administration of Jobcentre Plus is a matter for the Chief Executive of Jobcentre Plus, David Anderson. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Mr. David Anderson to Mr. Paul Holmes, 1 November 2004:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question concerning the training provision available for Jobcentre Plus staff. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of Jobcentre Plus.

Jobcentre Plus is committed to the training and development of its entire staff and is an accredited Investor in People.

We provide an extensive range of training provision (over 300 learning products) and delivered over 600,000 learning days during 2003/04, which focused on the knowledge, skills and attitude required to enable our staff to effectively support our customers.

Line Managers play a key role in identifying learning needs through our performance and development system and in supporting the individual to build the knowledge and skills they need.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Paul Holmes: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many incorrect payments of jobseeker's allowance were made in each month of the last three years, broken down by (a) age, (b) ethnicity and (c) gender; and if he will make a statement. [193261]

Mr. Pond: Incorrect payments include both overpayments and underpayments which occur as a result of fraud, customer error and official error. Jobseeker's allowance is paid fortnightly and the following figures therefore refer to fortnightly payments.

In 2001–02, we estimate that 3.4 million incorrect JSA payments were made to claimants. The equivalent figure for 2002–03 was 3.2 million. Figures for 2003–04 are not yet available.

No breakdown is available by month, age, ethnicity or gender.

Pension Credit

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will disregard war disablement pension payments when calculating pension credit; and if he will make a statement. [194668]

Malcolm Wicks: War pensions act as an income replacement. Totally ignoring them would mean that income from a war pension would be paid in addition to the guarantee and any savings credit. Consequently, people with a war pension would be treated much more generously under pension credit than other pensioners.

We already recognise the special nature of war pensions and disregard the first £10 of a war pension. Also war pensions are treated as qualifying income for the savings credit so are rewardable under pension credit. We believe that war pensioners should receive this generous treatment in view of service they have given.

Tsar Appointments

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many tsars have been appointed with responsibilities which cover part of the work of his Department; and if he will make a statement. [191926]

Maria Eagle: The Department has not appointed any tsars. No other appointees who cover part of the work of the Department bear that title.

Welfare to Work Programme

Paul Holmes: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many people have left the New Deal for Young People to enter the Welfare to Work Programme (a) after claiming jobseeker's allowance for six months or more and (b) after claiming jobseeker's allowance for less than six months because they have (i) a physical disability, (ii) a learning disability and (iii) been advised to by a personal adviser, in each year for which the information is available. [193572]

Jane Kennedy: The available information is in the table.

CABINET OFFICE

Members' Allowances

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office on what basis (a) honourable Members are paid at the rate of 57.7 pence per mile and (b) civil servants are paid at a rate of 25 pence per mile for car use. [194120]

Ruth Kelly: For hon. Members, the rates of motor mileage allowance were set in 1996 to reflect motoring costs and have been uprated each year by Retail Price Index (RPI). In common with employees in all sectors, they pay income tax and national insurance on the excess over the Inland Revenue approved rate.

For civil servants, the setting of motor mileage allowances has been delegated to Departments since 1993, so rates will vary.

Strategy and Delivery Units

Paul Flynn: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will list the (a) public and (b) private reports the Strategy Unit produced in each of the last two years. [190242]

Mr. Milburn: The Strategy Unit undertakes a range of projects. The majority culminate in a published report; the remainder are presented as confidential advice to Ministers.

The following is a list of published reports and publications since the Strategy Unit was created in June 2002.

Paul Flynn: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what proportion of the Strategy Unit's budget was spent on (a) public and (b) private reports in each of the last two years. [190243]

Mr. Milburn: The total Strategy Unit budget for 2003–04 was 4.7 million. Disproportionate costs would be incurred in calculating the proportion of the Strategy Unit budget spent on public and private reports.

Paul Flynn: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office pursuant to the answer of 4 October 2004, Official Report, columns 1863–64W, who financed the Strategy Unit report on drug supply. [190294]

Mr. Milburn: The report on drugs was financed by the Cabinet Office.

Ministerial Expenses

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how much the Department spent on (a) maintenance, (b) renovation, (c) council tax and (d) running costs of residential properties used by Ministers and officials in each year since 1997. [191400]

Ruth Kelly: Admiralty House contains residential accommodation for Ministers and the occupying Departments are responsible for relevant costs associated with each of the residential flats. No Cabinet Office Ministers are currently accommodated in Admiralty House. The Cabinet Office is responsible for costs associated with the common parts, as well as for maintaining the fabric of the entire building.

The Cabinet Office's share of the maintenance costs of Admiralty House for 2003–04 was £12,237.

No major refurbishment work was undertaken in 2003–04.

The Cabinet Office's share of the running costs of Admiralty House (i.e. excluding the appropriate share of the costs from the occupying Departments) for 2003–04 was £383,109. For information, I refer the hon. Member to the response given on 19 November 2003, Official Report, column 879W.

Information about the costs of official residences used by Ministers for previous financial years is already in the public domain.

During 2003–04, three Cabinet Office officials were occupying accommodation in residential properties in the grounds of the Emergency Planning College in Easingwold. The number of properties varied from month to month. One flat was occupied by an official working at the Emergency Planning College on detached duty. The other occupants paid a market rent for the properties, established by independent valuers appointed by the Office of Government Commerce. Records are not held separately of the maintenance, renovation and running costs associated with these properties in particular and these costs could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The council tax for 2003–04 associated with the property occupied by the individual on detached duty was approximately £205.

Since 13 May 2002, when the Cabinet Office entered into a PPP contract with Initial Style Conferences Limited (ISC) for the latter to provide a range of services at the Centre for Management Policy Studies College at Sunningdale, the Department has incurred no costs in providing residential properties to Ministers or officials.

Parliamentary Questions

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he will reply to the question tabled by the hon. Member for New Forest, East for named day reply on 25 October 2004, ref.193672. [194856]

Mr. Milburn: I replied to the hon. Member on 25 October 2004, Official Report, column 1053W.

Theft and Fraud

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what her estimate is of the cost of theft and fraud to (a) her Department, (b) its agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies in each year since 1997. [191412]

Ruth Kelly: The cost of theft and fraud to the Department, its agencies, and non-departmental public bodies, in each of the last seven financial years are shown in the following table.

HEALTH

Drug Rehabilitation

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of progress in reducing waiting times for drug rehabilitation assistance in (a) south Somerset and (b) Somerset; and if he will make a statement. [192070]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The National Treatment Agency (NTA) set national waiting time targets for drug treatment services in December 2001. The average waiting time figures for Somerset in December 2001, the current waiting times and the national waiting time targets set for April 2004 are shown in the table. Data on waiting times is only routinely collected at drug action team (DAT) level, so I am not able to provide specific data in relation to south Somerset.

[1] Not available. Somerset does not have structured day care services available.

The work of the NTA South West regional team to reduce waiting times has included:

> An improvement programme put in place this year has produced more effective and robust partnership structures to drive forward reduction of waiting times and other improvements in treatment.
> Agencies who are partners in Somerset DAT have plans in place to develop a new structured day programme in order to provide problem drug users resident in Somerset with access to the full range of treatment modalities in the county.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the waiting time between assessment and prescribing for people wanting help to avoid reliance on illegal drugs in Yeovil constituency; and if he will make a statement. [192069]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Waiting time figures are only available at drug action team (DAT) level, so I am not able to provide specific data in relation to Yeovil.

However, the latest average waiting times in Somerset, of which Yeovil is a part for specialist and general practitioner prescribing services, is shown in the table. For comparison, I have shown the latest figures against the average waiting times in December 2001, when the National Treatment Agency (NTA) set national waiting time targets for drugs treatment services, which are also shown.

The data shown is in terms of weeks.

Air Ambulances

David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance is provided to NHS trusts on the use of air ambulances. [193964]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Air ambulances are provided through charitable organisations.

The Department informed ambulance services and their commissioners in January 2002 that the cost of clinical staff on air ambulances should from 1 April 2002 be met by the national health service on a continuing basis.

The Department has issued guidance on "Use of military helicopters by the NHS" [HSG(97)33] and this is available on the Department's website at: www.dh.gov.uk/PublicationsAndStatistics/LettersAndCirculars/HealthServiceGuidelines/HealthServiceGuidelinesArticle/fs/en?CONTENT_ID=4018355&chk=eziOGO.

NHS Staff (Assaults)

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many members of staff working in accident and emergency departments in hospitals in the Greater London area have been assaulted by members of the general public during the last 12 months. [195370]

Dr. Ladyman: The information requested is collected at national health service organisation level, rather than for individual accident and emergency departments. Information on the number of reported violent incidents against NHS staff for the NHS organisations within the five London strategic health authority areas for 2002–03 is shown in the table.

Reported violent incidents against NHS staff in London 2002–03

Back Pain

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the total public expenditure resulting from back pain in each of the last five years. [194075]

Dr. Ladyman: No estimate has been made.

Care Homes

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have been on the waiting list for care homes in (a) the Jarrow constituency, (b) South Tyneside, (c) Tyne and Wear and (d) England in each year since 1997. [193634]

Dr. Ladyman: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Carers

Jon Cruddas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) carers and (b) young carers of school age there are in the London borough of Barking and Dagenham. [194416]

Dr. Ladyman: The numbers of carers of all ages in the London borough of Barking and Dagenham, as recorded in the 2001 Census, are shown in the table.

Consultant Waiting Times

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average waiting time is in hospitals within the Greater London area for a person referred by a general practitioner to see a hospital consultant. [194141]

Dr. Ladyman: Information requested for the five London strategic health authorities is shown in the table.

Dementia

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people living in Greater London have dementia; and how many of them are over the age of 65. [195367]

Dr. Ladyman: The information requested is not held centrally.

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) men and (b) women living in the Greater London area suffer from Alzheimer's disease. [195368]

Dr. Ladyman: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Dentistry

Andy Burnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many tooth extractions under general anaesthetic were carried out on children aged under 10 years in the last two years in each strategic health authority in England. [191277]

Ms Rosie Winterton [holding answer 20 October 2004]: The latest information available is shown in the table.

Notes:

1. An FCE is defined as a period of admitted patient care under one consultant within one health care provider. Please note that the figures do not represent the number of patients, as a person may have more than one episode of care within the year.
2. Figures are grossed for both coverage and missing/invalid clinical data, except for 2002–03, which are not yet adjusted for shortfalls.
3. The main operation is the first recorded operation in the HES data set and is usually the most resource intensive procedure performed during the episode. It is appropriate to use main operation when looking at admission details, eg. time waited, but the figures for "all operations count of episodes" give a more complete count of episodes with an operation.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average annual payment made by the NHS to a dentist working full-time and with a wholly NHS patient list was in the last year for which figures are available. [191761]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Information from which we could exclude national health service dentists with mixed private and NHS practices is not routinely available. In the year 2003–04, dentists with a significant NHS commitment received average gross income including payments such as seniority and commitment payments of about £150,000 in England and Wales. Gross payments to a dentist cover both net income to the dentist and the dentist's expenses.

Foundation Trusts

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps have been undertaken by his Department to monitor progress in setting up (a) foundation hospitals and (b) foundation boards. [193332]

Mr. Hutton: The process of setting up national health service foundation trusts is set out in the Health and Social Care Act 2003. In summary, applicant NHS trusts must first obtain the Secretary of State's approval to submit an application to Monitor (whose statutory name is the independent regulator of NHS foundation trusts). To obtain this, applicants must demonstrate their suitability to go forward to be considered by Monitor by submitting their proposed human resources strategy, a service development strategy and their proposed governance arrangements (on which they must hold public consultation on their proposals).

Applicants that are successful can then apply to Monitor, which is responsible for authorising applications for NHS foundation trust status. As part of the authorisation process, Monitor must satisfy itself about an applicant's preparedness and viability and be satisfied that applicants have met the statutory requirements set out in the Act. Details of Monitor's requirements are outlined in its "Guide to Applicants", which is published on its website at www.nhsft-regulator.gov.uk. Once authorised, it is the responsibility of Monitor to oversee the operation of NHS foundation trusts and to ensure they remain within their terms of authorisation and legislative framework.

Gender Dysphoria

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his answer of 20 October 2004, Official Report, column 791W, on gender dysphoria, if he will make it his policy to collect centrally the average waiting times for a first appointment at each gender identity clinic for people suffering from gender dysphoria. [194032]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Department collects data on waiting times by consultant-led specialty. We have no plans to collect data by sub-specialty.

Health Services (York)

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many full-time equivalent jobs (a) his Department and (b) its executive agencies had in (i) Yorkshire and the Humber and (ii) the City of York in (A) 1997 and (B) the latest year for which figures are available. [191849]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The information available is shown in the table. We do not hold any specific information about the number of posts in the City of York as our data are collected by Government region.

Hospital Infections

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the trusts which require consultation as a mandatory step between infection control teams and contract tendering procedures for (a) new build projects, (b) cleaning, (c) laundry services and (d) catering services. [193458]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested is not available.

All national health service trusts are required to appoint a director of infection prevention and control to take an active role in ensuring infection control issues are taken into account when decisions are being made on the provision of these services.

NHS Estates guidance recommends the involvement of the infection control team at all stages of the planning, design and construction of buildings, and the provision of non-clinical support services, to address infection control risks.

Hospital Trusts

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what procedures are in place to ensure that evidence given by a hospital trust is accurate; and what action he can take against hospital trusts who submit inaccurate and misleading information. [192288]

Miss Melanie Johnson: We expect all national health service trusts to act with probity and integrity in their conduct. In this, NHS trusts are performance managed by strategic health authorities.

The Code of Conduct for NHS managers was issued in October 2002 under the National Health Service Act 1977 and the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990. The code is set out as a series of principles that NHS managers will observe. This includes the principle that a manager:

> " . . . will be honest and act with integrity and probity at all times. I will not make, permit or knowingly allow to be made, any untrue or misleading statement relating to my own duties or the functions of my employer."

Medical Students (Bursaries)

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health why final year medical students have not yet received notification of their bursary awards. [194359]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 28 October 2004]: Students are usually notified at the time a final decision on their award is made. Currently, the NHS Pensions Agency grants unit has finalised the awards for 3,474 new medical and dental students. Due to constraints within the existing computer system, students whose academic year began before 1 September 2004 have not yet received notification, although payment has been made where appropriate. Action is in hand to improve the system.

Mental Health Services

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what public spending on mental health services was per head of population in England in each of the last five years. [194074]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Information on expenditure by the national health service on mental health services per head of population in England in each of the last five years is shown in table 1, which employs the hospital and community health service deflator. Table 2 provides the same information in cash terms. The data exclude social care spend on people with mental health problems, and expenditure concerning people treated in primary care for whom a specific diagnosis has not been reached. The figures therefore underestimate the total mental health expenditure.

MH expenditure per head of population (£ million)	72.94	77.82	83.54	84.15	91.71

Notes:

1. The figures are taken from the expenditure per head of population (EPHoP) analysis of healthcare spend. EPHoP measures activity from inpatients, outpatients and community based patients against expenditure taken from the hospital and community health service programme budget.

2. The programme budget is compiled using NHS accounts: a combination of finance returns from strategic health authorities, NHS trusts, primary care trusts and the strategic health authority summarisation schedules.

3. Activity data from a range of sources, for example hospital episode statistics, Körner community returns, the Living in Britain survey, etc. are used to distribute the expenditure figures for each sector (i.e. mental health, acute services, etc.) proportionally across the whole population.

4. Using the combination of expenditure and activity figures, the treatment cost is for each person within each age group and for each type of activity is calculated.

Mesothelioma

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what Government funding has been provided for research into mesothelioma in the last 10 years; and what funding is available over the next five. [192681]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The NHS Plan announced that the Department would provide an additional £20 million per year to establish a national cancer research network. The National Cancer Research Network (NCRN) and the National Translational Cancer Research Network were established as a result. The NCRN is currently providing national health service infrastructure support for four mesothelioma studies. These are:

the MS01 trial (jointly funded by cancer charities, the British Thoracic Society and a pharmaceutical company)—a trial of chemotherapy for patients with malignant pleural mesothelioma;

the MALCS study (funded by the Health and Safety Executive)—a population based case-control study of mesothelioma and lung cancer in relation to occupation in British men and women under the age of 60;

the MARS (Mesothelioma and Radical Surgery) study (funded by Cancer Research UK and the June Hancock Mesothelioma Research Fund). This is a pilot study to determine the feasibility and acceptability of performing a randomised trial comparing extra-pleural pneumonectomy (EPP) against no EPP surgery within the context of trimodality therapy (chemotherapy, surgery, post-operative radiotherapy); the VATS study (funded by the BUPA Foundation)—a prospective randomised controlled trial of video-assisted thoracoscopic (VATS) cytoreductive pleurectomy compared to talc pleurodesis in patients with suspected or proven malignant mesothelioma.

No other information is available to the Department on research into mesothelioma showing Government funding support.

Out-of-Hours Services

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent guidance his Department has issued to primary care services with regard to out-of-hours services; and if he will make a statement. [192553]

Ms Rosie Winterton: On 14 October, we published the Government's response to the Health Committee Report on general practitioner out-of-hours services (Cm 6352).

On the same day, we launched the "New Quality Requirements in the Delivery of Out-of-Hours Services" and commentary. These standards ensure that out-of-hours care, wherever provided, is delivered to a consistently high standard. The requirements come into force from 1 January 2005, replacing the current national quality standards, which have been in force since November 2002.

The new requirements will ensure that if patients need to access care out-of-hours, they can be confident that, wherever they live, they will receive high quality care, responsive to their needs.

Ovarian Tissue Transplantation

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on ovarian tissue transplantation. [190570]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) published, in February 2004, a clinical guideline for the national health service on the assessment and treatment for people with fertility problems. Part 1.15 of the guideline, covering applications of cryopreservation in cancer treatment, says:

> "Women preparing for medical treatment that is likely to make them infertile should be offered oocyte or embryo cryostorage as appropriate if they are well enough to undergo ovarian stimulation and egg collection, provided that this will not worsen their condition and provided that sufficient time is available. They should be informed that oocyte cryostorage has very limited success and that the cryopreservation of ovarian tissue is still in an early stage of development."

A recent report from the United States of America mentioned a patient who apparently has had a successful ovarian transplantation involving her sister as a donor. We note that the British Fertility Society regards this procedure as an interesting development that must be viewed as experimental, probably applicable only to an exceptionally small number of patients.

Over-30 Month Cattle Scheme

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what work the Food Standards Agency is conducting on the over-30 month cattle scheme safely. [189629]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested is already published on the Food Standards Agency's website at http://www.food.gov.uk/news/newsarchive/2004/sep/boardupdateseptember2004.

Paediatric Services

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many doctors there were in the NHS in England working in paediatric specialities in each year since 1992, broken down by (a) speciality and (b) grade, expressed as a (i) whole-time equivalent and (ii) headcount figure. [194243]

Depression

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he collects on the proportion of pain sufferers who are diagnosed with depression. [194077]

Ms Rosie Winterton: This information is not centrally available.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the expected total income from prescription charges in real terms in (a) 2005–06, (b) 2006–07, (c) 2007–08, (d) 2008–09 and (e) 2009–10. [192900]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The expected total income from prescription charges for the years specified, are shown in the table.

2005–06	467
2006–07	482
2007–08	499
2008–09	517
2009–10	534

The figures are forecasts and as such will be subject to change.

Processed Food (Salt)

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions his Department has had with the major supermarkets on salt in food since the 18 September deadline for supermarkets to improve their salt reduction action plans. [191131]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Department and the Food Standards Agency (FSA) are currently analysing responses received from the food industry in response to the 18 September deadline. The Department and the FSA will consider what further action needs to be taken when the analysis has been completed.

Public Health Bodies

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to the answer of 13 September 2004, Official Report, column 1470–1471W, on public health bodies, what the expected timetable is for the budget allocation process. [191699]

Ms Rosie Winterton: An implementation framework, setting out the timetable and process for agreeing arm's length body budgets over the spending review period, will be published shortly.

Queen's Ambulance Medal

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects the first Queen's Ambulance Medal to be announced; and what steps are being taken to ensure that its existence is widely known. [192879]

Ms Rosie Winterton: We are currently reviewing the process and timetable for introducing the proposed Queen's Ambulance Service Medal while we take into account the conclusions of the current Honours review. We hope to confirm the way forward shortly.

Radiographers

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the vacancy (a) rate and (b) number of radiographers in the NHS was in (i) England and (ii) each strategic health authority in each year since 1997. [194242]

Mr. Hutton: Information on the number and rate of vacancies lasting three months or more for radiographers in each year since 1999, the first year vacancy information was collected centrally, by health authority until 2001 and by strategic health authority since 2001, has been placed in the Library.

The rate of vacancies lasting three months or more for diagnostic radiographers has fallen from 6.1 per cent., to 4.8 per cent., for diagnostic radiographers and from 10.7 per cent., to 8.8 per cent., in between March 2003 and March 2004.

The fall in vacancy rates for radiographers reverses the trend of increasing vacancies and reflects the Government's successes in increasing both the national health service radiography workforce and also the numbers of students entering training to become radiographers.

Refugee Doctors

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the number of trained refugee doctors in England who are not working in the NHS; and what estimate he has made of the average cost of retraining a refugee doctor to work in the NHS. [192791]

Mr. Hutton: This information requested is not held centrally.

The British Medical Association (BMA) holds a database to monitor the number of refugee doctors in the United Kingdom. Of the 1,001 doctors registered on the database:

69 have secured posts in the national health service.

126 have passed Part II of the General Medical Council's (GMC) Professional and Linguistic Assessment Board (PLAB) examination.

94 have passed Part I of the PLAB examination.

The majority of the rest are either studying for PLAB Part I or developing their English language skills in preparation for the CMC's English language tests.

The cost of any retraining a doctor may need may vary on an individual basis. Most of the doctors registered on the BMA database need only to pass the CMC's PLAB exam in order to be eligible to apply for jobs and thereby qualify for limited registration with the GMC.

Rural Proofing

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what work his Department carries out for the rural proofing of NHS targets. [192355]

Miss Melanie Johnson: National health service targets include minimum guarantees on access to services which everyone, both in rural areas and elsewhere, can expect. Primary care trusts (PCTs) are responsible for ensuring that NHS trusts meet national standards and targets. The reduction in national targets gives PCTs the flexibility to develop local services, including those in rural areas, to meet the particular needs of their communities.

Smart and Biometric Cards

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the likely number of (a) smart card and (b) biometric card readers which will be needed in hospitals and general practitioner surgeries in the next 10 years. [193995]

Mr. Hutton: The number of smart card readers eventually needed for use across the national health service will depend on the nature and number of functions for which smart cards technology is required and the pace at which it is developed and implemented. The costs and benefits of a smart card are currently being assessed. There are no current plans to place biometric data on smart cards, but the use of biometrics is an option which is being studied for use in the longer term.

Transplantation

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions his Department has had with the Unrelated Live Transplant Regulatory Authority regarding live unrelated (a) altruistic and (b) paired donations for transplantation. [191713]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Unrelated Live Transplant Regulatory Authority (ULTRA) has kept the Department fully informed of all discussions regarding the issue of live unrelated altruistic and paired donation. The last ULTRA meeting was held on 5 October 2004.

Transport (North Yorkshire)

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action is being taken by primary care trusts to improve transport links to healthcare facilities in North Yorkshire. [193892]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The four primary care trusts (PCTs) in North Yorkshire are working to improve transport links to healthcare facilities. They are working in partnership with the Tees, East and North Yorkshire Ambulance National Health Service Trust (TENYAS) to review current patient transport services to ensure that patients' transport needs are met. The PCTs are also working with local authorities, the voluntary sector and transport providers to ensure access to healthcare facilities.

Wheelchairs

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what information the Wheelchair Services Collaborative holds on waiting times for assessment and delivery of wheelchairs; [194035]

(2) which wheelchair services participate in the Wheelchair Services Collaborative; [194036]

(3) what waiting times apply to the North Staffordshire Wheelchair Service; and if he will make a statement. [194037]

Dr. Ladyman: Figures on waiting times for people requiring wheelchairs are not collected centrally. The information may be available from the 151 national health service wheelchair services, which actually arrange for the provision of wheelchairs in England. 45 centres participated in the wheelchair services collaborative, which ran until June 2004. The services that participated were:

Written Answers to Questions

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Forestry Commission (Grants)

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what sum was awarded in grants to private woodland owners by the Forestry Commission in (a) 1998–99 and (b) 2002–03; and what proportion was funded from EU sources. [190917]

Mr. Bradshaw [holding answer 18 October 2004]: The value of grants awarded to private woodland owners in Great Britain by the Forestry Commission in:

(a) 1998–99 was £42.5 million of which £14.1 million was co-financed by the European Union; and

(b) 2002–03 was £37.8 million of which £12.6 million was co-financed by the European Union.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the impact of Network Rail's permitted development rights on sites of special scientific interest. [192825]

Mr. Bradshaw [pursuant to the reply, 21 October 2004, Official Report, c. 842W]: The answer given did not reflect the most up-to-date position and should have read as follows.

No specific assessment has been made. In exercising its statutory functions on SSSIs in England, Network Rail must notify English Nature and unless it follows English Nature's advice, it must minimise any damage and restore the site as far as practical. In Scotland, these are matters for the Scottish Executive and Scottish Natural Heritage.

TREASURY

Tax Credits

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many complaints were received by the tax credit office in (a) 1997, (b) 2001 and (c) 2004; what targets his Department has set for the number of errors reported in tax credit cases next year; what measures his Department is taking to ensure that the number of cases containing errors is reduced; and what compensation will be made to those people whose claims are dealt with incorrectly. [194495]

Dawn Primarolo: Details of the accuracy target up to 2004–05 for tax credits claims, renewals (for 2004–05 only) and changes of circumstance appear on page 29 of Inland Revenue's annual report for the year ending 31 March 2004. This can be found on the Department's website, www.inlandrevenue.gov.uk, at about/annual_reps.htm. The target for 2005–06 has yet to be agreed.

The Inland Revenue's approach to compensation is set out in Code of Practice 1 "Putting things right". This is also available on the Department's website, at leaflets/c11.htm.

Allowances and Thresholds

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the effect on (a) income to the Treasury and (b) the number of taxpayers in each band, (i) assuming no other changes and (ii) assuming consequential savings in benefits of tax credits, of (A) raising the single person's allowance to (1) £10,000, (2) £15,000 and (3) £20,000, and (B) raising other allowances and thresholds proportionately. [195105]

Dawn Primarolo: The information is given in the following table.

		(b) Change in taxpayer numbers (Thousand)
	(a) Cost (£ billion)	Starting rate	Savers rate	Basic rate	Higher rate
(A) (1) PA increased to £10,000	28	-300	120	-4,690	-950
(A) (2) PA increased to £15,000	49	-580	110	-9,540	-1,490
(A) (3) PA increased to £20,000	63	-1,110	50	-13,130	-1,860
(B) (1) PA increased to £10,000 and other allowances and thresholds increased proportionately[1]	45	1,600	-110	-7,320	-2,750
(B) (2) PA increased to £15,000 and other allowances and thresholds increased proportionately[2]	68	2,160	-280	-13,360	-3,130
(B) (3) PA increased to £20,000 and other allowances and thresholds increased proportionately[3]	82	1,470	-430	-17,080	-3,260

[1] The thresholds and allowances were increased by 211 per cent. (£10,000 divided by £4,475—the PA in 2004–05)

[2] The thresholds and allowances were increased by 316 per cent. (£15,000 divided by £4,475)

[3] The thresholds and allowances were increased by 421 per cent. (£20,000 divided by £4,475)

Notes:

1. The estimates are based upon the Survey of Personal Incomes 2001–02 and are in line with final budget assumptions.
2. The estimates relate to the year 2004–05.

There would be no savings from lower tax credits since tax credit entitlement is based on gross income.

The personal allowance is currently linked to the primary and secondary class 1 national insurance contributions thresholds and the class 4 lower profits limit. No cost has been included to increase these thresholds in line with the personal allowance.

The figures exclude any estimate of behavioural response to the tax change, which could be significant given the scale of the changes.

Correspondence

David Winnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will instruct the office of Mr. J. Harra, Director, Inland Revenue, Tax Credit Office, Preston (a) to acknowledge without delay letters sent by hon. Members to him on behalf of their constituents and (b) to ensure that substantive replies are sent within 14 days. [195501]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 19 October 2004, Official Report, column 583W.

Customs and Excise

Mr. Amess: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many IT consultants are currently contracted to work for Her Majesty's Customs and Excise at Alexandra House, Southend-on-Sea; and if he will make a statement. [195712]

Dawn Primarolo: There are currently 102 IT consultants contracted to work for Her Majesty's Customs and Excise at Alexander House, Southend-on-Sea.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the hourly rate of pay is of each IT consultant working on contract to Her Majesty's Customs and Excise; and if he will make a statement. [195713]

Dawn Primarolo: Her Majesty's Customs and Excise does not engage IT Consultancy on an hourly rate basis.

Customs and Immigration Regulations

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many sea containers entering each port have been found to be in contravention of British customs and immigration regulations in each year since 2001; [194701]

(2) what volume of cargo arriving at each airport has been found to be in contravention of British customs and immigration regulations in each year since 2001. [194707]

Dawn Primarolo: Her Majesty's Customs and Excise report against the prohibitions and restrictions they enforce in their annual and spring reports, which are available in the Library of the House.

Information is not held in the format requested. A breakdown of all the possible contraventions of British customs and immigration regulations at ports and airports for the last four years in respect of sea containers and air cargo could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Gambling

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what (a) representations he has received regarding the exemption of and (b) plans he has to exempt regional casinos offering category A machines from EU laws on money laundering. [194654]

John Healey: To inform our ongoing negotiations on the third EU Money Laundering Directive, HM Treasury held a wide-ranging consultation which has now closed. Representations have been received from a range of interested parties, including from the casino industry, and we are considering these.

Income Tax Evasion

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the level of evasion of income tax. [195254]

Dawn Primarolo: As tax authorities around the world recognise, the tax gap in relation to tax on income and profits is very difficult to measure, and presently there is no reliable method for estimating it. Nevertheless, the Inland Revenue is continuing to develop methodologies for measuring the tax gap in relation to all direct taxes.

National Minimum Wage

Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to the answer of 27 October 2004, Official Report, columns 1244–245W, on national minimum wage, what the level of underpayment on the national minimum wage was in (a) Birmingham and (b) the West Midlands in each year listed. [195725]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue does not maintain separate records for the areas specified.

Stamp Duty

Sue Doughty: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many residential properties sold in England and Wales during 2003 attracted stamp duty at (a) 0 per cent., (b) 1 per cent., (c) 3 per cent. and (d) 4 per cent.; and what the average price paid for a house during 2003 was in each of those stamp duty bands. [194327]

Mr. Timms: The estimate of the number of residential property transactions in each of the stamp duty bands for 2003 and the corresponding average prices are given in the following table. The 0 per cent. band includes transactions between £60,000 and £150,000 in value that have qualified for disadvantaged area relief.

Stamp duty rate (Percentage)	Number of residential property transactions (£000)	Average price (£000)
0	350	41
1	731	143
3	102	342
4	21	995

UK Shipping Industry

John McDonnell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the value was of financial concessions to the UK shipping industry through the tonnage tax scheme in financial year 2003–04. [194052]

Dawn Primarolo: The latest estimates, for 2002–03 and 2003–04, of the Exchequer cost of the tonnage tax regime can be found on the Inland Revenue's website at www.inlandrevenue.gov.uk/stats/tax_expenditures/tableb1.pdf.

TRANSPORT

Data Protection

Michael Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what procedures are in place (a) to check the criminal records of civil servants in his Department and agencies responsible to his Department, including the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency, who have access to computer databases containing confidential information on the public and (b) to ensure that there can be no improper use of computer databases containing confidential information on the public; and if he will make a statement. [194598]

Charlotte Atkins: All DfT and Agency staff, including DVLA, undergo a Basic Check on recruitment, which includes a self-declaration regarding criminal convictions. Human Resources carry out criminal record checks on all DfT posts that require security clearance, and serving staff are required to declare/report any criminal charges/convictions.

To ensure that there can be no improper use of computer databases containing confidential information on the public, DfT and Agencies enforce the "need to know" principle. Appropriate access controls to systems, comprehensive auditing and tracking are also carried out and staff are instructed on computer misuse policies and made aware of current legislation including the Data Protection Act etc.

Air Cargo

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what volume of cargo has arrived at each British airport in each year since 1997. [194705]

Charlotte Atkins: The amount of freight that has arrived at airports in Great Britain with at least one thousand tonnes of freight arriving each year since 1997 to 2003 is set out in the table.

Freight arrived at airports in Great Britain, 1997–2003

Departmental Publications (Accessibility)

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many and what proportion of publications issued by his Department are available in (a) Braille, (b) autoprint, (c) large print and (d) easy read format. [194288]

Charlotte Atkins: The Department's policy is to make publicity material available in alternative formats on request. Our rationale for this is based on: budgetary considerations; the fact that many publications are for small, specialist audiences; and that all are placed on the DfT website, which complies fully with accessibility standards. This policy means that of 886 DfT titles held at our distribution centre, 14 are in Braille, 15 are audio cassettes and one is large print.

We also allow anyone to reproduce and distribute our material in alternative formats free of the need for copyright permission.

For the future, we shall be making all major public consultation documents and white papers available in audio and easy read formats.

Level Crossings

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take action to ensure that unmanned pedestrian level crossings of main rail lines are closed where (a) pedestrian usage is low and (b) alternative safe crossings by bridge or tunnel are already available to pedestrians; and if he will make a statement. [194930]

Mr. McNulty: It is for Network Rail, as infrastructure manager, to make applications for orders to close crossings and then for local highway authorities to consider and approve such applications. Highway authorities consider applications for level crossing closures on behalf of the Secretary of State for Transport under the Highways Act 1980.

One of the continuing main aims of the Health and Safety Executive's (HSE) policy for reducing risks at level crossings is to seek the closure or upgrade of level crossings where this is reasonably practicable; HSE does not support the construction of new level crossings other than in exceptional circumstances. Local people should be consulted on such plans.

This approach is supported fully by the National Level Crossing Safety Group, which includes HSE, the police, the Rail Safety and Standards Board, Network Rail, railway operators, local authorities, highway authorities and organisations representing level crossing users. Network Rail has produced a level crossing policy and strategy that sets out to reduce the risks associated with level crossings through a variety of methods including a programme of risk assessment to identify reasonably practicable risk reduction measures. Network Rail's overriding principle is to ensure that no new permanent crossings are constructed, other than in exceptional circumstances and it seeks to close existing crossings where this is feasible.

London Bus Drivers

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many bus drivers employed within the Greater London area were subjected to physical attacks in the last 12 months. [193477]

Charlotte Atkins: Over the period 2003–04, there were 1,270 attacks on bus drivers within the Greater London Area. Data on the nature of assaults are not kept.

Overcrowding (Railways)

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library copies of risk assessments that have been prepared on overcrowding (a) on train services between Worcestershire and Birmingham and (b) on station platforms in (i) Worcestershire and (ii) Birmingham. [194520]

Mr. McNulty: Responsibility for the day-to-day safety, welfare and convenience of passengers using the railway and stations rests with Train Operating Companies (TOCs) and Network Rail. Network Rail, which is responsible for Birmingham New Street station, has undertaken a risk assessment at this station. This risk assessment is an internal Network Rail document. As such it is for them to determine whether to disclose its contents.

No risk assessments have been undertaken for stations in Worcestershire. However as part of its safety monitoring and enforcement responsibilities Her Majesty's Rail Inspectorate (HMRI) has asked Central Trains to provide it with information about how it manages overcrowding risks at stations and on trains. HMRI will write directly to the honourable Gentleman once it has concluded its investigation.

Port Security

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on security inspections undertaken at British sea ports. [194697]

Mr. Jamieson: A compliance regime inspection programme is underway to monitor and evaluate compliance with the International Ship and Port Security (ISPS) Code that came into force on 1 July 2004.

Both announced and unannounced inspections are undertaken by Department for Transport Security Directorate (TRANSEC) inspectors to ensure port and ship compliance with the new security requirements.

It is not our policy to comment in detail on how many or which ports have been inspected, but our current programme of compliance inspection visits covers over 560 UK port facilities.

Potters Bar Rail Crash

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to hold a public inquiry into the Potters Bar rail crash. [194169]

Mr. McNulty: The Secretary of State expects to be in a position to take a decision on whether or not to hold a public inquiry after the Health and Safety Executive's investigation team has reported its conclusions to the Investigation Board and to him in November 2004 and decisions have been taken on prosecutions.

Rail Franchises

John Thurso: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when decisions will be made on the awarding of the (a) East Coast Mainline and (b) Integrated Kent Franchises; and whether these decisions will be made by the (i) Strategic Rail Authority and (ii) Department for Transport. [192601]

Mr. McNulty: The information is as follows:

(a) On 6 October the SRA issued an Invitation to Tender (ITT) for the new InterCity East Coast franchise inviting the four pre-qualified companies to submit detailed bids. An announcement on a Preferred Bidder will be made early next year. (b) Invitations to tender for the Integrated Kent Franchise will be issued to the four pre-qualifying bidders later in the autumn. The franchise is expected to commence in late 2005.

Decisions on new or replacement franchises are currently taken by the Strategic Rail Authority with regard to the Directions and Guidance issued by the Secretary of State.

The Rail White Paper, "The Future of Rail", proposes the abolition of the Strategic Rail Authority. The strategic and financial responsibilities of the SRA will pass to the Department for Transport. Implementing this will require primary legislation and we will introduce a Bill as soon as parliamentary time permits.

Regional Transport Plans

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the estimated cost is of producing regional transport plans. [195126]

Charlotte Atkins: We do not hold information on the cost of producing regional transport strategies, which are prepared by Regional Planning Bodies as part of Regional Spatial Strategies. Such information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Ship Inspections

Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport pursuant to his answer of 11 October, Official Report, column 6W, on ship inspections, whether inspections take place to enforce compliance with the International Ship and Port Facilities Code. [195692]

Mr. Jamieson: An inspection programme exists to monitor and evaluate compliance with the International Ship and Port Security (ISPS) Code. This involves both port facility and ship inspections. Enforcement action, if required would be taken on the basis of the results of the inspection.

Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport pursuant to his answer of 11 October, Official Report, column 6W, on ship inspections, what follow-up action is being taken in respect of those ships issued with non-compliance letters. [195694]

Mr. Jamieson: The respective Flag States were informed that control measures had been imposed on their ships. Further enforcement action on such ships has not been necessary because on subsequent return to the UK they have been found to be compliant.

Train Horns

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will make a statement on the Rail Safety and Standards Board review of the use of train horns and noise pollution; [194928]

(2) in what circumstances the use of train horns will be restricted on approaching unmanned pedestrian level crossings. [194929]

Mr. McNulty: The Rail Safety and Standards Board (RSSB) is responsible for specifying the requirements for when and where train horns must be used and Network Rail is responsible for deciding how train operators comply with them. The RSSB's Review concluded with a number of recommendations which come into effect on 6 November 2004.

The main recommendations are that the minimum permissible level for train horns will be reduced by up to eight decibels and the sounding of train horns when entering a tunnel and at frequent intervals when passing through long tunnels will no longer be necessary.

It will still be necessary for train drivers to sound horns at all times, day or night, whenever anyone is seen on or near a line on which a train is travelling; when approaching any pedestrian crossings; where shunting movements are taking place and staff may be on the line; during failures of signalling equipment or other degraded operations and in an emergency.

The sounding of horns between the hours of 2330 and 0700 is not permitted, when drivers are approaching an automatic level crossing or an open level crossing except as an emergency.

These standards take into account the need to ensure effective safety management whilst also aiming to alleviate the noise disturbance experienced by residents living near railway lines.

Transfer Passengers (Airports)

Mrs May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many transfer passengers passed through UK airports last year. [195096]

Charlotte Atkins: The number of transfer passengers at surveyed UK airports in 2003 was 32 million.

Transfer passenger statistics for 2003 are available only for those airports where the Civil Aviation Authority ran the Departing Passenger Survey. These were Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, East Midlands, Exeter, Gatwick, Heathrow, Liverpool, London City, Luton, Manchester and Stansted. Transfer statistics for some of these airports are for the 2003–04 financial year.

Tsar Appointments

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many tsars have been appointed with responsibilities which cover part of the work of his Department; and if he will make a statement. [191921]

Charlotte Atkins: None.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

Lifts

Norman Baker: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire representing the House of Commons Commission (1) how many lifts there are on the Parliamentary Estate; and how much energy was consumed by these lifts in each of the last three years; [194332]

(2) what measures are in place to ensure that lifts on the Parliamentary Estate minimise energy use by only moving to a floor when requested to by a user; [194333]

(3) how many escalators there are on the Parliamentary Estate; how many of these are potentially motion-activated; and how much energy was consumed by escalators in the last year for which figures are available; [194334]

(4) for what reasons the escalators connecting Portcullis House with the main building are no longer motion-activated. [194335]

Sir Archy Kirkwood: There are 66 passenger and heavy goods lifts on the parliamentary estate. The optimal balance between energy efficiency, short waiting times and emergency provision is subject to an engineered solution in each location. There are three escalators on the estate and all have the potential to be motion activated. The escalators at Portcullis House are not currently motion activated for reasons of safety and the high traffic rate during working hours. They change to manual control outside sitting hours. The lifts and escalators do not have individual electricity meters.

WALES

Antisocial Behaviour Orders

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many antisocial behaviour orders have been breached in Wales in each year since their introduction. [195697]

Mr. Touhig: The available information is given in the following table.

The number of convictions of breach for within Wales, by period, from 1 June 2000 to 31 December 2002[1]

Period (by appearance date)	Total
1 June–31 December 2000	0
1 January–31 December 2001	3
1 January–31 December 2002	9
Total	12

[1] Breach data are compiled from breaches reported on the Home Office Court Proceedings Database. Home Office are reviewing the breach methodology and Data for 2003 has yet to be published.

Note:

Individuals breaching their ASBO more than once in the same year are counted only once for that year. Individuals breaching more than once, but in different years, are counted separately for each year.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by police area in Wales the number of antisocial behaviour orders in force; and if he will make a statement. [195776]

Mr. Touhig: Data are not collected centrally on the number of ASBOs in force at any given time.

The number issued from 1 April 1999 to 30 June 2004 was as follows:

Magistrates Courts Committee Area	Number issued
Dyfed Powys	16
Gwent	18
North Wales	28
South Wales	52
Total	114

Police Numbers

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many police officers there were in Wales in each year since 1996. [195677]

Mr. Touhig: Police officers in Wales in each year since 1996 are as follows:

As at March	Police officer numbers in Wales
1996	6,440
1997	6,592
1998	6,617
1999	6,645
2000	6,633
2001	6,927
2002	7,194
2003	7,268
2004	7,414

Press Releases

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many press releases have been issued by his Department in each month of 2004; and if he will make a statement. [195448]

Mr. Touhig: The Wales Office has issued the following number of press releases for each month of 2004 thus far:

	Number
January	7
February	3
March	16
April	7
May	7
June	3
July	6
August	1
September	5
October	6

These figures do not include operational notes or contributions to joint press releases with other organisations.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Teenage Pregnancy

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much each local authority in Greater London spent on tackling teenage pregnancy in (a) 1997, (b) 2002 and (c) 2003. [194898]

Margaret Hodge: Figures are not available for years before the launch of the Government's teenage pregnancy strategy in 1999. Details of the teenage pregnancy local implementation grant allocated to each local authority in Greater London for 2002–03 and 2003–04 are provided in the following table. Where indicated, figures for 2003–04 include monies to support young parents through the Sure Start Plus pilots operating in authorities with the highest under-18 conception rates.

Assertive Discipline

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what assessment has been made of the effectiveness of assertive discipline. [194770]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The Department has not carried out an assessment of the effectiveness of assertive discipline. However, the Key Stage 3 Behaviour and Attendance strand has provided training and support for all secondary and middle schools since September 2003. Schools use an audit tool to identify their key priorities for action and use a range of materials and measures to address these.

Council Tax

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what estimate he has made of the financial contribution that local education authorities made to school funding from council tax in England in 2004–05. [194694]

Mr. Miliband: The funding for local authorities is in the form of general revenue grant and covers education, social services, transport, and other local services. It is administered by the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister. The formula takes into account each authority's relative need to spend on each service and each authority's ability to raise resources. The authority decides how much resource to raise locally and what budget to set for each service. The budget for each service is not divided up into central Government resource and council tax.

Education Maintenance Allowances (Ilford, North)

Linda Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many students in Ilford north constituency are receiving education maintenance allowances. [194119]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: By the end of September 677 young people from the Redbridge local authority area had received an EMA Notice of Entitlement. Of those, 482 had enrolled for EMA at a school or college and 397 had received an EMA payment. These figures continue to improve as those who applied late have had their applications assessed and are enrolled for payment.

Ethnic Minority Pupils

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what estimate he has made of the proportion of pupils attending (a) state and (b) independent schools who are from an ethnic minority. [194195]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: In January 2004, 16.9 per cent. of pupils (of compulsory school age and above) in maintained primary and secondary schools were classified as minority ethnic origin.

Information on pupils' ethnic origin is not collected from independent schools.

EU Education Committees

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many times during the Greek presidency of the EU (a) the Advisory Committee on veterinary training, (b) the Advisory Committee on training in architecture and (c) the Committee on the second general system for the recognition of professional education and training met; when and where these meetings took place; which UK Government expert was present at each meeting; what (i) technical and (ii) financial issues were raised by the UK Government expert at each meeting; what recommendations each Committee produced during that period; what actions were (A) proposed and (B) taken by (1) the EU and (2) the UK Government as a result of each Committee's recommendations; and if he will make a statement. [194350]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: There have been no meetings of the EU Advisory Committee on veterinary training or the EU Advisory Committee on training in architecture during the Greek presidency.

A meeting of the committee established under the second general system for the recognition of professional education and training was held on 25 June 2003 at which technical amendments were discussed. The following amendments to Annex C of that directive were adopted in respect of:

Germany: change title of "occupational therapist" to "occupational therapist/ergotherapist"

Italy: delete the profession of "chiropodist"

Austria: insert the profession of "bookkeeper"

UK: insert the profession of "listed veterinary nurse".

A Commission Decision of 28 January 2004 published these amendments in the Official Journal of the European Union.

Five Year Strategy for Children and Learners

John Thurso: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will publish an assessment of the implications for traffic levels arising from the implementation of the Five Year Strategy for Children and Learners. [192230]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The Five Year Strategy for Children and Learners aims to clarify the context for reform, to set the goals we strive to deliver, and to lay out the priority initiatives to get us there, across the early years, primary and secondary education, adult skills and higher education sectors.

There are no plans at this stage to publish a detailed assessment of the implications for traffic level arising from the implementation of the Five Year Strategy.

With regard to schools, we recognise that there may be traffic implications as a result of the new patterns of learning outlined in the strategy and we have already put a number of measures in place to address these. In September 2003, DfES and DfT jointly launched the Travelling to School initiative with the aim of creating conditions which will enable more children to walk, cycle or travel by public transport in safety. By the end of the decade we want every school to draw up a travel plan which, through consultation, identifies the issues of concern—including trips during the school day—and details how and by when these will be addressed.

DfES and DfT are jointly providing £7.5 million per annum to fund a network of school travel advisers to support schools in developing travel plans. DfES has also allocated up to £20 million pa in capital grants to state funded schools which draw up robust plans, which they can spend on items like lockers and secure cycle storage. In addition, the School Transport Bill, will give the flexibility local authorities require to design travel schemes for the 21st century.

Fixed Term Exclusion Orders

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills who is responsible for the education of pupils subject to fixed term exclusion orders. [194769]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The governing body of the school that the pupil attends is responsible for ensuring the pupil receives suitable education during the fixed period exclusion. This responsibility is usually discharged by setting work for the pupil to do at home. For longer fixed period exclusions, although schools still have a responsibility to provide education, we expect them to work with the local education authority, where possible, to do this and to plan for the pupil's reintegration into school at the end of the exclusion.

Knives

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) what assistance he is providing to (a) head teachers and (b) local education authorities to combat the carrying of knives and other bladed weapons in schools; and if he will make a statement; [193038]

(2) if he will review advice given to (a) local education authorities, (b) head teachers and (c) school governors over disciplinary action to be taken over pupils found carrying knives and other bladed weapons in schools; and if he will make a statement. [193039]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: My Department's guidance makes it clear that head teachers can permanently exclude pupils for a range of first or one-off offences, including actual or threatened violence and the criminal offence of carrying an offensive weapon on school premises. Police have long-standing powers to enter schools and conduct personal searches of pupils where they have reasonable suspicion that a pupil may be carrying an offensive weapon.

Over 20 recommendations by the Working Group on School Security on improving school security have been acted on. The group continues to advise DfES. The Department keeps the advice under review and whether further measures would assist in dealing with this problem.

Pupil Exclusions

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what schemes are available to assist families of children who have been permanently excluded from school. [194771]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The Department funds the Advisory Centre for Education (ACE) to provide a telephone helpline for parents of excluded pupils. Some local education authorities have schemes, often delivered through partnership and multi-agency working, to assist the families of children who have been permanently excluded from school. Information on the number and location of such schemes is not held centrally. If the local education authority consider that parenting is a factor in the misbehaviour leading to exclusion, they may provide support to the parent by offering a parenting contract or applying for a parenting order.

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what remedies are available to an independent appeals panel which decides that a pupil has been wrongly excluded from a school. [194772]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: There are two remedies available to an independent appeal panel if it decides that a pupil has been wrongly excluded. It may direct that he or she is to be reinstated either immediately or by a date specified in the direction, or it may decide that, because of exceptional circumstances or for other reasons, it is not practical to give a direction requiring his or her reinstatement, but that it would otherwise have been appropriate to give such a direction.

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what guidance the Department issues on the education of children with special educational needs who have been permanently excluded from school. [194773]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: Under the Education Act 1996, local education authorities have a duty, where necessary, to identify, assess and arrange suitable provision to meet the special educational needs of children from their areas for whom they are responsible, whether they are in or out of school. When doing so they must have regard to the Special Educational Needs Code of Practice which gives guidance on meeting children's special educational needs. The Code of Practice is available to those who make provision for excluded children.

School Uniform

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the average cost of providing school uniform and other required clothing is for a child starting (a) primary and (b) secondary school. [194357]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The information my hon. Friend has requested is not collected by the Department for Education and Skills.

Sexual Health

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much was spent by each local education authority in the Greater London area on promoting responsible sexual behaviour in (a) 1997, (b) 2002 and (c) 2003. [194899]

Mr. Miliband: Information about individual local education authority expenditure on promoting responsible sexual behaviour is not collected by the Department.

Educating young people about sexual health and safer sex are key elements of the Government's sexual health strategy. The Teenage Pregnancy Strategy has a multi-faceted approach which includes helping young people resist pressure to have early sex, improving sex and relationship education and access to effective contraception and sexual health services.

Truancy

Charles Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many schoolchildren played truant in schools in East Sussex in each of the past five years; and how many days in total were lost through truancy in the county in each of those years. [193703]

Mr. Stephen Twigg [holding answer 25 October 2004]: The available published information is as follows:

Number of pupils that missed at least a half day session[1] due to unauthorised absence in schools in East Sussex LEA

Academic Year (September–May)	Primary Schools	Secondary Schools
2000	5,491	5,310

[1] A session equates to half a day.

Youth Clubs

Charles Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many youth clubs have been run (a) by local authorities and (b) by voluntary organisations in each of the past seven years. [194817]

Mr. Ivan Lewis [holding answer 1 November 2004]: This information is not held centrally.

HEALTH

New Health Centres

14. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many new health centres linked with sports facilities are being developed under local investment finance trust projects. [195012]

Miss Melanie Johnson: This information is not held centrally across all LIFT schemes. The East Lancashire LIFT project has a proposal for a joint Health and Leisure Centre at St. Peter's, in Burnley. I would like to commend my hon. Friend for the commitment and support he has shown to this project, which will transform access to health and leisure services in the centre of Burnley.

Pneumonia Vaccinations

17. Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the availability of pneumonia vaccinations for elderly people. [195015]

Dr. Ladyman: The pneumococcal immunisation programme for older adults is being introduced over a three-year period. From April this year, all those aged 75 years and over become eligible to receive the vaccination. From 1 April 2005, the programme will be extended to all people aged 65 years and over.

Smoking

18. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the Scientific

Committee on Tobacco and Health's report, "Second-hand Smoke: A Review of Evidence since 1998"; and if he will make a statement. [195016]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The SCOTH report will be published alongside the White Paper.

Green Minister

19. Mrs. Calton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the work undertaken by his Department's Green Minister in the last three months. [195017]

Miss Melanie Johnson: As the Department's Green Minister, I have a number of responsibilities that contribute to sustainable development goals. These include tackling health inequalities, healthy eating and physical activity. Our public health consultation, Choosing Health? which ran until the end of June, will also make an important contribution to the sustainable development agenda.

Foundation Hospitals

21. Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his assessment is of the effectiveness of the foundation hospital policy. [195019]

Mr. Hutton: The first 20 NHS Foundation Trusts were established in April and July of this year. I am informed by the Chairman of Monitor (whose statutory name is the Independent Regulator of NHS Foundation Trusts) that they are using their freedoms to raise additional capital to invest in improved services for patients.The Healthcare Commission is currently undertaking its review of NHS Foundation Trusts policy. It is our expectation that the report of the outcome of the review will be published next summer.

Worcestershire Royal Hospital

23. Mr. Michael Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his estimate is of the number of accident and emergency admissions at the Worcestershire Royal hospital in each of the last five years. [195021]

Dr. Ladyman: The data requested are not collected for individual hospitals.

Zero-star-rated Trusts

24. Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the assistance provided to national health service trusts which have received a zero star rating. [195022]

Mr. Hutton: Zero star trusts receive support from their Strategic Health Authorities and the Modernisation Agency's Performance Development Team. Some 40 of the 51 trusts who received support improved their star rating. Independent evaluations have confirmed the effectiveness of the support provided, which is focussed mainly on organisational and cultural change.

Pharmacists

25. Mr. Pollard: What role he plans for pharmacists in (a) promoting health care and (b) providing information to patients. [195023]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The new contractual framework for community pharmacists, subject to a ballot of contractors, should go live from April 2005. Nationally, it comprises a range of services which all pharmacists will provide, including helping patients make better use of medicines through repeat dispensing, promoting public health, providing information and support to patients, as well as signposting them to other healthcare providers. Primary care trusts will be able to commission a range of additional services from community pharmacists to meet specific patient needs locally.

Breast Cancer

Charles Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average waiting time is for radiotherapy treatment for people diagnosed with breast cancer for each strategic health authority. [195274]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 1 November 2004]: Data on waiting times for radiotherapy are not collected centrally. The national health service cancer plan set out maximum waiting time targets for cancer treatment, which may include radiotherapy where this is given as a first definitive treatment. From December 2001, there is a one month maximum wait from diagnosis to first treatment for breast cancer and from 2002, there is a maximum two month wait from urgent referral to treatment for breast cancer. Both these targets are being achieved for 97 per cent. of patients. Further information on cancer waiting times performance is available on the Department's website at www.performance.doh.gov.uk/cancerwaits/.

To tackle radiotherapy waiting times, we are increasing the numbers of therapy radiographers in post and in training, making better use of existing staff, making unprecedented investment in new radiotherapy equipment and streamlining the patient journey.

Charity Food Labelling

Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to introduce regulations requiring mandatory labelling on homemade cakes, biscuits and jams sold in aid of charity; and if he will make a statement. [193879]

Miss Melanie Johnson: There are no such plans.

Chesterfield and North Derbyshire Royal Hospital

Paul Holmes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage (a) of all patients, (b) of patients aged 65 years and over and (c) of patients with mental health problems were seen and treated within four hours at the Chesterfield and north Derbyshire Royal Hospital's Accident and Emergency department, in each year since 2001; and if he will make a statement. [194781]

Dr. Ladyman: The information is shown in the following tables. However, this data has only been collected centrally by the Department since 2002–03. It should be noted that the information in relation to patients over 65, or for patients with mental health problems is not collected centrally.

Chesterfield and north Derbyshire Royal Hospital National Health Service Trust—Major accident and emergency

Year[1]	Quarter	Total attendances	Percentage of patients who spent less than four hours in A&E
2002–03	2	14,029	83.1

2002–03	4	12,963	94.2
2003–04	1	14,760	91.6
2003–04	2	15,152	91.0
2003–04	3	13,681	91.4
2003–04	4	13,690	95.2
2004–05	1	15,209	96.0

All A&E/minor injuries units/walk in centres

Year[1]	Total attendances	Percentage of patients who spent less than four hours in A&E
2003–04	14,760	91.6
2003–04	15,152	91.0
2003–04	13,681	91.4
2003–04	13,690	95.2
2004–05	15,209	96.0

[1] Data against the four hour A&E performance target has only been collected since quarter 2 in 2002–03. Quarterly data, rather than annual information, has therefore been provided.

Civil Servants

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average length of continuous service for civil servants within the Department is. [194402]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The average length of continuous service for civil servants within the Department and its agencies is nine years.

Complementary Therapies

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what account he will take of recent statements by the right hon. Member for Neath (Mr. Hain) on complementary therapies when developing policy on health care. [195013]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I always take account of the comments of my right hon. Friend. National health service access to complementary therapies is at the discretion of individual trusts and clinicians.

Dentistry

Jon Cruddas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of the population of the London Borough of Barking and Dagenham is registered with the general dental service. [194417]

Ms Rosie Winterton: At 31 August 2004, the latest data available, registrations with general dental service dentists in the Barking and Dagenham Primary Care Trust (PCT) area were 36.7 per cent. of the population in the PCT area. People may attend a dental surgery in a different area from the one in which they live.

Jim Dobbin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to increase the number of dentists treating NHS patients in Heywood and Middleton. [195014]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Each Primary Care Trust has been asked to draw up an action plan setting out how they are using their proportion of the £59 million additional funding we have allocated to improve access to NHS dentistry. Heywood and Middleton PCT has been allocated £83,000, which will improve access for at least 5,000 new patients this year.

Geriatric Hospital Beds

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his policy is on providing geriatric hospital beds covering the Greater London area; how many geriatric beds there are in such hospitals; and if he will make a statement. [194133]

Dr. Ladyman: The provision of hospital beds is for local determination by strategic health authorities (SHAs) with primary care trusts and national health service providers. Information on the number of geriatric beds within the London SHA areas is shown in the table.

Average daily number of available beds in the geriatric sector—SHAs in London, 2003–04

Health Education

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure that school children develop a thorough knowledge of healthy eating and living. [194235]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: I have been asked to reply.

Children learn about healthy eating and living through a range of National Curriculum subjects, principally Food Technology, Science, Personal, Social and Health Education and Physical Education.

In September 2004 schools received a Healthy Living Blueprint, a practical guide on promoting healthy living including using the full capacity and flexibility of the curriculum. The Blueprint and a supporting web portal bring together for schools the range of Government and non-Government initiatives and support which contribute to healthy lifestyles.

Heart Disease

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans the Department has to introduce national guidance on diet and lifestyle to combat heart disease. [195499]

Miss Melanie Johnson: In March 2000, the Department published the national service framework (NSF) for coronary heart disease (CHD), which set out modern standards and service models for the national health service for the prevention and treatment of CHD.

The White Paper on improving health, due for publication later this year, will also contribute to the prevention and treatment of CHD.

Hospices (Greater London)

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what financial support the Government are giving to hospices in the Greater London area. [194633]

Dr. Ladyman: There is no centrally collated information on how much money the national health service gives to hospices. The level of NHS funding provided to local hospices is a matter for discussion and agreement between the hospice and the appropriate primary care trust.

The Government pledged in the NHS Cancer Plan (2000) to increase NHS investment in specialist palliative care, including hospices, by an extra £50 million per annum by 2004. This pledge has been met. Working in partnership with all local stakeholders, including those in the voluntary sector, each cancer network has drawn up and agreed plans for the use of their allocation from the £50 million. The national partnership group for palliative care assessed all local plans and is now monitoring the use of this funding. The £50 million represents an increase of nearly 40 per cent., in the amount of funding provided by the NHS for specialist palliative care over 2000 levels.

Hospital Infections

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his Department's policy on hospital-acquired infections. [195018]

Mr. Hutton: We are actively implementing the plans set out in "Winning Ways and Towards Cleaner Hospitals". Once these measures, particularly the new target to reduce MRSA blood stream infections year on year, start to have an impact we expect to see infection rates decline.

Sir Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment has been made of the variation in rates of hospital-acquired infection between hospitals. [195020]

Mr. Hutton: The only information which is collected across all of the NHS is for methicillin resistant Staphylococcus aureus (MRSA) blood stream infections. Rates are generally highest in specialist trusts. This is not surprising as these trusts are likely to have more vulnerable patients and undertake more invasive and high-risk specialist care.

Medicines (Children and Infants)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the timetable is for introducing a revised version of the British National Formulary for children. [194253]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The British Medical Association and the Royal Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain, who produce the British National Formulary (BNF), expect the first edition of the BNF for children to be available during the summer of 2005.

Mental Health

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients have been referred to Hillingdon Mental Health Trust from Heathrow airport in each of the last three years. [194726]

Dr. Ladyman: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Sir Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether it is his Department's policy to increase provision of community care for mentally ill mothers with babies; and if he will make a statement on the introduction of home treatment teams. [194373]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Specialised perinatal psychiatric services, including the provision of mother and baby units, have been considered by an expert group chaired by the national director for mental health and the conclusions from that group are expected to be published early in the new year.

Local delivery plans produced by strategic health authorities show that they have plans to establish 335 crisis resolution teams in England by the end of 2004. These teams are designed to respond quickly to people in crisis to provide assessment and treatment wherever they are, and prevent unnecessary admissions to psychiatric in-patient care.

Midwives

Charles Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the vacancy rate is for midwives for each hospital trust. [195272]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 1 November 2004]: Information on the rate of vacancies lasting three months or more for midwives in each national health service trust has been placed in the Library.

Myasthenia Gravis

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice he has received on (a) the diagnosis, treatment and management of myasthenia gravis and (b) support for patients and carers; and if he will make a statement. [194875]

Dr. Ladyman: Myasthenia gravis is a neurological condition, characterised by fluctuating levels of muscle weakness. There is no cure, but treatment includes medication, surgery and palliation.

The national service framework for long term conditions will focus on improving services for people with neurological conditions. While the framework will not cover myasthenia gravis specifically, it will recommend improvements in standards, care and support that will benefit everyone with a neurological condition.

We are committed to publishing the framework as soon as possible.

It is for health authorities, in partnership with other local stakeholders to determine how best to use their funds to provide health services for their populations, including those with myasthenia gravis.

NHS

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much was spent on NHS administration in each year since 1980 in real terms. [192786]

Mr. Hutton: Real terms expenditure on administration in the national health service was not collected prior to 1996. Expenditure from then is shown in the following table.

	NHS administration costs (£ million)	NHS total expenditure England (£ million)	Percentage of NHS administration costs as a proportion of total NHS expenditure
1997–98	2,150	34,664	6.2
1998–99	2,180	36,608	6.0
1999–2000[1]	—	39,981	—
1999–2000[2]	2,261	40,201	5.6
2000–01	2,315	43,932	5.3
2001–02	2,625	49,021	5.3
2002–03	[3]—	—	—
2003–04[4]	2,489	63,667	3.9

[1] Expenditure pre 1999–2000 is on a cash basis.

[2] Expenditure tables from 1999–2000 to 2002–03 are on a Stage 1 resource budgeting basis (and consistent with figures published in table 3.4a of the Departmental Report 2004).

[3] Not available.

[4] Expenditure for 2003–04 is on a stage 2 resource budgeting basis (and consistent with figures published in table 3.4b of the Departmental Report 2004).

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the functioning of the NHS Bursary Department (a) hotline, (b) e-mail system and (c) correspondence facility and how many letters of complaint he has received on this issue. [194358]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 1 November 2004]: The NHS Pensions Agency student grants unit deals with very high volumes of inquiries from students, universities and other organisations. The unit's work is seasonal by nature peaking from June to October. Throughout the majority of the year, the unit deals effectively with all customer inquiries but they acknowledge that during their busiest period many callers have had difficulty contacting them within a reasonable time.

Work is ongoing to improve the unit's customer service both in the short and long term. This includes extra helplines to deal specifically with clinical placement travel claims, disabled student allowances and the new child care allowance. In addition, a new website has been set up where a dedicated team will answer frequently asked questions.

Between April and September, the unit processed 41 complaints.

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what criteria are used to determine whether patients may (a) opt out of and (b) anonymise entries in the national programme for IT in the NHS. [195078]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 1 November 2004]: Good clinical management requires that healthcare professionals keep a record of key information about their patients and about individual treatment episodes. The national programme for information technology is incorporating stringent security controls and safeguards that will mean patients have more control over who has access to their information than is possible with existing systems. A fundamental principle in the implementation of the national health service care records service (NHS CRS) is that confidentiality and privacy of sensitive patient information must not be compromised.

Patients will have the right to specify that detailed information recorded at the point of contact with the NHS should not be available to other NHS organisations via the summary record held on their NHS care record. They will also have the right to define some information as especially sensitive and only accessible under terms of explicit consent. This reinforces the key statutory safeguards set out in the Data Protection Act 1998, with which all information users must comply. These facilities have been designed in to the NHS CRS.

The Data Protection Act also provides patients with a right, where they are suffering substantial damage or distress, to object to processing of their data, including to prevent their data being held at all in an identifiable form, though this is expected to be a very rare event. We are currently considering how this right should apply to implementation of the NHS care record.

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average amount of NHS spending per head of population of people living in the Greater London area has been in each of the last three years. [194629]

Dr. Ladyman: Figures are shown in the table which relate to expenditure by national health service bodies which were, or are, within the five existing London strategic health authority (SHA) areas.

Expenditure per weighted head of population

2001–02	951.36
2002–03	1,050.14
2003–04	1,200.57

Notes:

1. Expenditure is taken from audited health authority (HA) accounts and primary care trust (PCT) summarisation schedules, which are prepared on a resource basis and therefore differ from cash allocations in the year. The expenditure is the total expenditure by the relevant HAs and the commissioner costs of the PCT.
2. The total NHS expenditure cannot be identified by health authority area, because the majority of general dental services expenditure is not included in the individual health authority accounts or PCT summarisation schedules and is separately accounted for by the Dental Practice Board. The majority of pharmaceutical services expenditure is accounted for by the Prescription Pricing Authority and not by HAs or PCTs.
3. Figures for 2002–03 and 2003–04, based on strategic health authority (SHA) areas, have been adjusted to eliminate expenditure which would be double counted where an authority acts as a lead in commissioning healthcare.

Organ Transplants

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have died waiting for an organ transplant in each year since the organ donation register began. [194263]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Details of the number of patients dying while registered for an organ transplant in the United Kingdom during each 12 month period since the start of the national health service organ donor register is shown in the table.

As at October	Number who died while on list
1994–95	502

Over-30-months Scheme

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what recent discussions his Department has had with the Scottish Executive regarding the over-30-months scheme; and if he will make a statement; [193684]

(2) what recent discussions his Department has had with the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs regarding the over-30-months scheme; and if he will make a statement; [193685]

(3) what recent discussions his Department has had with the Welsh Assembly Government regarding the over-30-months scheme; and if he will make a statement; [193686]

(4) what recent discussions his Department has had with the Meat and Livestock Commission regarding the over-30-months scheme; and if he will make a statement. [193687]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Government are considering the Food Standards Agency's advice on the over-30-months rule and an announcement will be made in due course.

The Department has not discussed the over-30-months rule with the Meat and Livestock Commission.

Powered Wheelchairs

Paul Holmes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many powered wheelchairs were issued by the national health service in each year since 1997; and if he will make a statement. [194780]

Dr. Ladyman: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Radiotherapy

Charles Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the ratio is of radiotherapy machines to population in each strategic health authority area; and what the average waiting time is for radiotherapy treatment in each of those areas. [195275]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 1 November 2004]: The information requested is shown in the table.

The ratios ignore the significant patient flows across strategic health authority (SHA) boundaries. The SHA populations are not directly related to the populations served by specific radiotherapy centres.

Data on waiting times for radiotherapy are not collected centrally. The national health service cancer plan set out maximum waiting time targets for cancer treatment, which may include radiotherapy where this is given as a first definitive treatment. From December 2001, there is a one month maximum wait from diagnosis to first treatment for breast cancer and a one month wait from urgent general practitioner referral to first treatment for children's cancers, testicular cancer and acute leukaemia. From 2002, there is a maximum two month wait from urgent referral to treatment for breast cancer. By 2005, there will be a maximum two month wait from urgent referral to treatment and a maximum one-month wait from diagnosis to first treatment for all cancers.

Silzone Heart Valves

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take measures to ensure that cardiothoracic surgeons and cardiologists maintain long-term follow-up with the recipients of Silzone heart valves. [193092]

Miss Melanie Johnson: It is established clinical practice to maintain regular follow-up appointments with all patients receiving heart valve replacements, both in the short and long-term.

Skipton Fund

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what criteria have been developed for the appointment process of the directors of the Skipton Fund; and if he will make a statement; [193653]

(2) what the term of office is for the directors of the Skipton Fund once they have been appointed; and if he will make a statement; [193654]

(3) whether, when the Skipton Fund was established, its directors were drawn from the Macmillan Fund; and if he will make a statement; [193656]

(4) from what backgrounds the directors of the Skipton Funds have been recruited. [193657]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Three trustees and the chairman and chief executive of the Macfarlane Trust were asked to take on the role of directors and company secretary for the Skipton Fund on an interim basis. This decision was made so that we could make progress with establishing the Skipton Fund. The trustees have a background in management, administration and working with haemophilia patients.

We have been seeking advice about the recruitment of directors to the Skipton Fund on a more permanent basis.

Sustainable Energy (CHP Provisions) Order

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures his Department (a) has undertaken and (b) plans to undertake to comply with the Sustainable Energy (CHP Provisions) Order 2003. [194427]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Department is committed to purchasing up to 100 per cent. green energy, where possible, for its buildings and replacing boilers with more energy-efficient models as the need arises. The anticipated reduction in the departmental estate in 2005 will reduce energy consumption.

Transport (Rural Areas)

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will ensure that the transport needs of patients living in rural areas will be addressed within the Health and Social Care Standards and Planning Framework including in individual national service frameworks. [192356]

Miss Melanie Johnson: "Standards for Better Health", the first ever set of national health care standards for all health care provided under the national health service, published as part of "The Health and Social Care Standard and Planning framework" in July 2004, requires that:

> " . . . health care organisations enable all members of the population to access services equally and offer choice in access to services and treatment equitably".

In addition, the standards, which all health care organisations are expected to meet, requires existing national targets for ambulance services to be maintained beyond April 2005. Primary care trusts are responsible for providing or securing the provision of ambulance services, which could include patient transport services, for their local populations. It is, therefore, for the local NHS to decide how these services are provided.

From April 2005, the independent Healthcare Commission will calculate and award a rating for NHS organisations, including ambulance trusts, which will cover an assessment of their performance against the health care standards.

To support implementation of the national service framework for renal services, two projects, one rural and one urban, are being established which will focus on improving patient transport services for renal dialysis patients.

Waiting Times/Lists

Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in how many primary care trusts and in what proportions (a) there were higher numbers of patients waiting for in-patient treatment for (i) between six and nine months and (ii) between nine and 12 months and (b) the (iii) mean and (iv) median waiting times were higher. [192691]

Mr. Hutton: There are no primary care trusts (PCTs) in which the number, or proportion, of nine to 12 month waiters is greater than the number of six to nine month waiters.

Information showing the estimated inpatient mean and median waiting time in weeks by England and PCT for August 2004 has been placed in the Library.

PRIME MINISTER

EU Membership

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Prime Minister pursuant to his oral Answer of 27 October to the right hon. Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard), what the evidential basis is for his assertion that millions of jobs depend on UK membership of the EU; and how many millions of jobs so depend. [195235]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for South-West Bedfordshire (Andrew Selous) by my hon. Friend the Minister for Europe (Mr. MacShane) on 5 July 2004, Official Report, column 594W.

Ministerial Residences

Charles Hendry: To ask the Prime Minister which Ministers were provided with official residences in financial years (a) 2001–02, (b) 2002–03 and (c) 2003–04. [195774]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker) of 28 February 2002, Official Report, columns 1443–44W and 5 June 2000, Official Report, columns 49–50W.

Since my answer of 28 February 2002, the then President of the Council and Leader of the House of Commons (Mr. Cook) vacated his official residence (Carlton Gardens) in spring 2003. The Secretary of State for Defence (Mr. Hoon) was allocated an official residence (Flat 3, Admiralty House) in the summer of 2002.

The Deputy Prime Minister also has the use of Dorneywood.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Beach Safety

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister pursuant to his Answer of 25 October 2004, Official Report, column 1075W, on beach safety, who is responsible for beach safety in a given local authority area. [194997]

Phil Hope: Beach safety and management is generally at the discretion of the owner of the beach, whether it be a private owner or a local authority. The owner or occupier may have certain responsibilities under the common law such as laws of negligence, or under statute, such as laws concerning occupier's liability or health and safety at work. A local authority also has a power to make byelaws under the public health legislation relating to public bathing and to the use of pleasure boats. The Health and Safety executive or a local authority is the enforcing authority for certain Health and Safety matters in relation to some beach activities.

Fire Control Centre (South-West)

Ms Atherton: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether a building design has been commissioned in relation to a regional fire control centre for the south-west. [195131]

Mr. Raynsford: A building design has been commissioned by the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister with regional input. The need for national resilience calls for a single basic design which, in turn, will bring economies of scale. Local variations will result from differences between sites, the need to fit in with local planning requirements and options for internal aesthetics.

The design has been developed with input from control room staff and presented to a wide range of stakeholders, including existing control room staff, and has been subject to independent peer review. Further details are available at the FiReControl website, which is in the public domain (www.firecontrol.odpm.gov.uk).

Land Sales

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister which local authorities have applied for Article 4 directives with respect to subdivision and sale of (a) agricultural land, (b) woodlands and (c) meadows. [195288]

Keith Hill: The information requested is not held centrally, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. An informal survey of Government Offices for the Regions, prior to the hon. Member's Adjournment Debate of 12 October on the Sale of Woodland, suggested that the South-East and the West Midlands are at present the two regions where Article 4 directions are most commonly used to deal with unacceptable development associated with plot-sales and subdivision of rural land.

Landfill Allowance Trading Scheme

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans he has to make payments through the local government settlement to compensate local authorities in growth areas as a result of the Landfill Allowance Trading Scheme making no allowance for population growth. [194946]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government are currently exploring options to make the local government finance settlement more forward looking. Using projected data for population, for example, would benefit high population growth areas.

Mobile Phone Masts

Tom Cox: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what arrangements are in place to seek the views of the public before planning permission for mobile phone masts is given; and if he will make a statement. [195586]

Keith Hill: Current planning guidance for all electronic communication developments is set out in Planning Policy Guidance Note 8 (revised) (PPG8). The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has also issued a Code of Best Practice on Mobile Phone Network Development.

When the Government published PPG8 we strengthened public consultation requirements for prior approval for mast proposals of 15 m and below and for masts on buildings and structures so that they are exactly the same as applications for planning permission.

The statutory requirements for public consultation require that as a minimum, authorities have to notify neighbours directly or place a notice on or near the site. Representations should be made within 21 days. It is, of course, open to authorities both to notify neighbours and to post a site notice if they consider it appropriate to do so. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's approach is to give local planning authorities the flexibility to decide the most suitable method of publicity in each case.

Apart from the statutory minimum, advice is also given to local planning authorities to consider what other methods of publicity are available for attracting a wider audience. Local planning authorities should consider whether the press, local amenity societies and residents' associations should be made aware of proposed developments.

Guidance also underlines that school governors must be consulted on proposals for new masts on or near a school.

Outside designated areas licensed operators are authorised under the Town and Country Planning (General Permitted Development) Order 1995 to install specified small scale apparatus without the need to make a planning application to the local authority. However, simply because these small developments do not need planning permission it does not mean that there is no public consultation. The Code of Best Practice that was produced jointly by central and local government and the mobile phone industry is clear that operators will assess every potential site and rate it using the "Traffic Light Model". The Traffic Light Model allows a site to be rated according to its likely sensitivity in terms of environmental, planning and community considerations. This model determines the level of public consultation that will be required if the site is selected for the installation.

Pension Funds (Suffolk)

Mr. Spring: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether the (a) Suffolk county council and (b) Forest Heath district council pension funds are in (i) surplus and (ii) deficit; and by how much. [195719]

Phil Hope: The most recent actuarial valuation report of the Suffolk county council pension fund showed that its assets represented 83 per cent. of their accrued liabilities as at 31 March 2001. The contribution rate for participating employers, set by the fund actuary for the triennial period ending 31 March 2005, has been certified as being sufficient to ensure the on-going solvency of the fund. The results of the 2004 valuation exercise are not available.

Forest Heath district council is not responsible for a pension fund although it contributes as an employer to the fund administered by Suffolk county council.

Regional Assemblies

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the Housing Market Renewal Pathfinders in England; and which local authority area each covers. [195167]

Keith Hill: The pathfinders cover sub-regional housing markets, which straddle parts of two or more local authority areas. The nine pathfinder areas cover parts of the following local authorities:

Pathfinder	Local authorities
Birmingham and Sandwell	Birmingham city council and Sandwell Metropolitan borough council
East Lancashire	Blackburn with Darwen borough council, Hyndburn borough council, Burnley borough council, Pendle borough council and Rossendale borough council
Hull and East Riding of Yorkshire[1]	Hull city council and East Riding of Yorkshire
Manchester and Salford;	Manchester city council and Salford city council
Merseyside	Liverpool city council, Sefton council and Wirral Metropolitan borough council
Newcastle and Gateshead;	Newcastle city council and Gateshead council
North Staffordshire	Stoke city council, Newcastle under Lyme borough council and Staffordshire Moorlands district council
Oldham and Rochdale;	Oldham council and Rochdale Metropolitan borough council
South Yorkshire	Sheffield city council, Barnsley Metropolitan borough council, Rotherham council and Doncaster Metropolitan borough council

[1] The Hull and East Riding pathfinder covers Hull City only.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what compensation central Government will make to local authorities for the extra costs of (a) the introduction of regional spatial strategies and (b) the consequent revision of existing local strategies. [195384]

Keith Hill: In recognition of the initial additional cost of the introduction of regional spatial strategies and the consequent revision of existing local strategies, total funding for regional planning bodies (RPBs) was raised from £9,150,000 in 2003–04 to £12,987,000 in 2004–05. This significant increase was in recognition of the pivotal role that RPBs would play within the new planning system and the additional statutory responsibilities that would be placed on them by the Planning and Compulsory Purchase Act.

Planning Delivery Grant was introduced in 2003–04 providing £350 million over three years, 2003–06, to help local authorities to improve and importantly move in to the new planning system of local development frameworks. 2004–05 is the second year of the grant and £130 million has been distributed to regional planning bodies and local authorities, in 2005–06 planning delivery grant will total £170 million. A further £255 million has been identified for the financial years 2006–07 and 2007–08.

Special Advisers

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many unpaid special advisers the Department has; what their names are; and which Government (a) bodies, (b) committees and (c) strategy groups each unpaid adviser (i) belongs to, (ii) advises and (iii) works alongside. [194067]

Phil Hope: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, West (Ruth Kelly) on 28 October 2004, Official Report, column. 1380W.

Traveller Sites

Mr. Flook: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans he has for new legislation on illegally encamped traveller sites in England; and if he will make a statement. [195497]

Keith Hill: There are no plans for further legislation relating to unauthorised encampments at this time, however the final version of the joint Office of the Deputy Prime Minister/Home Office guidance document, "Managing Unauthorised Camping" will be published in the near future. The Government have also introduced amendments into the Housing Bill with the intention of increasing the availability of sites for Gypsies and Travellers, which will help to reduce unauthorised camping. New Regulations will also be introduced shortly which will prescribe circumstances when temporary stop notices may be used to prevent illegal encampments.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Motor Vehicle Registration Plates

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions there were for failure to display a motor vehicle registration plate in the last five years for which figures are available, broken down by police authority area. [194343]

Caroline Flint: The Home Office Court Proceedings Database does not separately identify the specific offence of failure to display a motor vehicle registration plate.

Animal Rights Extremists

Michael Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance his Department gives police forces regarding the use of the law on criminal conspiracy in relation to the activities of animal rights extremists; and if he will make a statement. [193280]

Caroline Flint: The Home Office provides no specific guidance to the police on the use of the offence of criminal conspiracy in relation to the activities of animal rights extremists. However the Association of Chief Police Officers has produced a good practice guide for policing animal rights extremism including information on all the relevant legislation. Forces can also seek advice and support on tackling Animal Rights Extremism from the National Extremism Tactical Co-ordination Unit.

Animal Testing

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the classification of animal testing procedures as (a) mild, (b) moderate and (c) substantial severity, with particular reference to their effect on animals. [193084]

Caroline Flint: The classification of severity limits to be applied to the protocols of licensed scientific procedures using animals is described in the publication entitled Guidance on the Operation of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. This was presented to Parliament on 23 March 2000 (HC 321—a copy will be in the Library).

For ease of reference the following is a relevant extract from the publication:

> Protocol Severity Limits
> 5.40 The severity limit for each protocol is determined by the upper limit of the expected adverse effects that may be encountered by a protected animal, taking into account the measures specified in the licence for avoiding and controlling adverse effects. It represents the worst potential outcome for any animal subjected to the protocol, even if it may only be experienced by a small number of the animals to be used.
> 5.41 In assessing the severity limit of a protocol, account should be taken of the effect of all the procedures (whether regulated or not) applied to each animal or group of animals; the nature and extent of the likely adverse effects; the action taken to mitigate these effects; and the humane endpoints to be applied.
> 5.42 The severity limits of the protocols in the licence are categorised as follows:
> Unclassified
> Protocols performed entirely under general anaesthesia, from which the animal does not recover consciousness. This includes the preparation and use of decerebrated animals.
> Mild
> Protocols that, at worst, give rise to slight or transitory minor adverse effects. Examples include: small infrequent blood samples; skin irritation tests with substances expected to be non-irritant or only mildly irritant; minor surgical procedures under anaesthesia such as small superficial tissue biopsies or cannulation of peripheral blood vessels. However, if used in combination or repeated in the same animal, the cumulative severity may be increased beyond mild. Protocols may also be regarded as mild if they have the potential to cause greater suffering but contain effective safeguards to initiate effective symptomatic or specific treatment or terminate the protocol before the animal shows more than minor adverse effects.
> Moderate
> Protocols regarded as moderate include toxicity tests (which do not involve lethal endpoints) and many surgical procedures (provided that suffering is controlled and minimised by effective post-operative analgesia and care). Protocols that have the potential to cause greater suffering but include controls which minimise severity, or terminate the protocol before the animal shows more than moderate adverse effects, may also be classed within the moderate severity limit.
> Substantial
> Protocols that may result in a major departure from the animal's usual state of health or well-being. These include: acute toxicity procedures where significant morbidity or death is an endpoint; some efficacy tests of anti-microbial agents and vaccines; major surgery; and some models of disease, where welfare may be seriously compromised. If it is expected that even one animal would suffer substantial effects, the procedure would merit a 'substantial' severity limit.

The Secretary of State will not license any procedure likely to cause severe pain or distress that cannot be alleviated [Section IO(2A)].

The use of severity limits and bands (relating to whole licensed projects, as also described in the published Guidance) is currently being considered by the Animal Procedures Committee, who have been asked to see whether any changes might usefully be made.

Anti-social Behaviour Orders

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for The Home Department whether he intends to review the working of anti-social behaviour order legislation following the High Court decision in the case involving the press road crew; and if he will make a statement. [191964]

Ms Blears: We are committed to issuing further guidance on anti-social behaviour orders (ASBOs) following the judgement in the Stanley v. London Borough of Brent/Metropolitan Police Judicial Review. We are also looking into ending automatic reporting restrictions for people under 18 who breach their ASBOs, as set out in our Strategic Plan published in July this year.

Tony Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many antisocial behaviour orders have been issued in the Workington constituency. [191034]

Ms Blears [holding answer 21 October 2004]: Antisocial behaviour orders (ASBOs) have been available to the courts since 1 April 1999. From commencement, up to 31 March 2004 (latest available), the Home Office has been notified of four ASBOs issued where restrictions imposed are specific to the Allerdale borough council area, in which the constituency of Workington is located.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many antisocial behaviour orders (ASBOs) have been breached (a) once, (b) twice and (c) on three or more occasions since the inception of ASBOs; and in how many cases breaches have been dealt with by way of (i) conditional discharge and (ii) a custodial sentence; [191514]

(2) how many breaches in antisocial behaviour orders (ASBOs) on (a) a second occasion and (b) a third or later occasion have been dealt with by way of (i) a conditional discharge, (ii) a community sentence other than a conditional discharge and (iii) a custodial sentence in each year since the inception of ASBOs. [191515]

Ms Blears: The information is not available in the form requested. However, of the 855 antisocial behaviour orders (ASBOs) notified to the Home Office as being issued between 1 June 2000 and 31 December 2002, 305 were breached, within the same period, on one or more than one occasion. As a result, 152 persons were given a custodial sentence, 93 received community sentences, and 60 received other sentences of which four received a conditional discharge. The sentence counted is the severest across all breaches.

Binge Drinking

Dr. Pugh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment the Department has made of the effectiveness of anti-binge drinking campaigns. [191549]

Ms Blears: The Alcohol Misuse Enforcement Campaign ran for eight consecutive weekends over the summer period. It was the first step in sending a strong signal that the irresponsible sale and consumption of alcohol will not be tolerated. The campaign provided a clear picture of where we need to focus our efforts and it made significant progress in supporting police and partners in making our streets safe. Data were captured in order to monitor the use of tactics and to establish a baseline for further work. The effectiveness of the campaign was also measured by feedback from participating areas and has been compiled in a 'Lessons Learned' document that will be published shortly.

Child Protection

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action is being taken to ensure that young children taken abroad are accounted for when their parents or guardians return to this country; and what checks are made. [193146]

Mr. Mullin: I have been asked to reply.

There are currently no routine checks in place to monitor the return of young children travelling overseas with their parents or guardians.

Community Support Officers

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the figures from the evaluation of the Metropolitan Police Service's participation in the Community Support Officer detention power pilot were for (a) the average length of detentions, (b) the number of instances in which the 30 minute period was exceeded, (c) the number of instances in which the detainee had to be released because the time limit had been reached, (d) the outcome at the end of each detention and (e) the total number of times the power was used. [193888]

Ms Blears: The information is as follows:

(a) During the pilot, detentions were recorded in seven bands ranging from one to five minutes to over 30 minutes. The distribution was as follows:

Duration (minutes)	number of detentions	percentage
1–5	5	3.6
6–10	54	39.1
11–15	7	5.1
16–20	47	34.1
21–25	1	0.7
26–30	19	13.8
30	5	3.6
Total	138	100

(b) As shown in the table, the 30 minute period was exceeded in five cases.

(c) The detainees had to be released because the time limit was exceeded in two cases

(d) The outcomes at the end of each detention were as follows. There were 75 arrests by a police officer. 31 were released after the arrival of a police officer, 28 were released after giving a satisfactory name and address, two were released because the time limit had been reached and two absconded.

(e) The detention power was used 138 times during the pilot.

Correspondence

Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when his Department will reply to the letters from the hon. Member for Manchester, Central dated (a) 6 May, regarding Mr. O. K. A., ref PO5195/4, (b) 2 July, regarding Mr. A. O. ref PO7752/4, (c) 19 July, regarding Mr. A. T. ref T1078617 and (d) 3 August, regarding Ms. F. O. H., ref PO8969/4. [191371]

Mr. Browne: The information is as follows.

(a) I replied to my hon. Friend's letter of 6 May on 1 November.

(b) I replied to my hon. Friend's letter of 2 July on 8 July.

(c) I wrote to my hon. Friend on 4 August. A duplicate letter has been sent on 14 October.

(d) My hon. Friend the Member for Slough (Fiona Mactaggart) replied to my hon. Friend's letter of 3 August on 11 October.

Council of Ministers

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a Written Ministerial Statement outlining the key points on the agenda for each of the Council of Ministers' meetings at which his Department is represented in advance of each meeting. [188187]

Caroline Flint: This is a useful suggestion and Her Majesty's Government will consider it further, in line with its policy of keeping Parliament better informed on EU business.

CPS

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many and what percentage of trials in Merseyside courts resulted in a conviction in the last year for which figures are available; [146248]

(2) how many and what percentage of (a) domestic violence and (b) homophobic crime trials in Merseyside courts resulted in a conviction in the last year for which figures are available. [146249]

Paul Goggins: The following table gives the number of defendants who were proceeded against at magistrates' courts and found guilty at all courts for all offences in the Merseyside Police Force area, 2002:

Defendants proceeded against at magistrates' courts and found guilty at all courts for all offences in the Merseyside police force area 2002[1]

Proceeded against	57,072
Found guilty	44,126
Conviction rate[2] (percentage)	77

[1] These data are on the principal offence basis.

[2] Proportion of defendants proceeded against who were found guilty.

Offences involving domestic violence and homophobia are not identifiable on the Home Office Court Proceedings database as no specific statute covers such offences. Prosecutions brought might range from common assault to homicide depending on the level of violence, and as the circumstances of the offences for which prosecutions are brought are not collected centrally, offences involving domestic violence and homophobia cannot be distinguished from other offences within these categories.

Statistics for 2003 will be published on 18 November.

Crime

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convictions there have been for antisocial behaviour in (a) Taunton and (b) Avon and Somerset Police Force area in each year since 2000. [193872]

Ms Blears: Information on convictions is available by offence, of which some may have involved antisocial behaviour. Such circumstances are not identified by the Home Office Court Proceedings database.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) drug offences, (b) thefts from vehicles and (c) burglaries were recorded in the last 12 months in Coventry, South. [192981]

Ms Blears: The latest available information relates to 2003–04 and is for the Coventry Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnership (CDRP) area. There were 869 drug offences, 3,843 thefts from vehicles and 5,846 burglaries recorded by the police in the Coventry CDRP area.

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for The Home Department how many (a) violent crimes, (b) thefts from vehicles, (c) burglaries and (d) drug offences were recorded by the Metropolitan Police force for the last year for which figures are available. [191954]

Ms Blears: The information requested is given in the table.

Offences recorded by the Metropolitan Police—2003–04

	Number of offences
Violent crimes	237,028
Theft from vehicles	103,899
Burglaries	105,361
Drug offences	32,332

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the level of (a) burglary, (b) violent crime and (c) car crime was in (i) East Somerset District and (ii) Avon and Somerset in each year from 1992–93; and if he will make a statement. [191310]

Ms Blears: The available information is given in the tables. Information is available for calendar years until 1997 and on a financial year basis thereafter. Information at the local level relates to the Somerset East Basic Command Unit and is available centrally only from 1999–2000. The statistics for burglary for this BCD are only available for burglary in a dwelling.

[1] The data in this table takes account of the introduction of the National Crime Recording Standard in April 2002. These figures are not directly comparable with those for earlier years.

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) crimes, (b) burglaries, (c) thefts and (d) vehicle-related crimes were reported to the police in (i) Yorkshire and the Humber, (ii) North Yorkshire and (iii) City of York in (A) 1979, (B) 1997 and (C) the most recent year for which figures are available. [191230]

Ms Blears: The available information is given in the following tables. Figures for the City of York relate to the York Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnership (CDRP) area and are only available for 2003–04.

Offences recorded by the police in 1979

	Yorkshire and the Humber region	North Yorkshire	York CDRP

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of crimes reported to the police were cleared up in (a) Yorkshire and the Humber, (b) North Yorkshire and (c) City of York in (i) 1997 and (ii) the most recent year for which figures are available. [191231]

Ms Blears: The available information is given in the table. No information is currently available centrally for clear-ups for all offences in the York Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnership.

Percentage of offences cleared up by the police in 1997 and 2003–04

	1997[1]	2003–04[2]
Yorkshire and the Humber Region	26	21
North Yorkshire	26	28
York CDRP	n/a	n/a n/a—Not available.

[1] Figures for offences cleared up are affected by changes to the detections counting rules in 1998–99 and the introduction of the National Crime Recording Standard in April 2002. The figures for the two years are therefore not directly comparable.

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much has been spent on CCTV in York since 1997. [191233]

Ms Blears: Since 1997, the Home Office has specifically provided the City of York with £228,000 for Close Circuit Television. This was as a result of Round Two of the Crime Reduction Programme.

Other years' crime reduction funding has been allocated directly to the local Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnership and Basic Command Unit in York to finance a variety of interventions, including CCTV. Information about the allocation of that funding is not held centrally.

Doorstep Selling and Cold Calling

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department is taking to combat doorstep crime; and if he will make a statement. [189740]

Ms Blears: The Home Office has been working since 2000 to help prevent distraction burglary—i.e. those cases where a falsehood, trick or distraction is used on an occupant of a dwelling to gain or try to gain access to the premises to commit burglary. Among other things, we have:

> issued good practice guidelines to those tackling the problem on a local level, including those who work with older people; > funded pilot projects and disseminated the good practice that has emerged; > produced and distributed videos and other publicity material aimed at informing older people about this crime and what they can do to reduce their chances of becoming victims;
> encouraged and, in certain areas, helped fund work in to improve the appearance and security of homes; and > encouraged the sharing of intelligence between all the agencies involved.

Other doorstep crimes—such as those committed by rogue traders—often involve breaches of consumer laws that are the responsibility of the Department for Trade and Industry. We are working closely with them on tackling these crimes.

Drunk Driving

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of breath tests taken in the Greater London area resulted in arrests for drunk driving during the last 12 months. [194135]

Caroline Flint: The number of arrests resulting from positive or refused breath tests are not collated centrally. However, 24 per cent. of screening breath tests carried out in 2002, in Greater London were positive or refused.

Statistics for 2003 will be available in the spring 2005.

Firearms

Paddy Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many accidental (a) fatalities and (b) injuries have been caused by licensed people using (i) shotguns and (ii) rifles in the field in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available. [163013]

Caroline Flint: No information is collated centrally in relation to accidents resulting from the use of shotguns and rifles in the field.

Internet (Material Seizure)

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent discussions he has had with US law enforcement agencies concerning the seizure of material from UK-based internet hosting providers; and if he will make a statement. [191627]

Caroline Flint: I can confirm that my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has had no discussions in regard to the matter referred to in the question posed by the hon. Member. In the circumstances I do not therefore believe that it is necessary for me to make a statement.

Knife Crimes

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many incidents involving knives and other bladed weapons were reported to the police in each year since 1997 for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [193040]

Ms Blears: This information is not collected centrally. The number of offences involving knives are not separated out in the recorded crime statistics. The Homicide Index holds details on the number of homicides where the apparent method of killing was the use of a sharp instrument. The available information from 1997–98 to 2002–03 is given in the table.

Number of homicides involving the use of a sharp instrument

	Number
1997–98	202
1998–99	202
1999–2000	213
2000–01	214
2001–02	262
2002–03	272

Louise-Ann Nel

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for West Lancashire of (a) 20 April and (b) 18 May concerning Louise-Ann Nel (Home Office Refs E1000813/N1012865) [194806]

Mr. Browne: My hon. Friend the Member for Slough (Fiona Mactaggart) wrote to my hon. Friend on 26 October.

Mobile Phones

Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of enforcement of the ban on the use of handheld mobile telephones while driving. [194824]

Caroline Flint: The new specific offence of using a hand-held phone while driving is intended essentially as a deterrent and to provide a simple, objective offence to enforce and prosecute which does not depend on judgements of degree of control or carelessness. The Association of Chief Police Officers have welcomed it as a straightforward method of dealing with this dangerous behaviour. The police will enforce the offence as operationally appropriate.

I understand that the Department for Transport is monitoring the use of mobile phones by drivers. The most recent survey carried out on weekdays in September 2004 found that the use of hand-held phones by car drivers had dropped by over 25 per cent. since September 2003.

Pedestrian Footways

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he intends to change the guidance he gives to the police in respect of cycling on pedestrian footways; and if he will make a statement. [193504]

Caroline Flint: Chief officers of police are best placed to assess the nature and cause of cycling offences locally and to decide the most appropriate response.

The Government do not condone irresponsible cycling and will continue to promote safe behaviour on bicycles. To help the police with enforcement we have made it possible for Community Support Officer (CSOs) appointed under the Police Reform Act 2002 to issue £30 fixed penalty notices for cycling inconsiderately or irresponsibly on pavements.

The cycling infrastructure and environment are currently under improvement as a result of our National Cycling Strategy. We expect this improvement to reduce the incentive to cycle on the pavement.

Police

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the average per capita spending on the Metropolitan Police force is in the current financial year. [190253]

Ms Blears: The budget requirement of the Metropolitan Police Authority in 2004–05 is £2,650 million. This includes the net revenue budget and spending for targeted programmes and for capital provision[1].The estimated population is 7.348 million[2].

Average per capita spending on the Metropolitan Police Service in 2004–05 is £361. Grant towards funding the expenditure is £2,132 million or £290 per head of population.

[1] Includes Crime Fighting Fund, Airwave, DNA Expansion Programme, Community Support Officer funding, London and South East Allowances, Free Travel, Basic Command Unit funding, Street Crime Initiative, Special Priority Payments, Counter Terrorism funding and capital provision. Forces may use revenue funding to support additional spending on capital.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the cost of the police force in Southend was in each of the last five years; and what the performance indicators are for the force. [191134]

Ms Blears: The Chief Constable of Essex Police informs me that the expenditure of Southend Basic Command Unit (BCU) in each of the last five years is as follows:

	Expenditure (£ million)
1999–2000	10.3
2000–01	9.7
2001–02	10.3
2002–03	10.7
2003–04	11.5
2004–05[1]	12.0

[1] Estimate.

In addition, the Southend BCU benefits from use of central force facilities, including traffic policing and air support.

The Police Performance Monitoring Report for 2003–04, published in September 2004, shows performance for forces over six domains of policing responsibility. At BCU level, data are available for two of those domains: Reducing Crime and Investigating Crime.

The Reducing Crime domain measures the number of domestic burglaries, vehicle crimes and robberies per 1,000 population. Figures for the Southend BCD are:

Crime type	Number of crimes (2003–04)	Crimes per 1,000 population (2003–04)	Change from 2002–03 (percentage)
Domestic burglary	832	12	-23
Vehicle crime	2,254	14	+2
Robbery	408	3	+30

The Investigating Crime domain measures sanction detections and offences brought to justice (OBTJ) per recorded crime. OBTJ data are only available at force level, but detection data are available at BCU level. Detection rates (including administrative detections) for 2003–04 for the crime types listed above in the Southend BCU are given in the table.

Crime type	Detections per crime (2003–04) (percentage)
Domestic burglary	13
Vehicle crime	8
Robbery	20

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the total spending by Warwickshire police (a) was in each of the last seven years and (b) is expected to be in 2004–05; how much in each case was spent by the force on pensions; and how much of the total expenditure in each case was funded from (i) central government and (ii) council tax. [191985]

Ms Blears [holding answer 18 October 2004]: The information is set out in the following table.

£ million

	Total government funding[2]	Other[3]	Council Tax	Total Gross Revenue Expenditure	Net Expenditure on Pensions
1997–98	41.6	2.8	9.3	53.7	7.1
1998–99	42.5	0.9	11.1	54.5	6.8
1999–2000	43.3	1.8	12.7	57.8	8.0
2000–01	46.3	0.7	14.1	60.9	8.4
2001–02	49.1	1.6	15.8	66.5	8.8
2002–03	50.3	1.1	19.0	70.4	7.9
2003–04	52.2	2.9	22.1	77.2	[illegible]

Prisons

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what fire safety advice is made available to prisons; and whether there are regional variations in the advice made available; [189682]

(2) what the outcome was of the recent independent management review of Prison Service fire safety advisors; and if he will make a statement on its implementation, with particular reference to costs; [189683]

(3) what the cost was of the independent management review of Prison Service fire safety advisors; [189684]

(4) what apparatus is available to members of the Prison Service to deal with fires. [189685]

Paul Goggins: Each establishment has a dedicated fire officer, who has attended relevant training. This person acts as a first line of advice to the Governor of the establishment. This structure is supported by the Prison Service Fire Safety Section in which experienced and appropriately qualified fire professionals are available to offer support and advice on policy. There are no regional variations as policy is generated from the centre thereby maintaining a consistent approach.

There has been no independent review of Prison Service fire advisors. All reviews have been commissioned on an in-house basis by the Prison Service and after careful consideration Fire Safety Section has been restructured and the new arrangements started on 4 October 2004. The cost of work undertaken in assessing the work of Fire Safety Section is not available because the revision was part of the Prison Service's overall Human Resource programme.

Within each establishment a range of fire fighting equipment is available for staff use, including fire reels, extinguishers, cell inundation points and use of short duration breathing apparatus.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much the Prison Service has spent defending equal pay employment tribunal cases in each year since 1997. [189864]

Paul Goggins: On 9 September 2004 the Prison Service had spent £1,034,741 since 1997 on equal pay tribunal cases.

Racist Attacks

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many racist (a) attacks and (b) threats police authorities have recorded in 2004. [193801]

Ms Blears: The available information relates 2003–04 and covers offences of racially or religiously aggravated less serious wounding and common assault. There were 4,840 recorded offences of racially or religiously aggravated less serious wounding and 4,017 offences of racially or religiously aggravated common assault. Information on racist threats is not collected centrally.

Retail Crime

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what action the Government is taking on retail crime; [191509]

(2) what assistance is given to retailers to help tackle retail crime; and how retailers can receive such assistance. [191527]

Ms Blears: The Government recognises the detrimental impact that crime can have on retailers, their staff and the communities they serve and is taking positive action to reduce it.

On 12 October 2004 I met with senior retailers and their trade associations to discuss the key issues faced by retailers and to seek their views on joint action to reduce retail crime. Actions coming out of this will build on the work already under way.

The Home Office has supported the work of the British Retail Consortium in developing retail crime reduction partnerships and is providing £899 of funding for them to set up the Action Against Business Crime (AABC) Group. This Group will provide a national network of business crime reduction partnerships in town and shopping centres across England and Wales. 100 new partnerships will be set up in addition to the 100 or so already established, who will be provided with a support network.

Recognising that a large proportion of retail crime is drug related, pilot outreach schemes have been set up, with £170,000 Home Office funding, in Brighton and Northampton to tackle the link between retail crime and drugs misuse.

We have recently completed the 'Small Retailers in Deprived Areas' initiative which provided £15 million of Government funding to the most vulnerable businesses to enable them to install security measures. Over 12,500 businesses benefited from the scheme which also included a training programme on crime reduction for retailers.

Advice on crime reduction information is available from the Home Office produced postcards 'Don't Discount Crime' and 'Putting Crime out of Business', both of which provide easily accessible crime reduction advice to small businesses. These are available on the Home Office website. The Health and Safety Executive has also produced specific advice on managing the risk of work related violence.

Retailers can obtain further specific advice and assistance on crime reduction from the Business Crime Reduction Advisers based in each of the Government Offices, the Home Office website and their trade associations.

From November 2004 the police will be able to issue fixed penalty notices for some cases of retail or commercial theft. This will ensure that more minor incidents of such theft are dealt with quickly and effectively and the £80 penalty will act as a strong deterrent for first time offenders.

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many fixed penalty notices for shoplifting a repeat offender receives before being taken to court; [190704]

(2) what guidance his Department has issued about the proposed move to fixed penalty notices for shoplifting with regard to repeat offenders. [190707]

Ms Blears [holding answer 14 October 2004]: Operational guidance on issuing fixed penalty notices for disorder, as provided for under section 6 of the Criminal Justice and Police Act 2001, was provided to the police for the pilots of penalty notices for disorder which commenced from August 2002.

10 new penalty offences were added to the scheme by Order 2004 number 2,540 made on 27 September. Theft is one of these offences. The operational guidance is now being revised and updated in consultation with the police, retail sector representatives and other stakeholders.

The amended guidance will provide advice on issuing fixed penalty notices for the new penalty offences coming into effect from 1 November 2004. The revised police operational guidance will be made available via the Home Office website for general access shortly, when it has been finalised.

The police operational guidance will advise that offenders who repeatedly shoplift will not be suitable for fixed penalty notice disposal.

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether all fixed penalty notices for retail theft are made available to retail establishments when recruiting new personnel. [190705]

Ms Blears [holding answer 14 October 2004]: Retailers will be responsible for setting their own recruitment policies in respect of declaration of fixed penalty notices.

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what circumstances a repeat offender for shop-lifting receiving two or more fixed penalty notices is neither fingerprinted nor photographed. [190706]

Ms Blears [holding answer 14 October 2004]: Theft is a recordable offence. The police have the power to take fingerprints and DNA on arrest for all recordable offences. These will be logged against the individual's name on the police national computer (PNC). It is expected that most cases of shoplifting will involve the person's arrest. The police will check on PNC for previous offending. If the person is identified as having already had fingerprints and DNA taken and entered on the databases they would not need to be taken again.

Where a person has not been identified as a previous offender and has not been arrested, police may seek the person's consent to provide an identifying fingerprint.

Operational guidance provided to the police advises that offenders who repeatedly shop lift will not be suitable for being dealt with by fixed penalty notice.

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were convicted of shoplifting in Waveney in (a) 2001, (b) 2002 and (c) 2003; and how many of these led to (i) a caution, (ii) probation and (iii) a custodial sentence. [189462]

Paul Goggins: The information contained in the table gives the number of persons cautioned and the number found guilty at all courts and those sentenced to a community rehabilitation order (formerly a probation order) or immediate custody for "stealing from shops and stalls" in the Suffolk police force area, 2001 and 2002.

The information collected centrally does not enable cases in the Waveney constituency to be identified.

Statistics for 2003 will be published in the autumn.

Number of persons cautioned, and the number found guilty and sentenced for "stealing from shops and stalls" at all courts, Suffolk police force area, 2001 and 2002[1]

	2001	2002
Cautioned	599	396
Found guilty	771	743
Sentenced	770	739
Of which:
Community rehabilitation order[2]	94	88
Immediate custody	102	112

[1] These data are on the principal offence basis.

[2] Formerly a probation order.

Stop and Search

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the Association of Chief Police Officers has (a) reviewed and (b) revised its guidelines on stop and search procedures. [191322]

Ms Blears: The Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) last issued guidance on stop and search procedures in August 2001 (Manual of guidance on stop and search). They have no plans to revise or review this guidance but have contributed to the Recording of 'stops' Implementation Guide (issued by the Home Office in March 2004) and the 'Interim Guidance on Stop and Search' (issued by the Home Office, ACPO, and the APA in July 2004). They will also be a member of the Stop and Search Action Team Delivery Board that will deliver the Stop and Search Manual in 2005.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department with which groups he has had discussions regarding stop and search and arrest and detention powers. [191540]

Ms Blears: The Home Office launched the Stop and Search Action Team (SSAT) in July 2004 to ensure that the police use their powers of stop and search fairly and as effectively as possible. The SSAT are working with both police and community representatives to deliver their work programme.

The PACE Codes that govern arrest and detention powers are consulted on widely by the police service, authorities and community groups. This is then referred to the Home Affairs Select Committee and then onto Parliament for approval.

Violent Crime

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many violent attacks against Asian men were recorded in each of the last five years, broken down by police force area. [192980]

Ms Blears [holding answer 25 October 2004]: This information is not collected centrally. It is not possible to identify the ethnicity of victims of violent attacks from the recorded crime statistics.

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many reported cases of violence against women there have been in the Metropolitan police force area during the last 12 months. [193800]

Ms Blears: This information is not collected centrally. However, the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis reports as follows:

Female victims of violence against the person recorded by the Metropolitan police: October 2003–September 2004

	Number
Murder	41
GBH	964
ABH	20,236
Common assault	42,742
Offensive weapon	331
Harassment	19,814
Other violence	5,833
Total	89,961

The British Crime Survey provides a measure of incidents of violence against women which includes those offences that are not reported to the police. Further information is available in chapter 5 of Home Office Statistical Bulletin 10/04 'Crime in England and Wales 2003/04'. A copy is available in the Library and it can also be accessed via the Home Office website.

Women Chief Constables

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for The Home Department how many women are chief constables in each of the policing divisions. [191955]

Ms Blears: Four women currently hold chief constable or equivalent posts in police forces in the United Kingdom.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Creative Partnerships Programme

Mr. Boris Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what contribution her Department has made to the additional £70 million funds allocated to the Creative Partnerships programme until 2006. [195402]

Estelle Morris: The Department allocated all of the additional £70 million for the delivery of the Creative Partnerships programme until 2006. This is enabling the programme to continue to support the existing 16 partnerships, and to expand to nine new areas this year and a further 11 areas in 2005. DfES has allocated an additional £2.5 million to the programme in 2004–05.

Mr. Boris Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport which indices of multiple deprivation were used to select those areas included in (a) phase one, (b) phase two and (c) phase three of the Creative Partnerships programme. [195403]

Estelle Morris: The primary indices of deprivation used to select areas for inclusion in the first phase of Creative Partnerships were: the DETR Index of Multiple Deprivation 2000; the DfEE Free School Meal Index; and, the list of DETR Rural Development Areas. For phases two and three of the programme, the primary indices were the list of Neighbourhood Renewal Fund Areas and the Index of Multiple Deprivation 2000.

For all three phases of the programme, the regional offices of Arts Council England were permitted some flexibility in selecting areas, to take account of cultural and regional priorities, and the need for the programme to achieve a national spread.

Mr. Boris Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans she has to extend the Creative Partnerships programme beyond phase three areas. [195404]

Estelle Morris: There are currently no plans to extend Creative Partnerships beyond the 36 areas already directly involved in the programme. However, the Creative Partnerships team will continue to work nationally and locally with colleagues from other areas to spread the lessons being learned through the programme more widely.

National Lottery

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment her Department has made of the impact of more casinos on the (a) takings and (b) disbursements of the national lottery. [194114]

Mr. Caborn: The position remains as set out in paragraph 5.11 of "A safe bet for success", laid before Parliament as Cm 5397.

Social Exclusion (Lottery Funding)

Vera Baird: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment she has made of the contribution that the lottery has made to combating social exclusion in the Tees Valley. [194580]

Estelle Morris [holding answer 1 November 2004]: Lottery distributors are required to take into account the need to reduce economic and social deprivation in making awards. It is not possible to identify the exact value of funding to the Tees Valley, or to identify the exact value of funding specifically to target social exclusion. Redcar has received a total of 234 awards amounting to £18,730,581 from the lottery.

Lottery funding has transformed the lives of thousands of people across the UK; it has raised over £16 billion for good causes and funded over 160,000 projects.

Tourism

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the growth rates in the tourism industry were in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available. [195224]

Mr. Caborn: Tourism industry growth rates are currently available on a consistent basis only since 2000, and these are shown in the table:

Tourism industry growth

	Gross value added (£ billion)	Growth (%)
2000	32.0	—
2001	31.5	-1.5
2002	32.2	2.1
2003	32.8	1.9

Source:

UK Tourism Satellite Accounts First Steps project, September 2004

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what her estimate is of current growth rates in the tourism industry. [195250]

Mr. Caborn: The latest estimate for growth in the tourism industry is for 2002–03, and stood at 1.9 per cent. This estimate is from the UK Tourism Satellite Account First Steps Project, which was published in September 2004.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Antiretroviral Drugs

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans the Government has to encourage the World Trade Organisation to change the TRIPS rules on antiretroviral drugs; and if he will make a statement. [195500]

Hilary Benn: On 30 August 2003 the World Trade Organisation (WTO) reached an agreement to enable countries with insufficient or no manufacturing capacities in the pharmaceutical sector to make effective use of the compulsory licensing provisions already present in the TRIPS Agreement. The decision which the WTO Members made should improve access to cheaper medicines, including antiretrovirals, for poor countries lacking production capacity.

Discussions continue in Geneva, with a view to turning the 30 August Decision into an amendment to the TRIPS Agreement itself. The UK Government would prefer to see a swift conclusion to these discussions and an amendment which faithfully reflects the agreement reached on 30 August. However, delay in agreeing an amendment to the TRIPS Agreement will not affect developing countries' ability to use the Decision.

Our view is that developing countries should be able to take full advantage of the flexibilities in the TRIPS Agreement—including compulsory licensing—as set out in the Doha Ministerial Declaration on TRIPS and Public Health.

CDC

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will list firms liquidated by CDC/Actis Capital by (a) sector, (b) country, (c) original investment amount and (d) liquidation return amount since 1998. [193287]

Hilary Benn: The following table contains the information for companies put into liquidation since 2000. Earlier information cannot be obtained except at disproportionate cost.

			£ million

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what proportion of China Capital Partners Ltd. CDC has owned in each year since 1999; and if he will list its other investors by (a) amount and (b) proportion since 1999. [193320]

Hilary Benn: From 1999 to 2004, China Capital Partners Ltd. was owned 50 per cent. by CDC Group plc and 50 per cent. by Aviva plc. It is now owned 100 per cent. by Actis. The amount paid by Aviva for its investment in China Capital Partners is confidential to the parties involved.

China Capital Partners

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will list China Capital Partners Ltd.'s investments by (a) sector, (b) location, (c) amount and (d) percentage of ownership. [193321]

Hilary Benn: The information (a) (b) and (c) is shown in the following table:

Investment company	Sector	Location	Amount invested (US$ million)
NorthPole	Manufacturing	China, Sri Lanka and Bangladesh	30.0
Mengniu Dairy	Dairy producer	Mongolia	7.5
Powercom	Telecoms	Shenzhen, Guangdong	12.0
China Wolfberry	Beverages	Shongwei, Zhonghing	10.0
China National Offshore Oil Company (CNOOC)	Minerals, oil and gas	Offshore China	25.0

(d) The stake in CNOOC has been sold. The other stakes are minority holdings. The exact percentages are commercially sensitive.

Climate Change

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development whether the UK's international development policies are assessed for their impact on climate change. [194270]

Hilary Benn: The goal of UK development assistance is poverty eradication and the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals. DFID supports developing countries in the planning and implementation of their development strategies, for example national poverty reduction plans, including responding to climate related risks. We also support multilateral work to support low carbon development.

DFID's environmental safeguard policies require all bilateral programmes to be screened for a range of environmental impacts, including climate change. The screening requirements are due for review in 2005 and we will be examining ways to improve our treatment of climate risks.

With respect to aid funds delivered through multilateral organisations, DFID is working with them to ensure that their environmental screening policies address climate change, and to raise awareness about tackling climate change proactively. Following the 2001 review of the World Bank's role in oil and gas extraction and mining (the Extractive Industries Review), we secured a commitment from the World Bank Group to increase investments in energy efficiency and renewable energy over the period 2005 to 2010. However, we consider the World Bank's target of doubling investment in energy efficiency and renewable energy too modest, and have called for further review in 2005.

The UK is committed to helping developing countries manage risks and adapt to impacts of climate change. DFID has issued preliminary guidance as part of an overall adaptation strategy. We plan to develop more detailed guidance in 2005, in partnership with the UN International Strategy for Disaster Reduction and the World Bank.

Ministers' Private Offices

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the running costs of Ministers' private offices in his Department have been in each year since 1997. [191382]

Hilary Benn: It is difficult to separate out the running costs of Ministers' Private Offices from the total expenditure of DFID's Top Management Group, which includes the Permanent Secretary, the Directors General and their staff.

For the financial year 2003–04, the best estimate of Ministers' Private Office running cost expenditure is £1,149,559. This includes salary for Ministers and their staff (including the Parliamentary and Correspondence Units), travel and subsistence, training, subscriptions, post and telecommunications.

For previous years, I refer the hon. Member to the response I gave to the hon. Member for Arundel and South Downs (Mr. Flight) on the 17 July 2003, Official Report, column 573W. Figures from previous years are not directly comparable given revised budgeting procedures and for a short period in 2003–04 there was an additional Ministerial position and Private Office.

Palestinian Equity Fund

Linda Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will make a statement on his Department's policy on the Palestinian Equity Fund. [194822]

Hilary Benn: The Palestinian Equity Fund is a new scheme to provide small loans to Palestinian olive farmers to modernise the olive oil industry. DFID has considered very carefully proposals that we should fund this initiative. Small enterprise development and agriculture are not however focus areas for DFID as set out in our Country Assistance Plan for Palestinians 2004–06. We have advised the organisers of the fund of possible alternative sources of support.

Sustainable Energy (CHP Provisions) Order

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what measures his Department (a) has undertaken and (b) plans to undertake to comply with the Sustainable Energy (CHP Provisions) Order 2003. [194434]

Hilary Benn: DFID has commissioned a feasibility study for the use of Combined Heat and Power (CHP) generated electricity in our main London Building. We are awaiting the report from this study. Under the targets set out in the Framework for Sustainable Development for the Government Estate, Departments are required to source at least 15 per cent. of electricity from Good Quality Combined Heat and Power by 2010, but allowances will be made for those departments that already purchase 100 per cent. renewable electricity. In our case, 100 per cent. of the electricity used at this site is already generated from renewable sources, and since July 2004 this is also the case for our second main UK office at East Kilbride.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

China

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much Chinese investment there has been in the UK in each year since 1999. [194131]

Mr. Alexander: Since 1999, UK Trade and Investment has recorded the following number of inward investment projects from China in the UK. Figures for 1999–2000 to 2003–04 have been updated since the publication of annual reports that have been laid in the Libraries of the House in each financial year. These figures are based on information provided by companies at the time of the announcement of the decision to invest in the UK. These figures take no account of subsequent developments. There is no requirement to notify UKTI and so the figures include only those projects, where UKTIs Inward Investment Group and its regional partners were involved or which have come to their notice.

	Number of projects
2000–01	11
2001–02	18
2002–03	22
2003–04	23

Commercial Debts (Late Payment)

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations she has received regarding late payment of commercial debts; and if she will make a statement. [193505]

Nigel Griffiths: I meet the key SME representative organisations regularly, and this issue is not among their top three concerns. However, the Government have always recognised that late payment of debts can have serious effects on the cash flow of smaller companies, which is why we had a manifesto commitment to introduce a Late Payment Act to allow small business to:

claim interest on late payment from other business or public bodies; allow creditors to claim a fixed sum of compensation to cover debt recovery costs, should late payment happen.

The Government also established the Better Payment Practice Group whose website lists the payment record of companies.

Data Protection

Michael Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what procedures are in place (a) to check the criminal records of civil servants in her Department and agencies responsible to her Department who have access to computer databases containing confidential information on the public and (b) to ensure that there can be no improper use of computer databases containing confidential information on the public; and if she will make a statement. [194599]

Ms Hewitt: The information is as follows:

(a) The DTI has a framework of personnel security controls that are applied to civil servants who, in the course of their work, have access to computer databases containing confidential information on the public; and

(b) all access to DTI systems and databases is authenticated and audited to prevent improper use and to keep a record of the actions of legitimate users.

East Midlands Development Agency

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much the East Midlands Development Agency is spending on a radio competition to find the Greatest East Midlander of All Time; and under which of the Agency's aims and objectives the competition is being organised. [194497]

Jacqui Smith: I am advised by the East Midlands Development Agency (Emda) that they will spend £5,000 for a 4-week campaign to find the Greatest East Midlander. They will use the competition to showcase successful and famous East Midland's entrepreneurs to feed into their New Business New Life campaign, which aims to stimulate an enterprising culture in the region.

Energy Projections

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the revised updated energy projections will be published. [193825]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Headline results from the updated projections, covering CO_2 emissions, have been made available as part of our announcements on Wednesday 27 October in relation to the UK's National Allocation Plan for the EU Emissions Trading Scheme. More detailed results of the central case projections will be published in November.

EU Committees

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many times during the Greek presidency of the EU Standing Committee on the approximation of the laws of the member states relating to machinery met; when and where these meetings took place; which UK Government expert was present at each meeting; what (a) technical and (b) financial issues were raised by the UK Government expert at each meeting; what recommendations the Committee produced during that period; what actions were (i) proposed and (ii) taken by the (A) EU and (B) UK Government as a result of the Committee's recommendations; and if she will make a statement. [194887]

Mr. Alexander: The mandate of the machinery Standing Committee is contained in Article 6.2 of the Machinery Directive 98/37/EC. The provisions of this Article have not yet been put into effect, so the Committee has never met.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many times during the Greek presidency of the EU the Committee on the directives on names and labelling of textile products met; when and where these meetings took place; which UK Government expert was present at each meeting; what (a) technical and (b) financial issues were raised by the UK Government expert at each meeting; what recommendations the Committee produced during that period; what actions were (i) proposed and (ii) taken by the (A) EU and (B) UK Government as a result of the Committee's recommendations; and if she will make a statement. [194889]

Mr. Alexander: No meeting of the EU Committee on Directives on names and labelling of textile products took place during the Greek presidency.

EU Presidency (Greece)

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many times during the Greek presidency of the EU the Standing Committee for the approximation of the laws of the member states (a) relating to lifts and (b) concerning pressure equipment met; when and where each meeting took place; which UK Government expert was present at each meeting; what (i) technical and (ii) financial issues were raised by the UK Government expert at each meeting; what recommendations the Committee produced during that period; what actions were (A) proposed and (B) taken by (1) the EU and (2) the UK Government as a result of the Committee's recommendations; and if she will make a statement. [194346]

Ms Hewitt: The mandate of the lifts Standing Committee is contained in Article 6.3 of the Lifts Directive 95/16/EC. The Committee did not meet during the Greek presidency.

The mandate of the pressure equipment Standing Committee is contained in Article 7.2 of the Pressure Equipment Directive 97/23/EC. The provisions of this Article have not yet been put into effect, so the Committee has never met.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will break down the Export Credits Guarantee Department's unrecovered claims on a debtor-by-debtor basis on guarantees issued since 1991. [192385]

Mr. Alexander: As my predecessor explained in his answer of 13 January 2004, Official Report, column 696W, it is not possible to provide unrecovered claims information on a debtor by debtor basis. To do so could prejudice negotiations ECGD is having or will have about recovering debt. However, I am able to supply the information you have requested on a market basis.

Market	Unrecovered claims
Algeria	30,133,495.16
Australia	7,952,684.73
Belgium	23,352,522.61
Cote D'Ivoire	14,604,414.00

Dominica	1,355,281.31
Brazil	2,151,047.97
Canada	20,786,267.78
Colombia	1,294,028.97
Paraguay	17,430.03
Grand total	943,040,307.94

All amounts are in sterling as at 30 September 2004

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on how many occasions since May the Export Credits Guarantee Department has used its new audit powers to audit customer books. [193169]

Mr. Alexander [holding answer 25 October 2004]: None. ECGD's programme of external compliance reviews is based on a sample of cases issued in prior years. Cases issued in 2004 containing new audit powers will become eligible for selection as part of the programme of reviews.

Fireworks

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had with Scottish Ministers regarding efforts to raise the public awareness of the new laws on firework misuse. [195158]

Mr. Sutcliffe: My Department has been working closely with the Scottish Executive not only on the substance of the new Fireworks Regulations 2004—but also on issues to do with publicity. The DTI is also running it annual Fireworks Safety Awareness Campaign which covers the whole of the UK. This year there is particular emphasis on changes to the law which the Fireworks Regulations 2004 introduced.

Gas Supplies

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of when the UK will cease to be self-sufficient in gas supply. [195117]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Our most recent assessment is that the UK may be a net importer of gas from 2005.

Glass Packaging Sector

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assistance her Department is offering to the glass container industry to develop new markets for glass containers; and if she will make a statement. [194722]

Jacqui Smith: The Government continues to provide assistance to manufacturing industry, which includes the glass container industry. I was able to see at first hand one such example of this support when I opened a new green glass furnace at Rexam Glass in July 2003. The plant had received substantial Regional Selective Assistance from my Department.

For companies looking for assistance to develop additional markets, UK Trade and Investment supports UK companies, in their efforts to identify potential new markets.

A recent scoping mission by UK Trade and Investment's Giftware Sector (which includes some of the glass container industry) has identified the top 10 key markets for the sector. Further information can be obtained from the UKT&I's website www.trade.uktradeinvest.gov.uk.

Imports

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which 40 countries made the greatest value of exports to the UK in each year from 2001 to 2004. [193725]

Mr. Alexander: According to information published by HM Customs and Excise, the top 40 sources of UK imports of goods, in each year from 2001 to 2003 and for January to August 2004 are as given in the following table. Comprehensive information on imports of services, by partner country, is not available.

Manufacturing

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many UK jobs are in manufacturing; and what percentage this represents. [192569]

Mr. Alexander [holding answer 21 October 2004]: I refer the hon. Member to the ONS Report of June 2004, a copy of which has been placed in both Libraries of the House.

Passport Applications (Postal Security)

John Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what security measures are in place within the Post Office and Royal Mail to prevent the theft of passport applications and accompanying documents. [194734]

Mr. Sutcliffe: Royal Mail Group regards maintaining the integrity of the mail as one of its top priorities. The company has its own dedicated security and investigations unit. A recent further review of its procedures and practices in the letters business has resulted in the implementation of additional measures to improve security, and the recruitment, vetting and training of staff.

For passport applications Post Office Ltd. recommend customers use its Check and Send service, available at selected Post Office branches, which checks the passport application form for common errors; sends the application form to the appropriate passport office; provides the applicant with a receipt; and provides the applicant with a phone number in order to track the progress of their application.

RDAs

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which regional development agencies in England have spent money on radio advertising in the last five years for which figures are available; and how much each agency has spent. [194496]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 28 October 2004]: None of the regional development agencies have identified any radio advertising to promote the agency. Some agencies have contributed to campaigns or projects which have used radio advertising as part of their promotional activities.

Research and Development

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the budget is for the grant for research and development for each year between 2004 to 2007. [193786]

Nigel Griffiths: The baseline budget for Grant for Research and Development between 2004 and 2007 is shown in the following table.

£ million

	Baseline budget
2004–05	27
2005–06	27
2006–07	27

In 2004–05 DTI has been able to increase the expenditure on Grant for Research and Development to £36 million.

Textiles

Sir Archy Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate she has had made of the likely change in the level of textile imports in 2005. [193158]

Mr. Alexander: EU quota restrictions under the Multi-Fibre Arrangement (MFA) against WTO member countries will be removed on 1 January 2005. Given the large number of different factors involved in commercial buying decisions—such as price, quality, transport costs, proximity to market and speed of reaction to fashion changes, etc.—it is difficult to give an accurate forecast of the likely rise in imports. However a recent WTO study estimated that imports into the EU market will rise from 52.5 per cent. to 53.0 per cent. for textiles and from 48.5 per cent. to 51.0 per cent. for clothing. The higher increase for clothing imports reflects the fact that the clothing sector has more quota restrictions than the textiles sector.

Sir Archy Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the value of exports of textiles (a) including clothing and (b) excluding clothing from (i) the UK and (ii) Scotland was over the last three years in (A) cash and (B) real terms. [193184]

Mr. Alexander: Available export figures are as follows:

	Current prices[1] (£ million)			Constant prices[2] Index 2001 = 100
	Textiles and Clothing	Of which: Textiles	Clothing	Textiles	Clothing

Vision Boards

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) how many vision boards have been established in Lancashire; what area each vision board will cover; who will serve on each vision board; and who the chairperson of each board is; [193625]

(2) if she will make a statement on the role of vision boards. [193626]

Jacqui Smith: The North West Development Agency has established three vision boards in Lancashire, in Burnley, Lancaster and Preston. The aim is to promote leadership at a local level with a focus on private sector engagement. Membership details are available from the relevant local authorities.

Wind Turbines

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many 2MW wind turbines are situated in (a) the UK and (b) Wales; and how many wind turbines of all specifications are situated in the UK. [194508]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information is as follows.

(a) There are 74 x 2MW turbines in the UK

(b) There are 30 x 2MW offshore turbines in Wales (North Hoyle)

There are 1,180 wind turbines of all specifications situated in the UK.

DEFENCE

40 Commando RM

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when 40 Commando of Royal Marines is due to return to Norton Manor Camp, Taunton. [193869]

Mr. Ingram: 40 Commando (Royal Marines) is due to complete its tour of duty in Iraq in January 2004, and will then return to Norton Manor Camp, Taunton.

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many troops of 40 Commando are in Iraq. [193870]

Mr. Ingram: About 500 members of 40 Commando (Royal Marines) are currently deployed in Iraq on Operation Telic.

Afghanistan

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the monetary cost of the United Kingdom's contribution to NATO's missions in Afghanistan has been over the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement. [188067]

Mr. Ingram: The net additional costs of operations in Afghanistan in 2003–2004 were published in the Ministry of Defence's Annual Report and Accounts 2003–2004 and totalled £35.9 million. It is too early to provide a firm figure for the costs that are being incurred this financial year. We will ask the House to vote the necessary funds in Supplementary Estimates in due course.

Archive Files

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many archive files have been destroyed this year. [194545]

Mr. Caplin [holding answer 1 November 2004]: Between 1 January and 26 October 2004, some 13,556 files from departmental archives have been destroyed under the normal departmental review process.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date his Department discovered that archive files held in the basement of the old War Office building were contaminated with asbestos; on what date the committee responsible first met to discuss this; and if he will make a statement on the time which elapsed between the two events. [194546]

Mr. Caplin [holding answer 1 November 2004]: The presence of asbestos in the basement area of the Old War Office Building was confirmed in May 2003.

A decision was immediately made to safeguard the information contained on these files and during the period June to December 2003 the files were progressively packed to ensure they could be safely handled. At the same time it was possible to implement the decontamination of the affected area. Some 3,000 crates of affected files were transferred to a new location during May 2004. This work fell within the Department's Main Building Redevelopment project.

During this period, the Departmental Records Officer's (DRO's) staff were investigating options for the future handling of the potentially contaminated material. In August 2004, the DRO decided that this work should be overseen by a formal Project Board, including a member from The National Archives. This Board first met on 14 September 2004.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether it is his policy that the archive files found to be contaminated with asbestos will be rendered safe and made eligible for release in response to requests under the Freedom of Information Act 2000. [194547]

Mr. Caplin [holding answer 1 November 2004]: Yes.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of his Department's files are classified as subject to temporary retention. [194548]

Mr. Caplin [holding answer 1 November 2004]: Eight collections of records are currently the subject of temporary retention in department on administrative grounds under Lord Chancellor's Instruments.

Army Boards of Inquiry

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many army boards of inquiry into non-combat deaths have been held in each of the past five years; [190267]

(2) what the average period of time between circumstances that required the establishment of an army board of inquiry and that inquiry being set up is in the past two year; [190268]

(3) in how many instances army Boards of Inquiry have been delayed by (a) ongoing police investigations, (b) civil legal proceedings, (c) criminal legal proceedings and (d) other circumstances in the past five years. [190269]

Mr. Ingram: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Arrangements are in hand to improve the central tracking of Boards of Inquiry within the Army and to identify and bear down on the cause of delay. Since June 2004 Boards of Inquiry into all unnatural deaths and serious injury must be convened within 48 hours of the incident taking place.

Correspondence

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the oral statement by the Minister for Veterans, on 15 September 2004, Official Report, column 467WH, regarding Mrs. Crowton, when he will write to the hon. Member for New Forest, West. [192109]

Mr. Caplin: I replied to the hon. Member on 1 November.

Defamation

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether members of the armed forces seeking to bring a defamation case against national newspapers in relation to allegations connected with their official duties are obliged to first seek permission from (a) Ministers and (b) officials before proceeding. [195302]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 1 November 2004]: There is no requirement that would oblige members of the armed forces to first seek permission from Ministers or officials before bringing a defamation case against national newspapers.

Falcon Communications System

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress on the Army's Falcon tactical formation-level secure communications system. [193912]

Mr. Ingram: Competitive assessment phase contracts for Increment A of the Falcon programme were placed with BAE Systems and Marconi Selenia in January 2003. Proposals were received in March 2004 and are being evaluated. We expect to make a decision on the main investment phase around the turn of the year.

Harley Dingle Site

Mr. Roger Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when his Department started using the Harley Dingle site for (a) the training of personnel and (b) the testing of weapons; and when each activity ceased; [190226]

(2) whether the Harley Dingle site was ever used by his Department as a testing ground for (a) armour piercing munition and (b) any munition containing depleted uranium. [193875]

Mr. Caplin: The Ministry of Defence has never owned the Harley Dingle site nor have we any record of the MOD's involvement in the testing of weapons, including armour piercing munition or any munition containing depleted uranium, at the site. No direct training of military personnel has been conducted at the site, although land belonging to the site has been traversed (with permission of the owners) during the course of low level military exercises for at least 10 years.

HMCS Chicoutimi

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date HMCS Chicoutimi was handed over to the Royal Canadian Navy; and whether problems were identified on the sea trials before docking at Campbell Town on 25 September. [191618]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 15 October 2004]: HMCS Chicoutimi (ex HMS Upholder) was handed over to the Canadian Department of National Defence on 2 October 2004.

Sea trials of any vessel are intended to prove the performance of the vessel and identify any defects in systems and equipment. The trials conducted on HMCS Chicoutimi were in this respect no different from any other. At the time of the handover there were no known defects affecting ship safety.

HMS Royal Oak

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether HM Government plans to designate of HMS Royal Oak as a war grave. [194805]

Mr. Ingram: The term "war grave" is reserved for those graves on land which come under the ambit of the Commonwealth War Graves Commission. The Ministry of Defence considers the wreck of HMS Royal Oak to be a military maritime grave. The Protection of Military Remains Act (PMRA) 1986 allows protection from unauthorised interference to be afforded to wrecks that were in military service when lost. Statutory Instrument 2002 No. 1761 designated HMS Royal Oak (among others) as a controlled site within the meaning of the Act.

Iraq

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to the answer of 7 September 2004, Official Report, column 1176W, on Iraq, when the 11 October 2003 International Committee of the Red Cross working paper was passed to (a) UK service personnel and (b) officials of his Department. [189289]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 16 September 2004]: The 11 October 2003 International Committee of the Red Cross working paper was passed to MND(SE) by the Americans in October 2003. Nothing in the report merited it being passed to officials in the UK, and we have no record of this being done at the time. A copy of the report was sent to officials in the UK in August 2004.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the Public Accounts Committee's report on the quality and supply of kit for British forces in Iraq. [191662]

Mr. Ingram: The formal response to the Public Accounts Committee report on Operation Telic is due to be published on 11 November 2004. This response will address the Committee's recommendations and conclusions on the quality and supply of equipment for British forces in Iraq.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which category of reservists are being called up to serve in Iraq; what the criteria are for calling up particular reservists; how long they will be serving in Iraq; whether all the reservists being called up have the same status; and whether, after the completion of their Iraq tour, they are eligible to do another tour of Iraq on their return. [193955]

Mr. Caplin [holding answer 26 October 2004]: Members of the Volunteer Reserve, Regular Reserve and Sponsored Reserve have and continue to be mobilised to support operations in Iraq. A number of trades, the majority from the Army, are required. All reservists must meet the required medical standards and be suitably trained for the role they are to perform before they are accepted into full time service. Generally a tour in theatre will last seven months (some nine months in total if pre-deployment training and post operational leave is included), although some specialist reservists may serve a shorter term. Once mobilised they remain reservists, but have the same status and are treated exactly the same way as their regular counterparts. The amount of time a reservist can be mobilised is limited by statute. Therefore, whether an individual reservist may serve another tour in Iraq (or on any other operation) will be dependent on the length of their initial deployment.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) British Army soldiers and (b) Royal Air Force airmen are involved in the Explosive Ordnance Disposal Unit in Iraq. [194167]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 1 November 2004]: As at 24 October there were 70 members of the UK armed forces, 57 soldiers and 13 airmen, who make up the Explosive Ordnance Disposal units deployed on Operation Telic.

Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the length of time it will take UK forces moving into the American sector of Iraq to become communication-compatible with US forces. [194386]

Mr. Ingram: Throughout their deployment to the North Babil province the Black Watch battlegroup will be able to communicate with US forces in the area.

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has received from (a) his United States counterpart and (b) the International Atomic Energy Agency on the disappearance in Iraq of 380 tons of special high explosives; and what threat assessment he has made of the danger posed to British forces in Iraq from this material, were it to be obtained by hostile forces. [194912]

Mr. Hoon: I was first informed of the disappearance of these high explosives on 25 October 2004, when a copy of a letter written by the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency was passed from the UN Secretary General to the President of the Security Council.

In terms of the threat to British forces, insurgents have acquired explosives from a number of sources. Given the amount of explosives that were already in Iraq, and the fact that the missing explosives seem to have been removed over a year ago, our overall threat assessment has not changed.

Medical Downgrading

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, how many (a) officers and (b) other ranks in each service were medically downgraded as unfit for front line duties at April 1 in each of the last five years; in how many cases (i) the downgrading was attributable to service and (ii) the injuries were (A) temporary and (B) permanent; and if he will make a statement. [183346]

Mr. Caplin [pursuant to the reply, 19 October 2004, Official Report, c. 593W]: I regret that part of the table contained some inaccuracies. The table details the revised footnote. Information on whether medical downgradings have been attributable to Service cannot be provided due to disproportionate cost.

Medical Staff

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the target complement of medical staff is at Catterick Barracks; how many of each type of medical staff are employed; and what the turnover of medical staff has been in the past five years. [183799]

Mr. Caplin: The table details the complement of staff at the resident units at Catterick Garrison as at 13 October 2004.

Meteor Jets

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence where the Meteor jets will be located when Llanbedr airfield is closed. [194619]

Mr. Caplin: The airworthy Meteor jet is owned by QinetiQ, the company operating activities at the Llanbedr site on behalf of the MoD. The aircraft has been relocated to Boscombe Down in anticipation of closure of the airfield at Llanbedr. At present its future is uncertain. The remaining Meteor, which is not airworthy, is owned by the MoD. A number of options for its disposal are being considered, including the possibility of placing it with an aviation related charity.

Rapid Deployment

Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the infantry regiments available at short notice for deployment. [194385]

Mr. Ingram: I have assumed that the hon. Member is referring to infantry battalions currently available for short notice deployments. These are: 2nd Battalion The Princess of Wales's Royal Regiment; the 1st Battalion, The Queens Lancashire Regiment; 1st Battalion the Royal Gurkha Rifles; and the 2nd Battalion The Parachute Regiment.

This will shortly change to 2nd Battalion The Princess of Wales's Royal Regiment; 1st Battalion the Royal Highland Fusiliers; 1st Battalion the Royal Gurkha Rifles, and the 2nd Battalion The Parachute Regiment.

Royal Military Police

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many investigations have been undertaken by the Royal Military Police Special Investigations Branch using the Home Office Large Major Enquiry System in each year since its acquisition; how many persons were prosecuted as a result of each investigation; and how many prosecutions resulted in convictions. [183342]

Mr. Caplin: The Home Office Large Major Enquiry System (HOLMES) has been used to assist in four investigations since its acquisition: one in 2000 and three in 2001. In one case five individuals were prosecuted but none was convicted. In another case one individual was successfully prosecuted.

Two further investigations are currently being pursued jointly between the SIB and the Ministry of Defence Police Headquarters in Wethersfield.

Service Non-public Funds

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many service non-public funds there are; and how much they are worth; [194464]

(2) what the estimated compliance cost to (a) service non-public funds and (b) the Department would be of their registration as charities under the draft Charities Bill. [194465]

Mr. Caplin: This information requested will take some time to collate. I will therefore write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Submarines

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many decommissioned submarines are (a) laid up and (b) being refurbished following their sale; [194394]

(2) whether decommissioned submarines are cannibalised for spare parts; and if he will make a statement. [194392]

Mr. Ingram: The only decommissioned submarines are nuclear powered and it is not the Department's policy to offer these up for sale. Any re-usable equipment is removed and where appropriate, is recycled for use on in-service submarines. The used fuel is removed from the Reactor Pressure Vessel for long-term storage at BNFL Sellafield, and the submarine containing the reactor compartment, where any remaining radioactive material remains, is stored safely afloat. There are currently eleven decommissioned and defuelled submarines stored in this way.

Temporary Staff

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many agency temporary staff have been working for his Department in each of the last five years, excluding those working for agencies for which no data is kept centrally. [195245]

Mr. Caplin [holding answer 1 November 2004]: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

CABINET OFFICE

Public Engagements

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster pursuant to the answer of 25 October 2004, Official Report, column 1053W, on engagements, (1) what public engagements he fulfilled in the week beginning 18 October, in addition to the general ministerial responsibilities referred to in his answer to the hon. and learned Member for Harborough (Mr. Garnier) of 20 October 2004, Official Report, column 720W; [195674]

(2) if he will list his public engagements carried out in the week from 25 October. [195673]

Mr. Milburn: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I provided to the hon. and learned Member for Harborough (Mr. Garnier) on 20 October 2004, Official Report, column 720W. In addition, and from time to time, I meet individuals and organisations outside Government, including right hon. and hon. Members of Parliament, to discuss Government-related business.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Argentina

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what talks he had with his Argentine counterpart while at the United Nations in September; what was discussed; and what the result was. [195152]

Mr. Straw: I had a short meeting with Argentine Foreign Minister Bielsa during the United Nations General Assembly on 22 September. We discussed a variety of issues. I congratulated Foreign Minister Bielsa on Argentina's election to the UN Security Council. We agreed that the UK and Argentina should work together for the next two years on Security Council issues. We also discussed Falkland Island issues.

Cuba

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what research his Department has commissioned regarding human rights in Cuba; and what statistical information his Department has compiled regarding human rights violations. [186776]

Mr. Rammell: The UK closely monitors the human rights situation in Cuba through our Embassy in Havana. The Embassy has frequent contact with local human rights groups and with the peaceful opposition across Cuba. They keep track on human rights trends and political prisoners, and regularly report back to London. We also maintain dialogue with international NGOs who study Cuba.

The EU, through the local Presidency in Havana, also monitors the human rights situation and submits comprehensive reports to all member states. The local Presidency regularly seeks opportunities to raise human rights and individual cases of concern with the Cuban authorities.

UK policy toward Cuba is governed by the EU Common Position, which has respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms enshrined as its key principle. The Common Position is reviewed annually but, in view of the lack of progress, has stood unchanged since its adoption in 1996. The last review was on 15 June 2004.

Following a major crackdown on opposition in Cuba in March 2003 and the imprisonment of a further 75 peaceful opposition members, EU member states agreed unanimously to additional measures that reflected our human rights concerns. The Cuban response was to reject all EU development aid through official channels and to 'freeze' contact with EU Embassies in Havana. Six of the 75 prisoners have since been released, and we shall continue to evaluate the situation. We remain committed to dialogue and actively seek ways to engage in all areas; recent cooperation includes law enforcement, cultural links and development work.

Diego Garcia

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his answer of 21 June, Official Report, column. 1221W, on which date the US Administration last gave an assurance that no prisoners are held or transported through Diego Garcia; whether this was a (a) written and (b) verbal assurance; and if he will make a statement. [187613]

Mr. Rammell: The US authorities have repeatedly given us verbal assurances, most recently in May 2004, that no prisoners have at any time passed in transit through Diego Garcia or its territorial waters or have disembarked there. The British Representative on Diego Garcia has confirmed this to be the case.

G8 Summit

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list (a) businesses throughout Scotland and (b) non-governmental agencies with whom the Government are working in advance of the G8 summit. [195119]

Mr. Alexander: We are in touch with several hotels and transport operators in central Scotland, where delegates and media will stay. In due course we shall be in touch with other Scottish businesses about other requirements for the summit.

A variety of Government Departments with an interest in the summit are working with a large range of non-governmental organizations in advance of the summit. Not all of these contacts are just related to the G8, but they include: the 'Make Poverty History' coalition, the BOND British Overseas NGOs for Development network, and the British Overseas Aid Group.

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements are in place to ensure that businesses based in Perth and Kinross benefit from the holding of the G8 Summit in Gleneagles. [195121]

Mr. Alexander: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office will be awarding some contracts for the supply of services at the Summit. These will be awarded on a competitive basis and businesses in Perth and Kinross will be able to bid. There will also be sponsorship opportunities available, and the Scottish Executive is working with Perth and Kinross Council to identify these for local companies. In the short term, the other main commercial opportunities are likely to lie with spending by attendees (4,000 or more delegates and media will use hotels, restaurants and transport) and suppliers to the main contractors. Longer term economic benefits to Perth and Kinross are expected to arise from the increased international profile of the area and of Scotland in general.

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what related events the Government intend to hold (a) at and (b) in advance of the G8 Summit; and where. [195122]

Mr. Alexander: The G8 Summit is the principal event of the presidency. We plan other ministerial meetings too, including separate Foreign and Finance Ministers events in London.

In addition, there will be a programme of consultation events with civil society. These meetings will take place both in G8 capitals (including London) and in other parts of the UK. A G8-related climate change science conference will take place in Exeter.

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans the Government have to compensate businesses and individuals in Perth and Kinross who suffer loss as a direct result of the holding of the G8 Summit in Gleneagles. [195123]

Mr. Alexander: The decision to hold the G8 Summit in Scotland has been warmly welcomed by the Scottish Executive. The Summit will be an excellent opportunity for the promotion of Scotland as a world-class destination for business, leisure and study. And it is expected to bring significant benefits to Scotland and in particular the areas close to the Summit, in the lead up to, during and in the long-term as a result of greater media exposure and visitors.

The UK Government, working alongside the Scottish Executive, are committed to ensuring that the Summit at Gleneagles and the surrounding area is safe and secure. The policing of the event, as a devolved responsibility, is the responsibility of the Scottish Executive.

Some people living in the vicinity of the Gleneagles Hotel have expressed some concerns over possible loss as a result of the Summit. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office and Scottish Executive are jointly exploring the issues. We expect the position to be clarified well before the Summit in July 2005.

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment has been made of the environmental impact of the 2005 G8 Summit on Perth and Kinross. [195258]

Mr. Alexander: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has announced that the two priorities for the UK's G8 presidency in 2005 will be Africa and Climate Change. He has said that Climate Change represents the world's greatest environmental challenge.

We are taking environmental impacts into account during our planning for the Gleneagles Summit and considering how to offset carbon that is unavoidably generated by it.

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance is being provided by the Scottish Executive to his Department in connection with the (a) identification and (b) facilitation of access to local businesses and organisations for the sourcing of local products and services (i) in preparation for and (ii) during the G8 Summit in Gleneagles. [195259]

Mr. Alexander: We are working closely with the Scottish Executive and its Agencies on procurement for the G8 Summit. The Executive is helping us identify Scottish suppliers and is helping to ensure that Scottish companies are aware of the procurement opportunities.

Guantanamo Bay

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last discussed British prisoners at Guantanamo Bay with his US counterpart; and what was discussed. [194897]

Mr. Mullin: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has frequent contact with his US counterpart on a wide range of issues, including Guantanamo Bay.

The Government's position has been that the British detainees should either be tried fairly in accordance with international standards or they should be returned to the UK. In the absence of the prospect of a fair trial in accordance with international standards, we requested that the nine British detainees be returned to the UK. Five returned in March. Following a visit by officials to Washington in May, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister repeated our request that the remaining four detainees be returned to the UK. We continue to work to resolve their situation.

We are also continuing to pursue actively with the US authorities our outstanding welfare concerns.

International Atomic Energy Agency

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many UK nationals are working with the International Atomic Energy Agency; where they are posted; and how many have recently worked in Iran. [195149]

Mr. Straw: Staff are employed at the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) on an individual and not a national basis. The Government cannot, therefore, maintain its own records of UK nationals employed at the IAEA.

According to the IAEA Secretariat, as of 29 October 2004, 73 UK Nationals were employed in professional positions at the IAEA. The overwhelming majority of these were employed at the Agency's Headquarters in Vienna; four were posted at the Agency's laboratory in Seibersdorf, Austria and one at the IAEA Marine Environment Laboratory in Monaco.

IAEA staff travel on short term missions for a variety of purposes related to the IAEA's functions. It is not the practice of the IAEA to release information on who travels on such missions.

Mauritius/Chagos Islands

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what date the European Convention on Human Rights was applied to Mauritius and the Chagos Islands; and if he will make a statement. [187610]

Mr. Rammell: The European Convention on Human Rights was extended to Mauritius, together with a number of other territories for whose international relations the United Kingdom Government was then responsible, on 23 October 1953. It ceased to apply to Mauritius when that country became independent on 12 March 1968. It has not been extended to the British Indian Ocean Territory, which has no settled population.

Russian Espionage

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what recent discussions he has held with the Russian Government on spying in the UK by Russians; [194796]

(2) what recent representations he has made to the Russian Government about spying in the UK by Russians. [194797]

Mr. Straw: We have a regular dialogue with the Russian Government on a number of operational intelligence issues. However, it is the Government's well-established practice under exemptions l(a) and l(b) of Part 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information not to comment on the detail of bilateral exchanges on security and intelligence matters, or on allegations of espionage activity.

Somalia

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of progress in the peace building framework and role of the United Nations in Somalia. [193916]

Mr. Mullin: The UN Secretary General, like the European Union, has welcomed the election of Abdullahi Yusuf as the transitional President of Somalia. We regard this as an important step towards the restoration of peace and stability in Somalia and look forward to the formation of a transitional federal Government in the near future.

The UN is already active in Somalia and is planning to expand its role once there is a Government. I met Abdullahi Yusuf in Nairobi on 20 October.

Sudan

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment his Department has made of the reported bombing in the Allaiet area in eastern Darfur; and if he will make a statement. [194825]

Mr. Mullin: We have received reports that on 22 October the Sudan Liberation Movement tried unsuccessfully to retake Allaeit, the commercial capital of Berti Province, from the Government of Sudan's police force. We will continue to press the Government of Sudan and the rebel groups to stop violating the N'Djamena Ceasefire Agreement of 8 April, to which they are all signatories.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the terms of the ceasefire are in Darfur; when these terms were (a) proposed and (b) agreed to; by whom; what assessment his Department has made of the Sudanese Government's compliance with the ceasefire terms; and if he will make a statement. [194826]

Mr. Mullin: The terms of the ceasefire are detailed in the N'Djamena Ceasefire Agreement signed by the Government of Sudan, Sudan Liberation Movement and Justice and Equality Movement on 8 April. I have placed a copy in the Library of the House. Officials from the British Embassies in Khartoum and Addis Ababa are in regular contact with the African Union (AU) Mission which is responsible for monitoring the ceasefire. The AU have reported ceasefire violations on all sides, about which we remain extremely concerned. We are continuing to press all sides to respect the ceasefire.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions (a) he, (b) members of his Department, (c) other Members of the UK Government and (d) UK representatives in Rwanda have had with their (i) EU and (ii) African Union counterparts concerning the logistical assistance to be given to African Union ceasefire monitors and soldiers in their deployment to Darfur; and if he will make a statement. [194828]

Mr. Mullin: We are in regular contact with our EU and African Union (AU) partners concerning logistical assistance for the expanded AU mission. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has raised this with President Obasanjo, Chairman of the AU. Both my right hon. Friends the Foreign Secretary and the Secretary of State for International Development have raised this with their EU counterparts. I discussed the issue with the AU Commission Chair, Alpha Oumar Konare, on 26 October. Officials from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Department for International Development in London, Brussels, Abuja, Khartoum, Kigali and Addis Ababa are also in regular contact with their opposite numbers. As the Prime Minister announced in Addis Ababa on 7 October, the UK will provide £12 million to support the expanded mission.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment his Department has made of the possible inclusion of security issues in the humanitarian protocol being negotiated by the Government of Sudan and rebel groups from Darfur; and if he will make a statement. [194829]

Mr. Mullin: We have urged the Government of Sudan and the Sudan Liberation Movement to sign and implement immediately the Abuja Humanitarian Protocol. In accordance with the agenda set by the African Union, security issues are being discussed separately. We have pressed all parties to engage fully at the highest level and to conclude a security agreement as soon as possible. A UK observer is currently at the peace talks in Abuja.

Uganda

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance the Government are providing to the Ugandan authorities in their efforts to combat the Lord's Resistance Army. [195150]

Mr. Straw: We are working actively with the Ugandan authorities to end the crisis in northern Uganda. We are the leading cash donor to the humanitarian operation. We are seeking to enhance the effectiveness of the Ugandan armed forces through our financing of a comprehensive defence review. And, since we doubt that the Lords Resistance Army threat can be overcome by purely military means, we have also supported Ugandan efforts to promote dialogue and reconciliation to help secure a comprehensive and sustainable end to this conflict.

Women's Rights (Africa)

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many countries in Africa have adopted the Protocol on the Rights of Women; and whether the protocol will by addressed by the Africa Commission. [195148]

Mr. Straw: 31 countries in Africa have signed, and four ratified, the Protocol on the Rights of Women in Africa. This is a Protocol to the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights.

The Commission for Africa has identified gender and the rights of women and girls as an important issue for its work across a broad range of themes. The Commission is actively considering how Africa and the international community working together can best address these issues to maximum effect.

CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

Post Mortems

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what the eligibility for compensation is of individuals in the Province whose deceased relatives underwent a coroner's post mortem without appropriate consent. [194640]

Mr. Leslie: The Coroner does not require the consent of the family members to direct that a pathologist should carry out a post-mortem to assist him in the determination of the cause of death. His authority is found in Section 28 of the Coroners Act (Northern Ireland) 1959 therefore the issue of compensation does not arise.

Civil Servants (Criminal Records)

Michael Fabricant: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what procedures are in place (a) to check the criminal records of civil servants in the Department and agencies responsible to the Department who have access to computer databases containing confidential information on the public and (b) to ensure that there can be no improper use of computer databases containing confidential information on the public; and if he will make a statement. [194607]

Mr. Lammy: The majority of computer databases held by my Department and the agencies responsible to my Department do not contain confidential information on the public. Names, addresses and in some cases dates of birth may be held, but this information is personal, not necessarily confidential. All staff working for my Department and its agencies have a character check carried out prior to commencing employment. This includes completion of a criminal records declaration. This does not involve checks with either the Criminal Records Bureau or the Police National Computer, as these checks are only carried out for staff who work in posts where individuals deal with children or vulnerable adults or where staff require national security clearance. All of the databases held by my Department and its agencies have access restricted to those who work with or need access to the information.

The Public Guardianship Office (PGO) hold confidential information on computer database. As a result, these databases have very restricted access and password and user accounts are only issued to staff who have undergone the character check upon appointment (as is standard) and provided proof of identity in the presence of their line manager. Further to this, the systems have comprehensive auditing facilities and all changes to personal data are added to an audit trail to which only the system administrator has access.

The Official Solicitor and Public Trustee Office (OSPT) hold confidential information on internal systems. As with all staff in my Department and its agencies, OSPT staff must undertake a character check prior to commencing employment. Thereafter, this information can only be viewed over the computer network in the building, as there is no remote access. There are differing levels of access control incorporated to ensure that staff can only view information relevant to their area of work.

More generally, existing staff are under an obligation to report any change of circumstances, including any criminal convictions to their line manager, who in turn should contact the Human Resources Directorate for advice and guidance. There are specific disciplinary procedures in place to deal with any misconduct that may impact on the reputation of my Department or the civil service as a whole and these are in accordance with the Civil Service Management Code.

In addition to this, all staff have been recently informed of my Department's procedures on IT misuse in an IT awareness guide. On logging on to systems, staff are required to confirm they have read and understood the Department's policy on misuse.

Court of Protection

Paul Holmes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what checks are undertaken by the Court of Protection on an individual who has applied to be a receiver. [195233]

Mr. Leslie: All applicants are required to complete a receiver's declaration. The declaration is designed to make the applicant aware of the duties they will be undertaking as receiver, and is also used by the Court of Protection and Public Guardianship Office to assess the applicant's suitability to act as receiver. The declaration requires the applicant to confirm he has no outstanding judgment debts and is not an undischarged bankrupt.

It is open to the Court to request that a check on the applicant should be made with the Criminal Records Bureau.

Paul Holmes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what checks are undertaken by the Court of Protection to ascertain whether the person for whom there is an application for receivership lacks the capacity to manage his or her financial affairs. [195234]

Mr. Leslie: All applications for receivership must be accompanied by a medical certificate, completed by a doctor, as the jurisdiction of the Court of Protection is established by such evidence. The medical certificate should specify the mental incapacity suffered and the reasons why the person is unable to manage his or her financial affairs.

Data Protection

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what estimate he has made of the annual cost of compliance with the Data Protection Act 1998 to local authorities. [194745]

Mr. Leslie: The Regulatory Impact Assessment prepared at the time of the introduction of the Data Protection Bill (now the Data Protection Act 1998) estimated the compliance costs to local authorities (including schools) at a non-recurring cost of £104 million, with on-going cost of £29 million per year.

Disclosure of Convictions

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs in how many cases since 1991 judges have disclosed to juries the conviction for similar offences of a defendant. [195291]

Mr. Leslie: The information requested is not collected centrally and can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Franchise (Non-UK Nationals)

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on allowing non-UK nationals to vote in (a) general elections and (b) referendums. [195260]

Mr. Leslie: The Representation of the People Act 1983 provides that, in addition to British citizens, qualifying Commonwealth citizens and citizens of the Republic of Ireland are entitled to vote in UK parliamentary elections. The position of Commonwealth and Irish citizens in the United Kingdom reflects the traditionally close ties that exist between our countries, and other non-UK nationals are not entitled to vote in UK parliamentary elections. The franchise for referendums is determined on an individual basis and is set out explicitly in the relevant dedicated enabling legislation.

Freedom of Information

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what estimate he has made of the annual cost to local authorities of Freedom of Information Act 2000 (a) compliance and (b) information requests. [194746]

Mr. Leslie: The cost of compliance will vary from authority to authority according to the efficiency of their procedures and the effectiveness of their records and information management. The volume and complexity of FOI requests will vary according to the functions of the authorities and the nature of their current business. The more contentious an authority's business the greater the volume of the requests it receives is likely to be.

The Department is working with the LGA to estimate the additional overall cost for local authorities. For local government, we will reimburse councils for any additional costs, in 2005–06 and beyond, falling on them as a result of the FOI Act.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Belfast Metropolitan Area Plan

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the original target date was for completion of the Belfast Metropolitan Area Plan; if he will list subsequent target dates; what the current target completion date is; and if he will make a statement on the principal reasons for delays. [192546]

Angela Smith: When work commenced in early 2001, the original target date for completion to Draft stage was December 2002. As work progressed, the target date was revised on a number of occasions between 2003 and March 2004. The principal reasons for these revisions relate to the scale of the project, which has meant that each stage has taken longer than normally anticipated. I gave the current late autumn 2004 target date in May of this year and this is being adhered to.

The publication date for the Plan is presently being finalised and will be announced within the next few weeks for a date in late November 2004.

Cattle (Over 30 months)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate he has made of the risk to human health of allowing cattle aged over 30 months to re-enter the food chain in Northern Ireland. [193918]

Angela Smith: In May this year the Food Standards Agency revised its estimates of additional vCJD cases which might arise over the next five years if the over-30-month rule is replaced with BSE-testing. The figures which they arrived at suggest for Great Britain, a best estimate of the number of vCJD cases that would result directly from foodborne exposure during 2004–09 is 0.5, with a realistic worst case of 2.5 vCJD cases. Results for Northern Ireland were approximately of the order of one-tenth of those for Great Britain. The Food Standards Agency estimates and subsequent advice are currently being considered by Ministers.

Child Poverty

David Burnside: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what targets are in place for the progressive reduction of child poverty in Northern Ireland. [190425]

Mr. Spellar: In The draft Priorities and Budget 2005–08 for Northern Ireland, which was launched by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (Mr. Pearson) on 12 October 2004, the Government have committed to reducing child poverty in Northern Ireland.

Supplementary targets are currently being consulted on as part of the development of an anti-poverty strategy for Northern Ireland. These are outlined in "Towards An Anti-Poverty Strategy, New TSN—The Way Forward, a Consultation Document".

Child Support Agency

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the average length of time is for the Child Support Agency in Northern Ireland to process a case. [194612]

Mr. Spellar: The average length of time taken for the Northern Ireland Child Support Agency to process applications under the new scheme to assessment stage is 15 weeks. The average time to reach collection stage is 22 weeks. The figure of 22 weeks is inflated by the number of cases that cannot be progressed due to system defects.

Civic Forum

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much has been spent on the Civic Forum in the last 12 months. [187807]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Civic Forum ceased to operate on suspension of the NI Assembly in October 2002. Since then, some expenditure has arisen in maintaining accommodation for the Civic Forum. In addition, there was budgetary provision for Civic Forum staff who were redeployed on other duties but who, it was anticipated, would return to Civic Forum duties immediately on restoration. Those costs amounted to some £97,000 in the last 12 months (1 September 2003 to 31 August 2004).

Civil Service

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many working hours have been lost as a result of the recent strike action in the Northern Ireland Civil Service. [193599]

Mr. Pearson: During the period of strike action from 11 December 2003 to 14 September 2004 inclusive, it is estimated that approximately, 409,378 working hours were lost by the 11 Departments of the Northern Ireland Administration.

Council of Ministers

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will make a Written Ministerial Statement outlining the key points on the agenda for each of the Council of Ministers' meetings at which his Department is represented in advance of each meeting; [188198]

(2) if he will make a Written Ministerial Statement outlining for each meeting of the Council of Ministers at which his Department is represented as soon as is practicable following that meeting (a) the key items of discussion, (b) the positions of the Government on those items, (c) the key positions taken by other member states that Ministers consider should be noted by hon. Members and (d) any preliminary discussion on the timing and the agenda of the following meeting. [188199]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on 13 September 2004, Official Report, column 1451W.

Delayed Discharge

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the average duration of delayed discharge was at each hospital in the Province in each of the last five years. [192875]

Angela Smith: Figures for the average duration of delayed discharge for 2003–04 are detailed according to hospital in the following table. Figures for years previous to 2003–04 are not available. Analysis of these data would require a manual exercise and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Hospital	Average duration of delayed discharge 2003–04
Belfast City hospital	31
Musgrave Park hospital	39
Forster Green	47
Ards hospital	22

Northern Ireland total	37

Notes:

Duration of delayed discharge is measured as the number of bed days lost, and is recorded in respect of episodes of delay, which occurred throughout the year.

Delayed discharges are recorded as a snapshot of the position at the end of each month. Episodes of delay are recorded only for those patients who were delayed at the last day of any month in the year.

Please note that the 2003–04 figures are provisional.

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many bed days were lost as a result of delayed discharges at each hospital in the Province in each of the last five years. [192876]

Angela Smith: The number of bed days lost due to delayed discharges for the year 2003–04 is as follows. Corresponding data for previous years is not available, as analysis of these data would require a manual exercise and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Hospital	Number of bed days lost 2003–04
Belfast City hospital	9,860
Musgrave Park hospital	3,734

Tyrone County	304
Northern Ireland total	100,981

Notes:

The number of bed days lost is recorded in respect of episodes of delay which occurred throughout the year.

Delayed discharges are recorded as a snapshot of the position at the end of each month. Episodes of delay are recorded only for those patients who were delayed at the last day of any month in the year.

Please note that the 2003–04 figures are provisional.

Departmental Accountancy Practice

Mr. Bacon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland who the finance director of the office is; what accountancy qualifications the director holds; and on how many occasions there has been a qualified opinion on (i) the resource accounts and (ii) other accounts of the office in each of the last five years. [183422]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The information is as follows.

Part (1)

Director of resources (equivalent of finance director) for the Northern Ireland Office is Paul Priestly. He does not hold an accounting qualification, but the head of finance who works to the director of resources is a fellow member of the Chartered Institute of Management Accountants.

Part (2)

There has been a qualified opinion on the resource accounts on two occasions (2000–01 and 2001–02) in the past five years.

There has been no qualified opinion on other accounts of the department during the same period.

Departmental Spending

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much his Department has spent on (a) hospitality and (b) taxi costs in (i) 1996–97 and (ii) the lastest year for which figures are available. [188766]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Northern Ireland Office (including its agencies but excluding NDPBs as we do not have a breakdown of their costs) has spent the following on:

(a) hospitality
(i)1996–97	269,613
(ii)2003–04	319,741

(b) taxis
(i) 1996–97[1]	—
(ii)2003–04	19,213

[1] The amount is not available as at that time there was not a specific code for taxi expenditure.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much his Department has spent on (a) headhunters and recruitment consultants and (b) management consultants in (i) 1996–97 and (ii) the latest year for which figures are available. [188770]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Northern Ireland Office (including its agencies but excluding NDPBs as we do not have a breakdown of their costs) has spent the following on:

(a) headhunters and recruitment consultants
(i) 1996–97	nil
(ii) 2003–04	4,944

(b) management consultants
(i) 1996–97	180,968
(ii) 2003–04	238,802

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much has been spent by his Department on (a) advertising and (b) public relations consultants in (i) 1996–97 and (ii) the latest year for which figures are available. [188771]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Northern Ireland Office (including its agencies but excluding NDPBs as I do not have a breakdown of their costs) has spent the following on:

(a) advertising
(i) 1996–97	480,160
(ii) 2003–04	558,797

(b) public relations consultants
(i) 1996–97	3,995
(ii) 2003–04	136,260

Disposable Nappies

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate he has made of the number of disposable nappies used in the Province in the last year for which figures are available; and what the resultant cost of disposal was. [193704]

Angela Smith: There are no figures collected relating specifically to the use of disposable nappies annually in Northern Ireland. However, the Northern Ireland Household Waste Characterisation Study (2000) by NI2000 stated that disposable nappies made around 4 per cent. of the waste of the average Northern Ireland household. In 2003, a total of 901,136 tonnes of household waste was produced in Northern Ireland which, applying the 4 per cent. factor, implies a total of some 36,000 tonnes of disposable nappy waste. At 200 grammes per disposable nappy, this amounts to approximately 180 million such nappies per year.

The three sub-regional Waste Management Groups are due to submit their Annual Performance Reports for 2003, which will include costs of waste disposal per district council, by the end of November. Based on the composition of the waste stream, it will be possible to estimate a figure for the costs associated with nappy disposal.

Copies of the documents referred to will be placed in the Library, and I will write to the hon. Lady.

Equality Schemes

Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will estimate the number of pages in each equality scheme required under section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998. [183678]

Mr. Spellar: An equality scheme is a public statement of a public authority's commitment to fulfilling their statutory duties and sets out how they intend to fulfil these duties. The Equality Commission for Northern Ireland's "Guide to the Statutory Duties" lays out the key elements, as a minimum, which must be included in the equality scheme. Public authority's can, if they so wish, include additional information over and above this.

The number of pages in equality schemes varies, depending on the nature of the public authority's business, the detail included (over and above the minimum required by Equality Commission for Northern Ireland), the physical layout of the document and the language used.

The average number of pages contained in the equality schemes of the 11 Departments of the Northern Ireland Administration and the Northern Ireland Office is approximately 75 pages (including annexes).

Fixed Penalty Notices

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether (a) English, (b) Scottish, (c) Irish and (d) Welsh driving licence holders can pay fixed penalty notices for traffic offences committed in Northern Ireland without having to be present in court. [192531]

Angela Smith: The Department of the Environment has introduced legislation for the mutual recognition of driving disqualifications and endorsable road traffic offences between Northern Ireland and Great Britain. The Road Traffic (Driving Disqualifications) (Northern Ireland) Order 2003, which came into operation on 11 October 2004, allows the holder of a Great Britain driving licence to pay a fixed penalty notice for a traffic offence without having to be present in court. The holder of a Republic of Ireland driving licence cannot avail of the fixed penalty procedure and offences must be processed through the court system.

Fuel Costs

Mr. Gregory Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of (a) the availability of cheaper fuel to people living close to the border with the Irish Republic and (b) the impact of the availability of such fuel on (i) deprivation levels and (ii) economic regeneration in border areas of Northern Ireland. [193640]

Mr. Spellar: No assessment has been made of this situation.

GP Prescribing

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what the cost was in 2003 of the prescribing of mediboxes by each general practitioner surgery in the Province; [193759]

(2) what the cost was in 2003–04 of prescribing mediboxes on a weekly basis, broken down by general practitioner surgery in the Province. [194985]

Angela Smith: The information requested is not available. Mediboxes are not available on health service prescription but can, however, be privately prescribed, purchased, or provided in a variety of other ways.

Hazardous Waste

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what definition he uses of (a) special waste and (b) hazardous waste. [193723]

Angela Smith: Special Waste is defined under the Special Waste Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1998.

Hazardous waste is defined under the Landfill Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2003 and the Pollution Prevention and Control Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2003 as "any waste as defined in Article 1(4) of Council Directive 91/689/EEC (the Hazardous Waste Directive)".

The Department intends to subsume the Special Waste Regulations into new Hazardous Waste Regulations which, together with a new List of Wastes Regulations, will have the effect of implementing the definition set out in the Hazardous Waste Directive. Once these Regulations are in force the term "special waste" will no longer be used.

Health Service Data (Access)

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he is taking to increase access of patients and their next of kin to information within the Province's health service; and if he will make a statement. [194715]

Angela Smith: The Department and all health and social services bodies, including boards, trusts, agencies and councils, are preparing for the implementation of the Freedom of Information Act 2000, which comes fully into force from 1 January 2005. The Act covers information held by a public authority which includes those bodies listed above and information relating to the provision of services provided by general practitioners, dentists, opticians, optometrists and pharmacists. The Act gives everyone a general right of access to information held by a public authority. The Act also requires a response to a request for information, subject to exemptions set out in the Act, to be provided normally within 20 working days of the receipt of the request.

High Hedges

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when his Department's consultation on nuisance high hedges in Northern Ireland commenced; when it is expected to be completed; which parties have been consulted; what steps he has taken to publicise this consultation; and if he will make a statement. [191834]

Angela Smith: The consultation paper on nuisance high hedges in Northern Ireland has not yet issued. It was my intention that this consultation paper should issue in the autumn 2004. However, in light of workload pressures in the Planning Service and the need to focus resources on managing our unprecedented volume of planning applications, I have agreed that the consultation paper can be rescheduled and expect it to issue in September 2005.

Lignite Mining

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on his policy on lignite mining. [193601]

Mr. Spellar: Government policy generally in relation to lignite is reflective of the fact that the extensive reserves are of strategic significance to Northern Ireland. A considerable amount of data has been compiled as a result of exploration activity over the past two decades and this has led the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to suspend the issue of any further prospecting licences for lignite in the Ballymoney area. The position will be reviewed in three years.

In the event of a company lodging an application for a mining licence or lease, it will continue to be necessary for that company to obtain planning and other statutory approvals, dependant on the nature of the operation, before a licence or lease would be granted. Planning Policy in relation to lignite mining seeks to balance the economic benefits with environmental effects. Applications would therefore be required to be accompanied by an Environmental Statement which details the likely significant effects of the proposal and mitigation measures.

Memorial Fund

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which groups and individuals have received grants from the Northern Ireland Memorial Fund through its multiple programmes; and what amounts were received in each case. [193696]

Angela Smith: The Northern Ireland Memorial Fund (NIMF), an independent charity, was established in 1998 in response to a recommendation in Sir Kenneth Bloomfield's Report "We Will Remember Them". Its aim is to provide practical help and support to victims and survivors of the Northern Ireland troubles.

Since then Government has allocated over £7 million in funding to the NIMF which, to date has paid almost £6 million in grants to approximately 7,000 applicants through eight schemes. The breakdown of expenditure by scheme is as follows:

Amputee Assessment Scheme	156,000
Back to School Scheme	411,000
Chronic Pain Management Scheme	190,000
Discretionary Hardship Scheme	71,000
Education and Training Scheme	517,000
Short Break Scheme	1,353,000
Small Grant Scheme	2,983,000
Wheelchair Assessment Scheme	148,000

The NIMF does not provide financial assistance to groups. Applications are accepted only from individuals. For reasons of client confidentiality the NIMF does not disclose details of individual awards.

MOT Testing

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to bring Northern Ireland into line with the rest of the United Kingdom in relation to MOT testing. [193384]

Angela Smith: I have no plans at present to change the way that MOT testing is carried out in Northern Ireland. Despite recent difficulties, the Driver and Vehicle Testing Agency has a good track record of delivering a consistent, objective and independent service, providing value for money, and meeting key targets. Alternative arrangements have been considered previously, but each time the conclusion has been that the existing system best serves the needs of the people of Northern Ireland.

Planning Service

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many planning applications were lodged with the Planning Service, broken down by region in Northern Ireland in (a) 2001–02 and (b) 2002–03; and how many cases in each region have not to date been determined by the Planning Service. [193600]

Angela Smith: The following table sets out, by council area, the number of valid planning applications received and the number that have not been determined to date for 2001–02 and 2002–03.

Council area	2001–02	2002–03	Applications received 2001–02 which are still outstanding	Applications received 2002–03 which are still outstanding

Public Appointments

Mr. Gregory Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) Protestant, (b) Roman Catholic and (c) Non-determined appointees there have been to (i) the Child Support Agency in Northern Ireland, (ii) general service grades of the Civil Service in Northern Ireland and (iii) the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in the last 12 months; and what percentage of appointees this represents in each case. [190816]

Mr. Pearson: The Northern Ireland Civil Service publishes its recruitment figures in an annual report.

The report for the period 1 April 2003 to 31 March 2004 has been prepared but has not yet been published. These are the most recent figures available.

Northern Ireland Civil Service

These are overall figures for NICS and include appointments to the Child Support Agency.

Total	437

Public Employees (Religion)

Mr. Gregory Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the religious breakdown is of the employees of the Probation Board for Northern Ireland. [188736]

Mr. Spellar: The breakdown of Probation Board for Northern Ireland employees by religious community at May 2004 was as follows:

	Number	Percentage
Protestant community	135	40.5
Roman Catholic community	150	45.0
Community not determined	48	14.5
Total	333	100

Public Housing Stock

Mr. Gregory Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the total amount of cash receipts has been from the sale of public housing stock in Northern Ireland over the last five years. [194787]

Mr. Spellar: The total amount of cash receipts from the sale of public housing stock in Northern Ireland over the last five years was:

	Net cash receipts[1] (£ million)
1999–2000	70,132
2000–01	95,339
2001–02	99,507
2002–03	142,905
2003–04	138,236

[1] Receipts net of legal expenses/fees.

Sexual Abuse

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate he has made of the percentage of sexual abuse that is perpetrated by teenagers. [187439]

Mr. Spellar: The information is not available in the form requested. However, I can confirm that 14 per cent. (36) of the 249 persons convicted of sexual offences in Northern Ireland in 2002 were aged 19 and under.

Tourism

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many tourists visited Northern Ireland between April and September; what locations they visited; and how many overnight stays they made. [193603]

Mr. Spellar: A total of 419,000 visitors from outside the island of Ireland stayed 1,781,000 nights in Northern Ireland for the period April-June 2004[1].

A break down by location and how many overnights stays is not available for the above. However provided in the following table are the district council creas visited and total nights stayed by visitors who entered Northern Ireland directly, (via an Air or Seaport)[2].

[1] Figures have been extracted from the Northern Ireland Passenger Survey and the Survey of Overseas travellers (Failte Ireland). Data does not include trips taken by ROI residents to Northern Ireland in 2004 but does include those who entered via ROI. The data for July to September 2004 and ROI residents will be available in December 2004.

[2] Figures have been extracted from the Northern Ireland Passenger Survey (NITB) for January to June. The Survey of Overseas Traveller does not record locations visited in NI. Data does not include all visitors who entered via ROI and ROI residents, just those who entered Northern Ireland directly. The data for July to September 2004 and all visitors who entered via ROI and ROI residents will be available in December 2004. Some visitors stayed in more than one location so they will be counted more than once.

District council areas visited and total nights stayed of visitors who entered Northern Ireland directly April-June 2004.

Castlereagh	4,200
Belfast	134,100
Total	417,600

Mr. Gregory Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps are being taken through the Northern Ireland Tourist Board to protect and sponsor the specific Northern Ireland identity at its outlets and overseas promotional events. [194795]

Mr. Spellar: The Northern Ireland Tourist Board (NITB) is responsible for the direct marketing of Northern Ireland tourism within NI and the Republic of Ireland.

Each year the NITB and Tourism Ireland Ltd. (TIL), which has responsibility for overseas marketing, work together to produce marketing plans built around the NI tourism product and agree a programme of overseas promotional events.

In delivering these measures NITB staff work closely with TIL to ensure inter alia that the Northern Ireland identity and brand is promoted in an effective manner.

Travelling Community

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what his latest estimate is of the size of the travelling community in Northern Ireland. [193559]

Mr. Pearson: The Northern Ireland Statistics and Research Agency (NISRA) produces statistics on self-reported ethnic group, the most comprehensive source being the 2001 Census of Population. The 2001 Census reported that 1,710 people belonged to the ethnic group 'Irish Traveller'.

Unlicensed Private Hire Vehicles

Mr. Gregory Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people have been prosecuted for engaging in business involving vehicles not licensed for hire or reward over the last five years. [191889]

Angela Smith: During the period April 1999 to March 2004, 629 operators were successfully prosecuted for operating vehicles without being licensed to carry goods for hire or reward.

The Transport Act (Northern Ireland) 1967, which regulates the licensing of operators and vehicles, does not include an offence provision that would enable the prosecution of people who contract the services of unlicensed operators and vehicles.

Victim Support

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the review of the operation of Victim Support Northern Ireland has been completed; and if he will make a statement. [187827]

Mr. Spellar: Victim Support Northern Ireland (VSNI) is core funded by Government to provide support, practical help and information to victims of crime in Northern Ireland. In accordance with the conditions of grant, an external review of VSNI was completed by PA Consulting in May 2003.

A number of the recommendations have been completed and Government are monitoring closely the implementation of the remaining recommendations.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Benefits

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will break down the 38 per cent. reduction in income support and jobseekers' allowance fraud since 1997 referred to in his Department's press release, Dutch Counterparts to Crack Down on Benefit Fraud, of 20 October, by category of benefit. [193923]

Mr. Pond: The 38 per cent. reduction of fraud in income support (working age) and jobseeker's allowance since 1997 breaks down as a 36 per cent. reduction in income support (working age) fraud and a 42 per cent. reduction in jobseeker's allowance fraud.

Paul Holmes: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what actions are taken by his Department when a complaint is made about an appointee misusing the benefit income of the claimant. [195232]

Mr. Pond: All complaints made about an appointee misusing the benefit income of the customer they act for are investigated. Where there is evidence that the appointee is not acting in the best interests of the customer the appointee is interviewed and reminded of their duties and responsibilities. Where the appointee has failed to meet these responsibilities the Secretary of State can revoke the appointment.

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many benefit recipients have been contacted about conversion to direct payment; what percentage have chosen to open a post office card account; and what percentage have so far failed to select a direct payment option. [195155]

Mr. Pond: Key figures on the progress of conversion to direct payment are available in the Library updated every four weeks.

We are continuing to contact existing customers to invite them to provide account details. Those customers who have not yet provided their account details will be contacted again to discuss their account options, unless they have already advised the Department that they genuinely cannot open or manage an account.

Paul Holmes: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what checks are undertaken by staff in his Department to ensure that the benefits paid to an appointee are used on behalf of the claimant. [195231]

Mr. Pond: Currently formal monitoring of appointeeships is not carried out. However, officers acting on behalf of the Secretary of State can revoke the authority of appointees where there are concerns that they are not acting in the interests of the claimant.

We are looking at our current appointee arrangements, including post-appointment monitoring. The proposed codes of practice will help to inform any future guidance in this area.

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many people living in England and Wales receive industrial injury benefit as a result of suffering from asbestosis. [193973]

Jane Kennedy: Information is not available in the format requested. The available information is in the table.

Number of people in receipt of industrial injuries benefit for prescribed diseases D1 . D3. D8 and D9 as at March 2002

Prescribed disease	England	Wales
D1	7,700	2,200
D3	700	[1]100
D8	[1]100	[2]—
D9	2,000	[1]200

[1] Figures are subject to a high degree of sampling error and should only be used as a guide to the correct situation.

[2] Denotes nil or negligible.

Notes:

1. Figures are from a 10 per cent. sample.

2. Industrial injuries disablement benefit is currently payable for four prescribed diseases to people whose jobs involved working with asbestos or being exposed to asbestos after 4 July 1948. These are: D1—pneumoconiosis, D3—diffuse mesothelioma, D8—primary carcinoma of the lung with accompanying evidence of one or both (A) asbestos (B) unilateral or bilateral diffuse pleural thickening and D9—unilateral or bilateral diffuse pleural thickening.

3. D1 relates to all pneumoconiosis cases only some of which (an unknown proportion) are asbestos related. D3, D8 and D9 are all asbestos related cases.

Job Search (Assistance)

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what provision is made at Job Centres for people who have (a) poor literacy standards and (b) no information technology skills with respect to helping them find jobs; and if he will make a statement. [195503]

Jane Kennedy: The administration of Jobcentre Plus is a matter for the Chief Executive of Jobcentre Plus, David Anderson. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from David Anderson to Mr. Laurence Robertson, dated 2 November 2004:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question concerning the provision made at job centres for people who have poor literacy standards and no information technology skills with respect to helping them find jobs.

In April 2001 Jobcentre Plus introduced its strategy for identifying customers with literacy, numeracy and language needs and a suite of provision to help improve those skills. This involved Jobcentre Plus screening all jobseekers for literacy, numeracy and language needs at or before their six-month interview. Those identified with a potential need are offered referral to an independent contractor to assess their current skill levels and identify the most appropriate provision to help meet their needs.

For those assessed as requiring a small amount of assistance t improve their skills Jobcentre Plus offers a Short Intensive Basi Skills course. This course lasts for up to eight weeks, incorporate job search activities and aims to help participants achieve th National test at level 1.

For customers assessed as requiring more in-depth help t improve their skills, Basic Employability Training for customer aged 25 and over, and Full Time Education and Training for 1 to 24 year olds offer up to 26 weeks learning in a work contex tailored to individual need. These programmes can be extende for up to 52 weeks for participants requiring more help and bot aim to improve skills by at least one level and offer wor placements and job search activities.

For those customers with an identified need for training i Information Technology, and who are eligible for Work Base Learning for Adults, New Deal for Young People (NDYP) o New Deal for Adults aged 25 and over (ND25 plus), appropriat training can be provided through these programmes to enabl participants to be able to compete more effectively in the labou market. The training that is offered will differ according to th needs of each customer and is dependent on what is available i their local area.

Medical Referrals

Paul Holmes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wor and Pensions in how many cases the staff in hi Department have referred to a medical practitioner t establish whether a claimant lacked the capacity t manage his or her benefits in the last year for whic figures are available. [1952

Mr. Pond: The information is not available.

The Department does not normally require a repo by a qualified medical officer before granting a appointeeship. A visiting officer, experienced appointee work, will make an independent assessme of a customer's ability to manage his or her own affai based on Department guidelines. In cases where there doubt the opinion of a suitably qualified profession may be sought, for example, a social worke community psychiatric nurse or general practitioner.

Special Advisers

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State f Work and Pensions how many unpaid special advise the Department has; what their names are; a which Government (a) bodies, (b) committees a (c) strategy groups each unpaid adviser (i) belongs t (ii) advises and (iii) works alongside. [1940

Alan Johnson: I refer the hon. Member to the answ given by my hon. Friend and Minister for the Cabi Office (Ruth Kelly) on 28 October 2004, volume 4 column 1380W.

Special advisors, whether paid or unpaid, a employed under the terms and conditions set out in t Model Contract for Special Advisers. Unpaid advis are appointed in accordance with the requirements paragraph 51 of the Ministerial Code.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 3 November 2004

WALES

Fallen Stock

9. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent discussions he has had with his colleagues in the National Assembly regarding the National Fallen Stock Collection Scheme. [194559]

Mr. Touhig: We have regular discussions with Assembly colleagues on agricultural issues and I am pleased to note that the National Fallen Stock Scheme will begin on 22 November.

Community Support Officers

10. Mr. David: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many police community support officers have been employed in Wales. [194560]

Mr. Hain: 130 at 30 September. An additional 40 are being recruited as part of the third round of Home Office funding.

Business Regulations

12. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he next expects to meet representatives of small business organisations in Wales to discuss business regulation. [194562]

Mr. Hain: I have regular meetings with representatives of the business community. I am looking forward to addressing an awards ceremony later this month to celebrate the achievement of Welsh small businesses.

Minimum Wage

13. Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with Cabinet colleagues on the impact in Wales of recent changes in the minimum wage. [194563]

Mr. Hain: Tens and thousands of low-paid workers stand to benefit from the increases to the national minimum wage in October, including for the first time young workers aged 16 and 17 who will receive £3 an hour.

Albert Owen: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with his Cabinet colleagues on the impact in Wales of recent changes in the minimum wage. [194561]

Mr. Touhig: Tens of thousands of low-paid workers stand to benefit from the increases to the national minimum wage in October, including for the first time young workers aged 16 and 17 who will receive £3 an hour.

Recycling

15. Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the First Minister of the National Assembly for Wales regarding recycling. [194565]

Mr. Touhig: Regular ones. The Assembly's Waste Strategy sets escalating targets requiring at least 40 per cent. of municipal waste to be recycled or composted by 2010.

I know that Newport Wastesavers has a good record of developing successful recycling initiatives. Performance during their current trial of collecting recyclables and residual waste in alternate weeks has been most encouraging.

Railways

Mrs. Betty Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to discuss the railway service between London Euston and North Wales with the relevant train operating companies. [194564]

Mr. Touhig: I have no immediate plans to do so.

I do, however, welcome the recent introduction of the first direct train service between Llandudno and London since 1964.

PRIME MINISTER

Butler Report

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Prime Minister what steps he has taken since the publication of the Butler Report to improve the machinery and operating procedures of government. [195695]

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister whether he has (a) adopted and (b) implemented all the recommendations of the Butler report. [195282]

The Prime Minister: As I said in my statements to the House on 14 and 20 July, we fully accept the conclusions of the Butler Review. We have a detailed programme under way to take forward work into addressing those conclusions. Progress will be reported to the Intelligence and Security Committee.

TRANSPORT

Cheap Flights (EU)

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on measures taken by the EU to encourage cheaper flights between EU countries. [195292]

Charlotte Atkins: The European Community has been the driving force in the liberalisation of air services within Europe through the progressive establishment of the European single market in aviation during the late 1980s and 1990s. This has allowed European airlines to compete freely on intra-EU routes, offering services and setting fares according to their commercial judgement. The Government fully supports this process, as we believe that fair competition between air carriers in a liberalised market is the best guarantee of a good deal for air passengers. A good example of this is the rapid growth of the so-called "no-frills" sector, which would not have been possible without the development of the European single aviation market.

Colitis/Crohn's Disease

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to publish the research into the independent mobility needs of people with colitis and Crohn's disease to determine whether eligibility to the blue badge scheme should be extended; and if he will make a statement. [195213]

Charlotte Atkins [holding answer 1 November 2004]: The research we will be undertaking will consider the mobility needs of a number of groups of disabled people who are currently excluded from the scheme. I can confirm that this research will include the needs of those with colitis and Crohn's disease.

This is one of three research projects we are taking forward as a direct result of the review of the scheme. We are finalising the work specifications and intend to go out to tender later this year for all three. On this particular project we would expect to have results and recommendations in the course of next year.

Consultants

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the contracts awarded by his Department to consultants in each of the last five years, stating in each case (a) the name of the consulting company, (b) the value of the contract and (c) the purpose for which the contract was awarded; and if he will make a statement. [191734]

Charlotte Atkins: The Department was formed in May 2002. Lists of the consultants used and the total value of orders raised against each in 2002–03 and 2003–04 have been placed in the Libraries of the House. The values of each individual contract and the purpose of the work in every case are not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Network Rail (Masts)

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate the Government has made of the number of Network Rail telecommunications masts that Network Rail are planning to erect. [195255]

Mr. McNulty: Network Rail advises that as part of its programme to introduce the Global System for Mobile Communication for Railways it is planning to erect approximately 2,000 new telecommunication masts nationally by 2013.

Night Flights

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions (a) he and (b) his Department have held with counterparts overseas on night flight arrangements at airports; and if he will make a statement. [196034]

Charlotte Atkins: No discussions have been held recently between Ministers on an international level on the subject of night flight arrangements at airports. The subject is discussed regularly at international official-level meetings, most recently during the environmental debates at the 35th Assembly of the International Civil Aviation Organisation (27 September–8 October 2004). On that occasion, the trigger for discussion was a working paper by the Government of India entitled "Problems caused by night curfews in some parts of the world", in which it was argued that night curfews were a hindrance to market access and the growth of air transport operations and hence should be removed. The discussion concluded that

> "this matter should be further studied by the [ICAO] Council, resources permitting, particularly with a view to determining the scope and scale of the problem".

Rail Security

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on security inspections undertaken across the British rail network. [194658]

Mr. McNulty: The Department for Transport's security inspectors regularly monitor the security at railway stations to ensure the requisite standards are being met.

Special Advisers

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many unpaid special advisers the Department has; what their names are; and which Government (a) bodies, (b) committees and (c) strategy groups each unpaid adviser (i) belongs to, (ii) advises and (iii) works alongside. [194062]

Charlotte Atkins: For information relating to numbers and names of unpaid advisors I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 22 July 2004, Official Report, columns 466–70W.

Special advisors, whether paid or unpaid, are employed under the terms and conditions set out in the model contract for special advisors. Unpaid advisors are appointed in accordance with the requirements of paragraph 51 of the Ministerial Code.

LEADER OF THE HOUSE

Deferred Divisions

Bob Spink: To ask the Leader of the House since its introduction, how many deferred divisions have been held in each parliamentary Session since they were introduced. [194916]

Mr. Hain: The number of deferred divisions held in each parliamentary Session since they were introduced is as follows:

	Number of deferred divisions
2000–01	37
2001–02	12
2002–03	15
2003–04	5 so far

TREASURY

Departmental Publications

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the Department's target is for the interval between publication of (a) departmental announcements and documents and (b) material published by public bodies for which his Department has oversight and their posting online; and what the average interval was in the latest year for which figures are available. [195395]

Mr. Timms: No figures are currently available for the average interval in the latest year between the publication of a document or announcement by any of the Chancellor's departments and its posting on their website.

The Debt Management office has targets to publish the results of gilt auctions within 40 minutes, the results of Treasury bill tenders within 30 minutes and the results of ad hoc or other tenders within 15 minutes. In 2003–04 the intervals met these targets.

The Chancellor's other departments do not have interval targets. For scheduled releases, documents and announcements are in general uploaded at the same time as publication. For unscheduled releases, the departments and public bodies aim to upload documents and announcements as soon as possible after publication.

Independent Savings Accounts

Huw Irranca-Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to change the amount of tax-free savings it is possible to deposit in independent savings accounts. [195582]

Mr. Timms: The Government regularly keep under review incentives for saving, including Individual Savings Accounts (ISAs). Decisions on these issues are a matter for the Chancellor as part of the normal Budget process.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Consultants

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many consultancy firms or companies have been retained by the Department since June 2001; what the projects are for which each has been retained; and what the total is of the fees paid or incurred in each case. [193418]

Alun Michael: The information requested is not held centrally and cannot be provided at proportionate cost.

Farming

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much has been spent on the implementation of recommendations of the Curry Report. [190108]

Alun Michael: Implementation of recommendations in the report of the Policy Commission on the Future of Farming and Food, chaired by Sir Donald Curry, is being taken forward through the Government's Strategy for Sustainable Farming and Food (SSFF), which was launched in December 2002. As part of the 2002 Spending Review, the Government announced a sum of £500 million to implement the strategy. This is in addition to existing spending by Defra and other Government Departments which is already being used to deliver aspects of the strategy.

The additional funding provided covers a number of major aspects of the strategy. These include the new Environmental Stewardship Scheme (Entry Level and Higher Level) and the IT system to underpin all the England Rural Develop Programme (ERDP) schemes; improvements in livestock traceability and other major animal health and welfare measures; and new food chain initiatives such as the Food Chain Centre and English Farming and Food Partnerships.

The table shows the actual spending in 2003–04 and the broad breakdown over the remainder of the Spending Review period.

£ million

	2003–04	2004–05	2005–06	Total
Additional money to be made available via grant schemes	9	11	11	31
Investment into research and new technology	1.8	1.8	1.8	5.4
Development and implementation of new agri-environment and rural development schemes, including IT development costs	33	54	151	238
Development and implementation of new Whole Farm Approach to reduce bureaucracy and burden on farmers	2.7	7	8	17.7
IT systems to support livestock identification and tracing	3	65	68	136
Investment to reduce the likelihood and impact of an animal disease outbreak	21	49	45	115
Total				543.1

Delivery of the strategy in the English regions is being facilitated by many public body and industry representatives and these organisations are working together with both resource and funding support to deliver the vision set out in the strategy. They are making use of Government grants, industry support and the resources of Government Offices and Regional Development Agencies, as well as other Government bodies participating in regional steering groups. Existing support programmes, including the ERDP have been targeted to deliver SSFF regional action plans. Given the number of public and industry bodies contributing to regional delivery, it is not possible to quantify precisely the level of support being made available to fund delivery of the strategy.

Foxes

Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs between what ranges she estimates the fox population has fluctuated in the last five years; what estimate she has made of how many foxes died in each of those years, broken down by cause; and what estimate she has made of those figures in future years if hunting with hounds is ended. [189814]

Alun Michael: Lord Burns reported that the pre-breeding fox population of England and Wales was estimated to total some 217,000. He noted that this almost trebled during the breeding season, but that the pre-breeding population was roughly stable, suggesting that some 400,000 foxes died each year. He also noted that hunts were estimated to kill some 21,000 to 25,000 foxes annually, which equated to approximately 6 per cent. of fox deaths per year. This does not suggest that a ban on hunting will have a significant impact on overall fox numbers in future years. Defra does not itself make estimates of the fox population nor provide a year by year comparison.

Grey Squirrel

Diana Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what estimate she has made of the cost of the destruction of trees in (a) community forests and (b) other planting schemes by the grey squirrel. [192516]

Mr. Bradshaw: No specific estimate has been made of the likely cost of grey squirrel damage to woodland planted under the community forest programme or any other support mechanism. However, it is accepted that grey squirrels can cause serious damage to woodlands.

New Deal

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many personnel the Department has recruited under the New Deal in each of the past five years. [194027]

Alun Michael: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by the Minister of State for the Cabinet Office on 25 October 2004, Official Report, column 1052W.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

CDC

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will list (a) current and (b) former CDC/Actis Capital import-export investments by (i) country, (ii) investment fund, (iii) amount and (iv) sector since 1997. [193323]

Hilary Benn: Neither CDC nor Actis has made investments in companies whose business is import-export.

Departmental Staff

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many people in his Department earn more than a whole-time equivalent salary of £57,485 per year. [195283]

Hilary Benn: DFID has 102 staff earning more than a whole-time equivalent salary of £57,485 per year.

Fossil Fuel Energy

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the 10 highest-costing fossil fuel energy generation projects funded by his Department in 2003–04 were. [194760]

Hilary Benn: The only fossil fuel energy generation projects funded by DFID in 2003–04 were in Iraq, involving the provision of emergency diesel generators. These were carried out as part of the efforts to restore electricity supplies for essential services such as water supplies, sewage treatment and hospitals.

Iraq

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions he has had with counterparts in the US Administration on cutting off water supplies in Iraq. [192088]

Hilary Benn: I have had no such discussions.

Press Officers

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many press officers are employed in his Department; and how many were employed in each year since 1996–97. [195360]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 1 November 2004]: The number of press officers employed by the Department for International Development since 1996–97 is as follows:

	Number of press officers
1996–97	6
1997–98	6
1998–99	4
1999–2000	3.3
2000–01	4.5
2001–02	4
2002–03	5
2003–04	6
2004–05	6

The staff numbers for 1999–2000 and 2000–01 include personnel working part-time.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Council Tax Bands

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many households were in each council tax band in England in each year since 1997–98. [195249]

Mr. Raynsford: The information requested for all England is tabled as follows.

Thousand

As at March	Band A	Band B	Band C	Band D	Band E	Band F	Band G	Band H	Total
1998	5,530	4,048	4,513	3,068	1,885	987	718	111	20,860
1999	5,552	4,072	4,538	3,100	1,912	1,003	728	113	21,018
2000	5,565	4,093	4,562	3,133	1,940	1,021	739	115	21,168
2001	5,566	4,111	4,586	3,166	1,968	1,038	750	116	21,299
2002	5,562	4,131	4,614	3,200	1,998	1,054	760	118	21,437
2003	5,561	4,155	4,647	3,236	2,025	1,071	770	119	21,583
2004	5,568	4,184	4,683	3,276	2,050	1,084	111	121	21,742

Data Protection

Michael Fabricant: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what procedures are in place (a) to check the criminal records of civil servants in his Department and agencies responsible to his Department who have access to computer databases containing confidential information on the public and (b) to ensure that there can be no improper use of computer databases containing confidential information on the public; and if he will make a statement. [194605]

Phil Hope: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister and its agencies do not maintain databases that contain confidential information on members of the public, and staff thus do not have access to such databases.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister does nevertheless carry out character checks prior to unconditional offers of employment being made. It is a condition of employment for staff to report if they are convicted of a criminal offence or charged with an offence relating to their official position, and failure to do so may result in disciplinary action.

Government Offices for the Regions

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what role Government offices for the regions play in the planning process. [194330]

Keith Hill: The Government offices for the regions (GOs) are the primary vehicle through which a wide range of Government policies are delivered in the English regions. The GOs promote Government policies and programmes and use their influence to enable communities in their regions to become better places in which to live, through the effective alignment and delivery of national, regional and local priorities.

On planning, the GOs advise the First Secretary of State, my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister, on regional spatial strategies and local development documents; monitor and engage with local planning authorities to improve and maintain their performance and to ensure the authorities can meet their planning targets; advise whether planning applications should be called-in for ministerial determination; and decide on behalf of Ministers certain other planning cases which, under the Town and Country Planning Acts and other legislation, fall to the First Secretary of State, my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister to determine. More generally, they represent Ministers in dealings with regional partners, making links between planning and other programmes such as housing.

Housing

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many dwellings his Department plans to be constructed in England over the next 20 years. [195164]

Keith Hill: Existing Regional Spatial Strategies and the Mayor's London Plan provide for approximately 162,000 additional dwellings a year to be built in England over and above existing stock. The time period covered by each RSS varies and none of them specifically cover the next 20 years to 2024. The equivalent gross figure—which is not available, as the Regional Planning Bodies are required to provide net returns—would also include the number of reconstructions post demolition.

Neighbourhood Wardens

Ms Atherton: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many neighbourhood wardens are deployed in Cornwall; and in which communities. [195104]

Phil Hope: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister funds two neighbourhood warden schemes in Cornwall, deploying 10 wardens.

Eight neighbourhood wardens (including one Environmental worker, one Community worker, one youth worker and a part time youth worker) are deployed in North Kerrier. They cover Higher Broadlane in Pool, Pengeran in Camborne and Close Hill in Redrath.

Two neighbourhood wardens are deployed in St. Austell, covering Polgrean Place, Landreath Place and Bobspen estates in St. Blazey.

Network Rail

Mr. Spring: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) what discussions he has had with Network Rail about potential uses for the Global System for Mobile communications—Railway plan other than in connection with the movement of traffic by rail; [194938]

(2) what discussions he has had with Network Rail about the erection of telecommunication installations on land in (a) areas of outstanding natural beauty and (b) conservation areas; [194939]

(3) what discussions he has held with Network Rail about its methods of consultation with local communities when erecting telecommunication installations. [194941]

Keith Hill: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister has had no discussions with Network Rail about these issues.

Regional Assemblies

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what mechanisms will be put in place to resolve differences between elected local authorities over the content and adoption of a regional spatial strategy by a regional chamber. [195256]

Keith Hill: If there are still unresolved issues at the point at which the Regional Planning Body (RPB) submits draft Regional Spatial Strategy (RSS) revision to the Secretary of State, my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister, these will be addressed in the context of the independently facilitated Examination in Public (EiP). The EiP considers representations made by interested parties and a Panel report is subsequently submitted to the Secretary of State, my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister, and the report published. The Secretary of State, my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister, will then publish and consult on proposed changes before approving and issuing the final RSS.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on allowing non-UK nationals to vote in (a) local elections, (b) regional government elections and (c) regional assembly referendums. [195261]

Mr. Raynsford: The information is as follows:

(a) Under the Representation of the People of the People Act 1983, those entitled to vote in local government elections are British citizens, other qualifying Commonwealth citizens, citizens of the Republic of Ireland and citizens of the European Union states. Those who are not included in any of these categories are not eligible to be included in the electoral register and are therefore not eligible to vote in local government elections. (b) The Government intend that the franchise for regional assembly elections will be based on the local government elections franchise, in this respect, and will be set out explicitly in the relevant dedicated enabling legislation. (c) The franchise for regional assembly referendums is based on the local government elections franchise and is set out explicitly in the Regional Assemblies (Preparations) Act 2003.

Special Grants (Lincolnshire)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what (a) funding and (b) grants additional to the rate support grant have been made available to North East Lincolnshire over the last two financial years. [195137]

Phil Hope: In the last two financial years, the amount of funding and grant made available to North East Lincolnshire, in additional to the revenue support grant, are tabled as follows.

	2003–04	2004–05
Special and specific grants inside aggregate external finance (AEF)	21,578	32,276
Redistributed non-domestic rates	47,847	44,134
Total	69,425	76,410

The data are as reported by local authorities and are taken from the Revenue Account budget estimate forms for 2003–04 and 2004–05.

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the special grants awarded to (a) North Lincolnshire council and (b) North East Lincolnshire council in each year since 1997; and what the value was of each grant. [195212]

Phil Hope: The grants within Aggregate External Finance that have been awarded to (a) North Lincolnshire council and (b) North East Lincolnshire council since 1997–98 are tabled as follows.

The data are as reported by the local authority and use outturn data for 1997–98 to 2002–03 and budget data for 2003–04 and 2004–05.

SCOTLAND

Press Releases

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many press releases have been issued by his Department in each month of 2004; and if he will make a statement. [195456]

Mrs. McGuire: The number of news releases issued by the Scotland Office in each month from 1 January 2004 to 29 October 2004 is as follows, and does not include operational notes issued to the media in connection with public engagements carried out by Ministers, or Scotland Office contributions to joint news releases with other organisations:

	Number
January	4

October	2

Special Advisers

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many unpaid special advisers the Department has; what their names are; and which Government (a) bodies, (b) committees and (c) strategy groups each unpaid adviser (i) belongs to, (ii) advises and (iii) works alongside. [194061]

Mrs. McGuire: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 28 October 2004, Official Report, column 1380W.

CABINET OFFICE

Civil Servants

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what the latest figure is for the average length of continuous service for civil servants within the Cabinet Office. [194405]

Ruth Kelly: The latest figures for the average length of continuous service for civil servants in departments and agencies (where known) as at 1 April 2004 have been placed in the Library.

Departmental Responsibilities

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office pursuant to the answer of 11 October 2004, Official Report, column 59W, on departmental responsibilities, what sum has been earmarked from within the existing Cabinet Office budget to meet the cost of appointing a separate Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. [191819]

Ruth Kelly [holding answer 18 October 2004]: The cost will be accounted for in the Cabinet Office Annual Report and Resource Accounts.

MINISTER FOR WOMEN

Special Advisers

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister for Women how many unpaid special advisers her unit has; what their names are; and which Government (a) bodies, (b) committees and (c) strategy groups each unpaid adviser (i) belongs to, (ii) advises and (iii) works alongside. [194056]

Ms Hewitt: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 28 October 2004, Official Report, column 1380W.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

Official Report/Order Paper

Norman Baker: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission how many paper copies of the (a) Official Report and (b) Order Paper are (i) produced, (ii) distributed to hon. Members, peers, staff and visitors and (iii) unused, on an average sitting day; what use is made of paper copies of the Official Report and the Order Paper which are not distributed to hon. Members, peers, staff and visitors; and what the total cost per day of producing the (A) Official Report and (B) Order Paper was in the last period for which figures are available (1) per copy and (2) in total. [194340]

Sir Archy Kirkwood: Typically, 1,736 copies of the daily part of the Official Report and 2,930 copies of the Order Paper are produced overnight for issue in that form. This includes copies produced for sale. The House of Commons takes 1,089 copies of the daily part of the Official Report and 2,693 copies of the Order Paper.

493 copies of the Official Report are distributed direct to Members, the Press Gallery and Departments of the House. The Bookshop receives 50 copies. The remaining House copies are retained in the Vote Office for the whole of the current and subsequent Session of Parliament, as required by the House, for issue on demand over that period to anyone entitled to receive a copy. Other than for purposes of management of overall paper stocks within limited storage space, which is infrequent, copies are not disposed of during this time. At the end of the period any remaining copies are disposed of as waste for recycling.

1,423 copies of the Order Paper are distributed direct to Members, to the Galleries for visitors, to the Press Gallery and Departments of the House. The remaining House copies are retained in the Vote Office for issue on demand to anyone entitled to receive a copy. Other than a few record copies, copies of the Order Paper are not retained beyond the day of issue and any remaining are disposed of as waste for recycling. The surplus varies widely, but ranges between fewer than 100 copies and up to 300 copies. The print run is regularly reviewed to ensure any consistent surpluses are minimised.

The daily and copy costs of producing the Official Report and the Order Paper are not held in the form requested, as the present printing contract pricing structure allows for payments in relation to printing consolidated classes of papers supplied complete, with rebates for quantities exceeding pre-determined limits. Internal staff, and other costs, are not associated with them or apportioned to individual documents. The following figures have been derived from printing contract data. The total printing expenditure per sitting day on the daily part of the Official Report for financial year 2003–04 is estimated at approximately £10,000, which equates to about £9.30 per House copy. The total printing expenditure per printing day on the Order Paper for the same period is estimated at approximately £5,400, which equates to about £2.00 per House copy.

Passes

Tom Cox: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission how many passes have been issued to former hon. Members in each of the last 10 years. [194749]

Sir Archy Kirkwood: 120 former hon. Members have passes at present. A breakdown by year of issue cannot readily be provided.

Mr. Gummer: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission what percentage of 9A and 9B House of Commons hon. Members' staff passes are held by hon. Members' staff employed on the Department of Finance and Administration's contract of employment and whose salaries are met from the hon. Members' staffing allowance. [194800]

Sir Archy Kirkwood: There are currently 1,451 pass holders with category 9A and 9B passes. All of these passes are held by Members staff, on the basis of an application from the Member concerned. Category 9A and 9B passes are not limited to those paid on the standard Department of Finance and Administration contract of employment, nor to those whose salaries are met from the staffing allowance. Because pass records are not sorted by the contractual status of the individual concerned, I am unable to give the percentage figure sought.

DEFENCE

Departmental Properties

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the properties occupied (a) by his Department and (b) by its agencies in (i) 1997 and (ii) 2004, showing (1) for each and (2) in aggregate (A) the area and (B) the annual rental value. [195428]

Mr. Caplin: The information is not held centrally. I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Iraq

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what impact the redeployment of troops outside South East Iraq will have on his decision to cut the number of regiments in the Army. [193304]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 25 October 2004]: The requirement to reduce the infantry is a result of two factors. First, the improving security situation in Northern Ireland and the prospect of normalisation—which has provided us with an opportunity to make reductions in the routine support that the Army provides to the Police Service of Northern Ireland (PSNI)—and second, the decision by the Army Board to stop the infantry arms plot.

The Army is working on its proposals for a restructured infantry which, with more battalions at its general disposal, will be more, not less, deployable.

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many military reservists from Northern Ireland have so far been mobilised for operations in Iraq; and what the average period of Service is. [193558]

Mr. Caplin: So far approximately 360 members of the Territorial Army and Regular Army Reserves from Northern Ireland have been mobilised for operations in Iraq. The average period of their Service is nine months, six of which are spent in theatre.

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what role Iraqi troops are playing in Iraq. [193649]

Mr. Ingram: The role of the Iraqi Security Forces is to support the Iraqi Interim Government in providing security in Iraq. They continue to develop the capacity to undertake this activity through a variety of security organisations, namely, the Iraqi Police Service, National Guard, Army, Facilities Protection Service, Coastal Defence Forces, Air Force and the Department of Border Enforcement.

Missile Defence

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the information referred to in paragraphs 7.2 to 7.7 of the Memorandum of Understanding between the United Kingdom and United States on research, development, tests and evaluation of ballistic missile defence capabilities and systems will be subject to the Freedom of Information Act 2000. [195385]

Mr. Hoon: All recorded information held by the Ministry of Defence is subject to the Freedom of Information Act 2000. The paragraphs in question refer to information generated by both past and future collaborative work. We would consider on a case-by-case basis any requests for such information to be disclosed under the Act.

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the total budget agreed to date for implementation of co-operation with the United States on research, development, tests and evaluation of ballistic missile defence capabilities and systems is; and what proportion will be paid by the United Kingdom. [195386]

Mr. Hoon: There is no agreed budget with the United States for co-operation on ballistic missile defence. Under the terms of the recently signed Research Development Test and Evaluation Annex, any such funding will be agreed on a project-by-project basis; to date there are no agreed projects. Details of the United Kingdom funding for ballistic missile defence research were given in my reply of 7 June 2004, Official Report, column 211W, to the hon. Member for Aldershot (Mr. Howarth).

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the relationship between the 1958 (as amended) US/UK mutual Defense Agreements on Atomic Energy Matters and the US/UK Memorandum of Understanding on research, development, test and evaluation of ballistic missile defence capabilities and systems, dated 12 June 2003. [195387]

Mr. Hoon: I assume my hon. Friend is referring to the Research, Development, Test and Evaluation Annex signed on 12 October 2004, the Introduction to which recognises the 1958 US/UK Mutual Defence Agreement. This reference is an acknowledgement that, in the event that any exchange of background nuclear information was required to inform ballistic missile co-operative work, such an exchange would need to take place under the information exchange provisions of the 1958 Agreement.

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to the written statement of 12 October 2004, Official Report, columns 9–10WS, on missile defence, how many officials and scientists from his Department have been seconded to the US Missile Defense Agency; what plans there are for future secondments to that Agency; how many US Department of Defense officials and scientists have been seconded to the United Kingdom Missile Defence Centre; and what plans there are for future secondments to the Centre. [195411]

Mr. Hoon: Under the provisions of the Participating Personnel Attachment to the 2003 UK/US Ballistic Missile Defence Framework Agreement, two Ministry of Defence personnel are currently seconded to the Missile Defence Agency (MDA) or MDA-sponsored posts and plans are in place to send a further two by spring 2005. The US currently has two personnel seconded to the UK Missile Defence Centre (MDC) or MDC-sponsored posts under this agreement and two further secondments are being planned.

Playing Fields

Kate Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list playing fields and other sites used now or previously for sport and recreation which have been identified for disposal in the period 1 April 2005 to 31 March 2008, broken down by (a) location and (b) county; and what estimate has been made of likely receipts. [195595]

Mr. Caplin: The information is not held centrally and will take time to collate. I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Warships

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what year he plans to order replacements for (a) HMS Talent, (b) HMS Triumph, (c) HMS Torbay and (d) HMS Trenchant. [194473]

Mr. Ingram: We are not directly replacing the Trafalgar class of nuclear attack submarines platform by platform. HMS Astute will be the first of the next class of nuclear attack submarines, with a planned in service date of 2009. The first three Astute class boats are currently on order; decisions on further buys will be made when appropriate.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Vision Boards

Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the (a) names and (b) biographical details are of the members of Lancaster Vision Board; and what the (i) names and (ii) addresses are of the businesses or organisations that they represent. [192976]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 21 October 2004]: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave her today to question numbers: 192919, 192920, 192921,192922, 192926, 192927 and 192928.

Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) who funds the running costs of (a) vision boards in the North West and (b) Lancaster vision board; [192919]

(2) under whose authority a vision board is set up; [192920]

(3) what the procedures are for (a) appointing to and (b) removing members from a vision board; [192921]

(4) how many vision boards there are in the North West of England; [192922]

(5) who is entitled to apply to become a member of a vision board; and what the procedures governing such applications are; [192926]

(6) where copies of the constitution for the Lancaster vision board are made available; [192927]

(7) what criteria are used for appointing members to the Lancaster vision board. [192928]

Jacqui Smith: The Northwest Development Agency has encouraged the establishment of vision boards in the North West, with the aim of promoting economic leadership at a local level with an emphasis on private sector engagement.

Vision boards have either been established, or are being developed, in Burnley, Cumbria, Lancaster, Northwich and Preston. Local authorities are taking a leading role in determining local structures. The secretariat resources for the vision boards are provided through the local authority with the exception of Cumbria Vision.

Details of the membership and constitution of the Lancaster Vision Board can be obtained from Lancaster city council.

Post Offices

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when she last met Postwatch to discuss (a) the protection of Post Office customers and (b) its action in ensuring that over 95 per cent. of people live within one mile of the nearest Post Office; and if she will make a statement. [194952]

Mr. Sutcliffe: Ministers and officials of the Department meet frequently with Postwatch to discuss a wide range of issues relating to customers. Responsibility for meeting its commitment to ensure that, at the end the urban network reinvention programme at least 95 per cent. nationally of the population in urban areas will still live within 1 mile of their nearest post offices rests with Post Office Ltd.

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many post offices in Scotland have closed as part of the Urban Network Reinvention Programme. [195159]

Mr. Sutcliffe: I understand from Post Office Ltd. that 100 post office branches have closed to date in Scotland as part of the Urban Network Reinvention programme.

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many post offices proposed for closure under the Urban Reinvention Programme and not opposed by Postwatch have since been kept open as a result of the public consultation. [195160]

Mr. Sutcliffe: Decisions on post office closures are an operational matter for Post Office Ltd. and I have therefore asked the Chief Executive to reply direct to the hon. Member.

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many responses Post Office Ltd received to the public consultations on the proposed closure of (a) Clermiston, (b) East Craigs, (c) Strachan Road, (d) South Gyle, (e) Saughtonhall, (f) Stenhouse Cross, (g) Murrayfield, (h) Fairmilehead, (i) Mayfield, (j) Joppa and (k) Newhaven post offices in Edinburgh. [195161]

Mr. Sutcliffe: This is an operational matter for Post Office Ltd. and I have therefore asked the Chief Executive to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Social Chapter

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will list European legislation passed under the Social Chapter since 1997; and what assessment the Government has made of the cost to business in the United Kingdom of meeting the requirements of the legislation. [195829]

Mr. Sutcliffe: Since 1997, four Directives have been agreed under the EU Social Chapter:

the Burden of proof in sex discrimination cases Directive;

the Part-time Workers Directive;

the Fixed Term Work Directive and the Information and Consultation Directive.

The Government has implemented all of these in the United Kingdom, with the exception of the Information and Consultation Directive, which is due to come into force in April 2005.

In addition, as it agreed when it ended the UK's opt out of the EU Social Chapter, the Government has implemented the Parental Leave Directive and European Works Council Directive, which were agreed before 1997.

These new rights have helped to set decent minimum standards in the workplace. In doing so, the Government has kept burdens on business to a minimum. The administrative costs to employers of providing the Social Chapter rights account for well under 1p for each worker each week. The policy costs are under £500 million.

Power Industry Workers

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many current or former power industry workers have been (a) diagnosed with and (b) died from asbestos-related diseases related to their employment in each of the last five years. [190966]

Jane Kennedy: I have been asked to reply.

There are no definitive records of the number of people diagnosed with asbestos-related diseases. However, the best indication comes from the cases identified through the DWP industrial injuries and disablement benefit scheme. These figures are in the table. There are no records of deaths from asbestos related diseases that can be broken down by industry. Tragically, nearly all cases of mesothelioma and lung cancer will result in death. Very few asbestosis cases and no cases of pleural thickening would be expected to be fatal.

Cases of asbestos-related diseases identified through the industrial injuries and disablement benefit scheme in Great Britain in the last five years

2002	40	55	5	40	145
2003	45	65	5	35	150

Notes:

1. The power industries have been taken as electricity, gas and water supply, manufacture of coke, refined petroleum products and nuclear fuel.
2. To maintain the anonymity of customers, figures have been rounded to the nearest 5—except where the number of customers is below 5.
3. Figure for year-ending December 2003 is provisional.

Special Advisers

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many unpaid special advisers the Department has; what their names are; and which Government (a) bodies, (b) committees and (c) strategy groups each unpaid adviser (i) belongs to, (ii) advises and (iii) works alongside. [194057]

Ms Hewitt: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 28 October 2004, Official Report, column 1380W.

Travel Protection

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations she has received regarding improving travel protection, with particular reference to circumstances where an airline goes bankrupt. [195239]

Charlotte Atkins: I have been asked to reply.

The Department has received written representations from the following:

The Commons Transport Committee;

The Civil Aviation Organisation; and

The Association of British Travel Agents.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when she expects to respond to the Civil Aviation Authority recommendations for widening the scope of travel protection. [195240]

Charlotte Atkins: I have been asked to reply.

In a joint statement with the Civil Aviation Authority issued on 27 October, the Government announced that they had asked the CAA to carry out more detailed work on other options to address the decline in the proportion of people covered by the Air Travel Organisers' Licensing scheme. This work is expected to be completed early next year. A copy of the statement is available in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate she has made of the number of people covered by ATOL protection in each of the last three years. [195241]

Charlotte Atkins: I have been asked to reply.

Based on figures published by the Civil Aviation Authority, the number of people covered by ATOL protection in each of the last three years was as follows:

	Million
2001	29.1
2002	27.9
2003	27.6

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Departmental Staff

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Solicitor-General how many full-time equivalent jobs the Law Officers' Departments had in (a) Yorkshire and the Humber and (b) City of York in (i) 1997 and (ii) the latest year for which figures are available. [191822]

The Solicitor-General: I give as follows the figures for the Serious Fraud Office and HMCPS Inspectorate. The figures for the Crown Prosecution Service were included in the answer given by the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 25 October. The Treasury Solicitor has no staff in Yorkshire and Humberside.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Formula One

Brian White: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions she has had on the future of Formula One racing. [195603]

Mr. Caborn: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has had no recent discussions about the future of Formula One racing. However, the East Midlands Development Agency is currently leading discussions on behalf of the Government about the future of the British Grand Prix at Silverstone, and developments around the circuit. Furthermore, the Government recently invested £16 million into motorsport, including Formula One, to ensure that the motorsport industry maintained and enhanced its position in an increasingly competitive global market.

Royal Palaces

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many tourists visited the Royal Palaces in each of the last five years. [192642]

Mr. Caborn: The following table shows visitor numbers to the Royal Palaces for each of the last five years:

Thousand

	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02	2002–03	2003–04
Occupied Royal Palaces	1,924	1,735	1,476	1,918	1,836
Historic Royal Palaces	3,358	3,185	2,823	2,891	2,762
Osborne House (managed by English Heritage)	267	237	264	230	231

Tourism

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will make a statement on the views expressed by the London Development Agency regarding the accessibility of London's hotels, shops and attractions to people with disabilities; and if she will assess the impact of such a lack of accessibility on the £100 billion target value for the tourism industry by 2010. [195210]

Mr. Caborn: Tourism in London is the responsibility of the Mayor of London, and accessibility is embedded in the London Development Agency's (LDA's) Action Plan for tourism. I welcome the commitment of the Mayor and the LDA to making London as accessible as possible for all visitors, including those with disabilities, the elderly and families with young children. This can only work for the benefit of the tourism industry and the achievement of the Government's target for 2010.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what support is available from her Department to assist (a) small hotels, (b) guest houses and (c) other tourism businesses to enhance the skills of employees. [195225]

Mr. Caborn: Support for skills training for the tourism sector is one of the key priority work areas set out in Tomorrow's Tourism Today, which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State launched in July.

DCMS does not directly fund skills training, which is an issue for regional and local institutions, but we are the sponsoring department for People 1st, the new sector skills council for the tourism and hospitality industries. People 1st received its charter earlier this year and I am pleased to note the excellent progress it is making in forging regional skills alliances to map training provision and need. It will have a strategic role in tracking all the funding schemes for skills training and ensuring that provision responds to employer demand.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what support is available from her Department to assist (a) small hotels, (b) guest houses and (c) other tourism businesses to meet the requirements of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. [195262]

Mr. Caborn: Visit Britain's National Accessible Scheme (NAS) was established in 1999 to help hotels, guesthouses and self-catering accommodation to improve access and quality for those with hearing, mobility and visual impairment. It includes a self-assessment pack, which businesses can complete to see where improvements should be made to improve access.

The Department has also agreed to pay a grant of £15,000 to Tourism for All for their Holiday Care information service in 2004–05. Tourism for All provides an important service to disabled people and helps the tourism industry to meet their obligations under the Disability Discrimination Act.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

A-level Mathematics

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) what discussions he has had with the Royal Society of Chemistry concerning the adequacy of A-level mathematics for undergraduate chemists; [195636]

(2) what plans he has to review the A-level mathematics syllabus to place greater emphasis on the needs of future science undergraduates; [195637]

(3) what discussions he has had with the Royal Society regarding the adequacy of the mathematics A-level for undergraduate scientists; and if he will make a statement; [195638]

(4) what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the mathematics A-level for students undertaking undergraduate chemistry; and if he will make a statement. [195639]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is not responsible for reviewing the adequacy or otherwise of the content of an A-level specification. It is for the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority to determine content in discussion with interested parties including HE institutions, subject and professional associations, employers, awarding bodies and providers.

Access Agreements

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills further to the answer of 27 October 2004, Official Report, column 1271W, on guidance on access agreements, whether he expects the Director of Fair Access to publish the guidance to institutions on access agreements; and if he will put a copy of such guidance in the Library. [195383]

Dr. Howells: I expect the Director's guidance to institutions on access agreements to be available publicly and I will place a copy in the Library when it is available.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what factors he expects the Director for Fair Access to take account of in evaluating the milestones of individual universities; and whether the Director will make public his policy on (a) the milestones he will expect universities to include in their access agreement and (b) how he will ascertain whether milestones are stretching enough under paragraph 6.6.2 of the guidance given by the Secretary of State. [194836]

Dr. Howells: It will be for the Director to determine what factors he will take account of in evaluating institutions' own milestones, in the light of the Secretary of State's letter of guidance. The Director will issue guidance to institutions on access agreements in due course.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what data he expects higher education institutions to draw upon in setting milestones for their access agreements under the provisions of paragraph 6.6.1 of his guidance to the Director of the Office for Fair Access. [194832]

Dr. Howells: The milestones will be the institutions' own. They may draw on a range of data.

Capital Funding

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much his Department paid to Capita in respect of (a) outsourcing and (b) consultancy work in (i) 2001–02, (ii) 2002–03 (iii) 2003–04 and (iv) 2004–05. [195048]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 1 November 2004]: Records of major individual service contracts show the following expenditure with Capita in financial years 2001–02, 2002–03, 2003–04 and 2004–05 to date.

2001–02	41,725
2002–03	24,679
2003–04	30,477
2004–05	17,346

My Department does not hold a central record of individual agreements, and information relating to consultancy work could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Class Sizes (West Suffolk)

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the average (a) middle school and (b) upper school class size in the West Suffolk constituency was in (i) 1996–97 and (ii) 2003–04. [194988]

Mr. Miliband: The information requested is given in the table.

Maintained secondary schools: Average class size[1], West Suffolk parliamentary constituency[2]

	Position in January each year
	1997	2004
Middle
Number of pupils	3,120	3,750
Number of classes	140	160
Average class size	23.1	24.0
Upper
Number of pupils	2,440	2,390
Number of classes	140	120
Average class size	17.5	19.4
Total
Number of pupils	5,570	6,130
Number of classes	280	280
Average class size	20.2	22.0

[1] Classes taught by one teacher during a single selected period in each school on the day of the census in January.

[2] Figures have been rounded to the nearest 10. There may be discrepancies between the sum of constituent items and totals as shown.

Compulsory Testing (Wales)

Mr. Dhanda: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will assess the merits of introducing in England the changes to compulsory testing in schools in Wales made by the Welsh Assembly. [195581]

Mr. Miliband: We are aware of the recent consultation by the Welsh Assembly on changes to assessment arrangements in Wales. In England we have listened to sensible concerns about testing at the end of Key Stage 1 and have introduced reforms this year so that the results of standard tasks and tests are combined with the teacher's assessment in one comprehensive judgment. But we continue to believe that national curriculum tests at the end of Key Stages 2 and 3 provide an effective and objective means of assessing all pupils in England on a consistent basis against national standards. They assure the accountability of schools to parents and taxpayers and help inform parents and teachers about each child's progress.

Departmental Policies (South Dorset)

Jim Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will set out, with statistical evidence relating as closely as possible to the South Dorset constituency, the effects of changes to departmental policy since 1997 on the South Dorset constituency. [194970]

Mr. Miliband: The constituency South Dorset lies within Dorset local education authority. The Department for Education and Skills (DfES) provides information by constituency, through the "In Your Area" website available at http://www.dfes.gov.uk/inyourarea.

This website allows users to access key facts and local information about education and skills based on postcodes. The data available within the site offers comparisons between 1997 and the latest available year and covers five geographies. These are parliamentary constituency, ward, local authority district, local education authority, Government office region. England figures are also provided

The information available within the website is grouped in a number of broad categories including literacy and numeracy at age 11, literacy and numeracy at age 14, GCSE/GNVQ results, pupils with special educational needs, school initiatives, school work force, school funding and resources, children's social services, early years, class sizes, post 16, higher education and adult education

Additional information could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, my Department is investigating ways in which we can disseminate more information about the effects of our policies at a local level. The inyourarea website will be further developed over the coming months to include additional information about adult education, school funding, school initiatives, school performance, school work force and post 16.

Departmental Staff

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many full-time equivalent jobs (a) his Department and (b) its executive agencies had in (i) Yorkshire and the Humber and (ii) the City of York in (A) 1997 and (B) the latest year for which figures are available. [191837]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 25 October 2004, Official Report, column 1053W.

Disabled Students Allowance

Paul Holmes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many students have benefited from the disabled students' allowance in each of the last three years; how much has been spent in total on these students (a) in England and (b) broken down by local education authority; and if he will make a statement. [194784]

Dr. Howells: Data on disabled students' allowance (DSA) payments made by local education authorities (LEAs) for English domiciled students are shown in the first table. Data on DSA payments made by the Open University (OU) are shown in the second table.

Academic year	Student numbers (Thousand)	Expenditure (£ million)
2000/01	28	42
2001/02	35	40
2002/03	44	50

Data are collected from the LEAs to produce national estimates. The data collection exercise does not allow for the production of firm figures below this level, and therefore data by LEA are not available.

	Student numbers (Thousand)
Calendar year	English domiciled	Welsh and Northern Ireland domiciled	Expenditure (£ million)
2001	1,039	61	2.6
2002	1,438	92	2.7
2003	2,002	151	3.4

The OU's academic year is consistent with a calendar year. The OU records aggregate expenditure on DSAs for English, Welsh and Northern Ireland students.

Drug Awareness Programmes

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much money was spent within the Greater London area on drug awareness programmes in each of the last five years. [195377]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: Figures for local drug awareness programmes are not held centrally. However, the Department has allocated funding to Greater London local education authorities (LEAs) to support drug education, awareness and prevention in schools, as detailed in the following table:

	£ million
1999–2000	1
2000–01	[1]25
2001–02	2
2002–03	2
2003–04	2

[1] Drug Prevention was part of a larger grant which included Social Inclusion and the Youth Service.

These figures include both Government and local authority contributions. LEAs and schools are also free to spend on drug awareness programmes from within their own budgets.

A new cross Government grant, Young People Substance Misuse Partnership Grant, for 2004–05 supports drug education, prevention and early intervention for young people. The total allocated to London through the grant this year is £12.7million.

Free Milk Scheme

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what his estimate is of the (a) set up and (b) recurrent annual cost of providing free chilled milk to all children at Key Stages (i) 1 and (ii) 2. [195747]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The Milk Development Council has helped us develop estimates. It is likely that set up costs would be around £21 million, and the cost of providing milk each year would be around £65 million. This estimate includes the EU school milk subsidy, but excludes any amount for repair and depreciation of equipment.

Higher Education Costs

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the average cost was of an undergraduate degree in each of the universities in the UK in the last year for which figures are available. [191506]

Dr. Howells: The data requested are not available. Universities and higher education colleges receive their funding as block grant through the funding councils. This includes funding for teaching and research. For students at institutions in England, total funding for teaching is based on the number of planned publicly funded students in the sector and for 2004–05 is on average £5,300[1]. This protects the unit of funding per student and helps maintain the quality of the student experience.

[1] As published in Table 2.7 of the Departmental Report for the Department of Education and Skills 2004.

Home-School Distances

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many (a) primary and (b) secondary school pupils lived more than three miles from the school that they attended on the latest date for which data are available. [195143]

Mr. Miliband: The information requested is shown in the following table:

Number and percentage of pupils in maintained primary and secondary schools who live more than three miles from the school they attend, January 2004[1]

	Over three miles
	Number	Percentage
Primary[2]	156,806	3.7
Secondary[2]	588,699	17.8

[1] Measured as a straight line distance.

[2] Includes middle schools as deemed.

New Schools (Lambeth)

Kate Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what criteria are being used in assessing the Building Schools for the Future bid in Lambeth. [195138]

Mr. Miliband: The criteria for assessing all Building Schools for the Future bid are those published in the guidance issued to local authorities in July 2003, namely that bids are prioritised in accordance with educational and social need, (as defined by GCSE rates of attainment and eligibility levels for free school meals) moderated by programming efficiency requirements.

Kate Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what plans he has to ensure that future demand for new school places in Lambeth is met. [195139]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The DfES is committed to ensuring that all parents have a choice of good schools for their children to attend. Historically, there has been a lack of provision of secondary school places in Lambeth, with up to 50 per cent. of Lambeth residents being educated outside the borough. In addition, population growth in London means that we will be providing 20 new schools in the capital over five years, concentrated in areas where there are currently large outflows of secondary pupils to other parts of London. Consequently, there are plans to increase provision in Lambeth substantially, to absorb demographic growth and to enable Lambeth residents to be educated locally. The Lambeth Academy, opened by Her Majesty the Queen on 26 October 2004 as a wholly new school, already provides extra places for 180 children each year. We are planning with Lambeth to make further significant increases in provision in the borough, as outlined in our joint document "A Vision for Lambeth Schools", which includes plans for at least two further wholly new schools.

Kate Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what proposals there are to improve the existing buildings of Lambeth's secondary schools. [195197]

Mr. Miliband: Chapter 4 of our "Five Year Strategy for Children and Learners", published in July 2004, sets out eight key reforms for secondary schools, five of which concern their buildings. Every secondary school which is up to the standard should be a specialist school, which triggers a capital grant for specialist facilities. All secondary schools will have the freedom, as foundation schools, to own their land and buildings and manage their assets, if they wish. We have introduced dedicated capital funding to encourage more places in popular schools. We will expand the academies programme to provide for 200 by 2010. Every secondary school will be refurbished or rebuilt to a modern standard through Building Schools for the Future.

Office for Fair Access

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what consultations he is carrying out regarding the appointment of an independent person or panel responsible for reviewing the decisions of the Office for Fair Access on appeal by the universities; who will appoint the independent person or panel; whether there is a requirement of political neutrality on the part of the independent person or panel; and what his timetable is for the creation of such a body. [194196]

Dr. Howells: A consultation document was issued earlier this month to interested parties, including Universities UK, on how the review procedure might work in practice. The Secretary of State will make the appointment, in accordance with the principles set out in the Code of Practice for Ministerial Appointments to Public Bodies, as set out the regulations recently approved by Parliament. The usual requirements concerning political activity will apply. The Secretary of State expects to make an appointment before the Director of Fair Access makes his first formal decisions.

Part-time Students

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many and what percentage of undergraduate students at higher education institutions in England are part-time students. [194774]

Dr. Howells: The latest available figures are shown in the table.

Undergraduate students[1] at English HE institutions 2002/03

	Number	Percentage
Full-time	893,900	67
Part-time	434,700	33
Total	1,328,600	100

[1] Covers students normally domiciled in the UK, and those from overseas. Includes students at the Open University.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what estimate he has made of the income that higher education institutions will receive from employer contributions to undergraduate part-time student fees in 2006–07. [194775]

Dr. Howells: Part-time fees are unregulated: higher education institutions set the fee level for their part-time courses. The income that institutions receive will depend on the level of fees they set and the take-up of places. Data on the income received by institutions from employer contributions specifically are not available centrally.

SATs

Mr. Dhanda: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what representations he has received in the past 12 months about the effectiveness of SATs. [195612]

Mr. Miliband: 265 representations have been received in the past 12 months about the national curriculum tests. Of these, 32 were about the content and format of the tests; 60 about the effects of testing; 27 seeking the abolition of testing; and 146 about the administration and marking of the tests. Of these 146, 83 related to Key Stage 3 English and 26 to Key Stage 2 English.

Schools (Bury)

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much was spent per pupil in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in Bury in each of the last 10 years; what his estimate is for each of the next two years; and if he will make a statement. [195406]

Mr. Miliband: The information requested for the years 1993–94 to 2002–03 is given in the table. The Department is currently collecting the information for 2003–04. The information for 2004–05 is not due to be collected until October 2005.

School based expenditure[1] per pupil[2] in primary and secondary schools in Bury in each of the last 10 years[3, 4]

Year[3, 4]	Primary education[5]	Pre-primary and primary education[5, 6]	Secondary education
1993–94	[7]—	1,440	2,000
1994–95	[7]—	1,480	2,040
1995–96	[7]—	1,520	2,080
1996–97	[7]—	1,570	2,150
1997–98[8]	[7]—	1,490	2,160
1998–99[9]	[7]—	1,640	2,330
1999–2000	1,780	1,800	2,500
2000–01	2,010	2,040	2,650
2001–02	2,180	2,220	2,810
2002–03	2,220	[7]—	2,900

[1] School-based expenditure includes only expenditure incurred

directly by the schools. This includes the pay of teachers and school-based support staff, school premises costs, books and equipment, and certain other supplies and services, less any capital items funded from recurrent spending and income from sales, fees and charges and rents and rates. This excludes the central cost of support services such as home to school transport, local authority administration and the financing of capital expenditure.

[2] Pupil numbers include only those pupils attending maintained establishments within each sector and are drawn from the DfES Annual Schools Census adjusted to be on a financial year basis.

[3] 1999–2000 saw a change in data source when the data collection moved from the RO1 form collected by the ODPM to the Section 52 form from the DfES. 2002–03 saw a further break in the time series following the introduction of Consistent Financial Reporting (CFR) and the associated restructuring of the outturn tables. The figures in italics indicate the change in sources. In 2002–03 school based expenditure is taken from Section 52 Outturn Table A line 51 net current expenditure (NCE). For 2001–02 and earlier years the expenditure is calculated as lines 1 to 12 less lines 29, 30, 35 and 37. This differs from the old Net Institutional Expenditure (NIE) calculation only in the treatment of meals and milk which is no longer excluded and no adjustments for balances are now made. This is taken from Section 52 Outturn Table 3 for 1999–00 to 2001–02 and from the RO1 form previously.

[4] The 2002–03 calculation is broadly similar to the calculation in previous years. However, 2001–02 and earlier years includes all premature retirement compensation (PRC) and Crombie payments, mandatory PRC payments and other indirect employee expenses, while in 2002–03 only the schools element of these categories is included. In 2001–02 this accounted for approximately £70 per pupil of the England total, while the schools element of these categories accounted for approximately £50 per pupil of the England total in 2002–03. Also, for some LEAs, expenditure that had previously been attributed to the school sectors was reported within the LEA part of the form in 2002–03 and would therefore be excluded, though this is not quantifiable from existing sources.

[5] Expenditure was not distinguished between the pre-primary and primary sectors until the inception of Section 52 for financial year 1999–2000.

[6] School-based expenditure in nursery schools was not recorded in 2002–03.

[7] Not available.

[8] Spending in 1997–98 reflects the transfer of monies from local government to central Government for the nursery vouchers scheme. These were returned to local government from 1998–99.

[9] The 1999–2000 figures reflect the return of GM schools to local authority maintenance.

Notes:

1. Figures are rounded to the nearest 10.
2. Data is as reported by the LEA in cash terms.

Student Fees/Finance

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) what review is taking place of the cost of student fees for students from Commonwealth countries who wish to study here; and if he will make a statement; [193488]

(2) what plans his Department has to bring the cost of student fees for students from Commonwealth countries wishing to study here into line with the fees students from a member state of the European Union pay; and if he will make a statement. [193492]

Dr. Howells: We have no plans to bring the cost of fees paid by students from Commonwealth countries into line with the fees paid by students from a member state of the European Union. The Government offer scholarships to Commonwealth students through the Commonwealth Scholarship and Fellowship Plan and the Shared Scholarship Scheme.

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) what discussions he has had with Student Finance Direct with regard to the delayed payment of student loans; and if he will make a statement; [193778]

(2) what information he has received concerning delays in education authorities assessing entitlement to student grants and payment of fees. [193779]

Dr. Howells: Some 800,000 applications for student finance had been received by 18 October, 521,000 of which were received on or before 2 July 2004 (which is the published deadline for new applications).

All applicants who submitted a fully and properly completed application form on or before 2 July should receive, shortly after their university or college confirms their attendance, either a fully-assessed loan payment or an interim payment (under our contingency arrangements for continuing students). Some 13,000 interim payments have been made to date and these students will receive full assessments and a further loan payment (if appropriate) within a few weeks. A further 700 interim payments are scheduled for release once confirmation of the relevant students' attendance is received from the appropriate institutions.

Over 279,000 applications have been received since the deadline passed, of which fewer than 89,000 applications are still being processed. As is the case every year, a significant number of students have applied well after the published deadlines (over 94,000 applications have been received since early September). Local authorities and the Student Loans Company have never been able to guarantee payment at the start of term to late applicants. The Student Loans Company has paid out over 549,000 loans to date, with a further 80,000 fully approved and scheduled for payment as soon as the students' attendance is confirmed by their institution.

There has been some local variation in the speed with which some individual local education authorities have been able to process applications, but the Department and the SLC have worked closely with the LEAs affected to ensure that students are not disadvantaged. The vast majority of LEAs are now processing late applications within a maximum of six weeks, which is the normal service standard set by the Department. As in previous years, the Department has written to higher education institutions asking them to be supportive of students who do not have loans in place at the start of term.

Student Numbers

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) how many students were enrolled in full-time higher education courses at UK universities and colleges in each year since 1990; how many of those students were from other EU countries; and how many were from outside the EU; [193669]

(2) how many students from other EU countries studied at UK universities in each year since 1997; what the aggregate cost of tuition was for those students; and how much those students and their sponsors contributed towards that cost. [193670]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 25 October 2004]: The student figures are shown in the table. The Department does not have either the aggregate cost of tuition for EU domiciled students at British universities or the private contribution to fees of these students.

Full-time undergraduate students in the UK[1]

2002/03	1,174,600	1,046,200	52,200	76,200

[1] Covers HE students studying at universities, HE institutions and FE colleges.

Note:

Figures may not sum to totals because of rounding.

Teacher Absence

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will estimate the impact of stress-related sickness on teacher absences; and if he will make a statement. [195142]

Mr. Miliband: The Department collects information centrally on the number of teachers taking sickness absence, but not on the cause. The most recent figures show that in 2003 the average number of days lost to sickness absence was 5.4. This compares favourably with other occupations in both the public and private sectors. We nevertheless have a range of measures to ensure that teacher health and well-being is taken seriously, which include a focus on tackling sources of stress and excessive workload. Research conducted for the Department in the autumn term of 1999 by the School of Education at the University of Cambridge found that colds, influenza and associated respiratory tract infections were reported to be the most important causes of teachers' absence, followed by upset stomach, headache and stress or depression.

Tuition Fees

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much has been recovered in fees from students dropping out from a course of higher education (a) in total and (b) from those dropping out in the first year of their course, in each year since 1997. [194193]

Dr. Howells: Payments are made to Higher Education Institutions (HEIs) in respect of tuition fees grants for those students confirmed to be in attendance three months after the beginning of their course. No payment is made in respect of those who have left a course within three months of the beginning of the academic year. No money is recovered from HEIs for those students who subsequently withdraw after three months.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the average amount paid per student in respect of tuition fees has been in each year since their inception. [194194]

Dr. Howells: New student support arrangements came into effect at the start of academic year 1998/99 when new entrants to higher education were expected to contribute towards the cost of their tuition. The amount of the contribution depends on family income.

The average amount paid per student from public funds in respect of tuition fees for English and Welsh domiciled students for academic years 1998/99 to 2002/03 (latest year for which data are available) are shown in the table:

Average LEA/SLC fee expenditure per student (rounded to nearest £10)[1,2]

Academic year	Student support scheme students[3]
1998/99	590
1999/2000	550
2000/01	510
2001/02	530
2002/03	530

[1] Includes placement year sandwich students. For student support scheme students, the maximum fee contribution for these students was £540 in 2002/03.

[2] Public expenditure on fees assessed for payment from public funds. In 1998/99 these payments were made by LEAs; from 1999/2000 these payments in respect of student support scheme students were made by the Student Loans Company (SLC).

Form F503G survey of local education authorities

National level data are published annually in the Department's Statistical First Releases (SFRs) (SFR 12/2004 for 2002/03). Updated data for academic years 2003/04 and 2004/05 will be published by the SLC in November 2004 (SLC SFR 01/2004).

University Admissions

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) what plans he has to review the benchmarks for university admissions based on (a) state schools and (b) socio-economic status; and if he will make a statement; [192930]

(2) what plans the Higher Education Funding Council for England (HEFCE) has for additional benchmarks for universities; what consultations HEFCE carries out in respect of benchmarks; and whether he expects the Director of the Office for Fair Access to be included in such consultations. [193568]

Dr. Howells: The Performance Indicators Steering Group (PISG) is the body which approves the content and methodology of the Performance Indicators (PIs) and associated benchmarks. The PISG is chaired by HEFCE (The Higher Education Funding Council for England), and includes representatives from Universities UK, the Standing Conference of Principals, and HESA (Higher Education Statistics Agency). Individual Higher Education Institutions are notified of their provisional PIs well before publication and are able to comment and take up any issues with the HESA, and/or the HEFCE prior to publication. Suggestions for new PIs can come from a variety of sources and are considered by the PISG for approval. The White Paper "The Future of Higher Education" said that the Government favoured moving towards more sensitive indicators and I am in discussion with HEFCE about how best to do this. I am also looking at the benchmarks to see if there is any way they can be improved or better understood. There are no plans to consult with the Director of OFFA in relation to performance indicators or benchmarks.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what reports he has received on the milestones presently in existence for universities in respect of their admissions; whether he plans to publish them; by what means they are publicly available; and whether he expects to be informed by universities of changes in their milestones. [194950]

Dr. Howells: The access agreements that institutions will have from 2006 with the Director of Fair Access will include the institutions' own milestones, or measures of success. The milestones may draw on a range of data. Access agreements will be published. The Secretary of State has not received any report in respect of these milestones. These milestones are separate from the Performance Indicators that were published recently by the Higher Education Statistics Agency. Published annually, these current indicators provide comparative data on the performance of institutions in widening participation, student retention, learning and teaching outcomes and research output. They cover publicly funded higher education institutions in the UK.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Airwave

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the implementation of Airwave technology to the police force. [195477]

Caroline Flint: The rollout of Airwave is progressing well. It is currently available in 41 forces with 78,000 live users to date. Users report excellent coverage and clarity of signal. All forces in England, Scotland and Wales are expected to be using Airwave by mid-2006.

Animal Testing

Michael Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek the setting up of a Royal Commission to (a) review the (i) effectiveness of and (ii) justification for animal experiments and (b) examine alternatives set out in the document, New Life for Animals published by the Labour Party in 1997. [192905]

Caroline Flint: The Government have no plans to do so. Although we have not ruled out a Royal Commission, in the light of the report of the House of Lords Select Committee on Animals in Scientific Procedures, published in July 2002, we do not believe that a Royal Commission, or other form of public inquiry, would serve any useful purpose at the present time. The Select Committee concluded that there is at present a continuing need for animal experiments both in applied research to develop human and veterinary medicine and to protect humans and the environment, and in research aimed purely at extending knowledge. The Government endorsed this conclusion in our response to the Select Committee report published in January 2003. Instead, we would rather use the available resources to make continuing improvements to the operation of the 1986 Act and to promote the fullest application of the 3Rs—replacing the use of animals with alternative methods; reducing the number of animals needed for a particular purpose and refining the procedures to minimise suffering.

In this latter regard, earlier this year we announced the creation of a new national centre for replacement, refinement and reduction of animals in research (NC3Rs) building on the existing Medical Research Council Centre for Best Practice in Animal Research (CBPAR). The national centre's mission is to advance and promote the 3Rs in research and testing using animals. Responsibility for the national centre rests with the Office of Science and Technology.

Antisocial Behaviour

Huw Irranca-Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) acceptable behaviour contracts, (b) curfew orders, (c) parenting orders, (d) dispersal orders, (e) fixed penalty notices for antisocial behaviour and (f) antisocial behaviour orders have been issued by (i) South Wales Police, (ii) Bridgend Division of South Wales Police and (iii) Rhondda Cynon Taff Division of South Wales Police. [193349]

Ms Blears: The information is as follows:

Acceptable Behaviour Contracts (ABCs)—statistics on the use of ABCs are not routinely collected centrally. However, snapshot figures, from the National Survey on Antisocial Behaviour, released on Thursday 28 October, show that 5,383 contracts have been signed in England and Wales. These data are not broken down by force but show that 219 ABCs have been agreed within Wales.

Curfew Orders—Table A shows the number of Curfew orders with and without electronic monitoring made at courts in each of the petty sessional areas in South Wales (including those made at the Crown court if committed there by magistrates courts in South Wales) from 1999 to 2002.

Statistics for 2003 will be available later in the year.

No applications have yet been received to establish a local child curfew scheme under section 14 of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998. Some local authorities and police forces have considered the possibility but concluded that other measures should be taken to tackle relevant local problems.

Parenting Orders—Youth Justice Board figures are given in Table B by financial year up to 31 March 2004. Data are given by Youth Offending Team area.

Dispersal Orders—Results from the National Survey of Anti-Social Behaviour, published on Thursday 28 October 2004, show that a total of 418 dispersal orders have been made to tackle the problem of intimidating groups in England and Wales between January and September 2004. These data are not broken down by police force area but figures indicate that 11 have been issued in Wales.

Fixed Penalty Notices for disorder—Complete information on the numbers issued is not available.

Antisocial Behaviour Orders (ASBOs)—Table C shows the number of ASBOs issued within South Wales, as notified to the Home Office, up to 30 June 2004 (latest available), by all courts and where restrictions have been imposed for a specific local authority area. Data are not available at divisional police force level.

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for The Home Department how many antisocial behaviour orders have been issued to young (a) men and (b) women in the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement. [191963]

Ms Blears: The available information is given in the table.

Number of notifications reported to the Home Office, by magistrates courts and the Crown court[1], of antisocial behaviour orders (ASBOs) issued, by age group, from 1 April 2003 to 31 March 2004, England and Wales

Association of Chief Police Officers

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is provided with copies of (a) memoranda and (b) policy guidance issued to chief constables by the Association of Chief Police Officers. [194128]

Ms Blears: Non-sensitive memoranda and policy guidance is published by the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) on their public website.

Additionally, memoranda and policy guidance may be provided to the Secretary of State for the Home Department when requested or when considered of interest, and in practice, the vast majority of literature is copied to relevant policy sections.

Badger Baiting

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many successful prosecutions against badger baiters there have been in each of the last five years. [195350]

Caroline Flint: The information requested is not available centrally.

Bail Hostels

Mr. Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the (a) occupancy rates and (b) running costs for each bail hostel in the west midlands in each of the past five years. [188007]

Paul Goggins [holding answer 13 September 2004]: (a) No published data are available on the occupancy rates of approved probation and bail hostels (approved premises). (b) The West Midlands Probation Board have advised the Home Office of the following information on running costs for approved premises.

Expenditure of west midlands approved premises

Welford House	275	296	381	384	439
Total	1,749	2,094	2,664	2,655	3,127

Notes
1. After 1 April 2001, approved premises received 100 per cent. grant from the Home Office, including housing benefit. Prior to this they received 20 per cent. of their funding from local authorities, and housing benefit direct.
2. With effect from 1 October 2002 property costs were included in the budgets.

CCTV

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money the Government have invested in CCTV systems in local authorities covering the Greater London area. [194142]

Ms Blears: The Home Office provided a total of £33.44 million to local authorities in Greater London for Closed Circuit Television schemes through the Crime Reduction Programme's CCTV initiative.

This was broken down as:

CCTV Round 1: Local authorities in Greater London were awarded £19.49 million for CCTV.

CCTV Round 2: Local authorities in Greater London were awarded £16.95 million for CCTV.

Since the completion of the Crime Reduction Programme, crime reduction funding has been allocated directly to local Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnership (CDRPs) through the Building Safer Communities fund and to Basic Command Unit (BCD) commanders through the BCU fund. These funding streams fund a variety of interventions, including CCTV, to tackle local crime priorities. Information about the interventions funded is not held centrally.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much public funding has been spent on CCTV security cameras in West Lancashire since 1997. [171721]

Ms Blears: The Home Office has provided a total of £884,404 to West Lancashire for Close Circuit Television schemes through the Crime Reduction Programme's CCTV initiative.

This breaks down as:

Under CCTV Round 1, West Lancashire was awarded £166,948 for CCTV in Ormskirk Town Centre.

Under CCTV Round 2, West Lancashire was awarded £696,703 followed by an additional £20,753 to provide a network of cameras in priority rural and urban locations across the borough, incorporating public transport and "hard to reach" areas.

All funding was claimed.

Other crime reduction funding has been allocated directly to the local Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnership and Basic Command Unit in West Lancashire to fund a variety of interventions, included CCTV. Information about the allocation of that funding is not held centrally.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much public funding has been spent on CCTV security cameras in Burnley since 1997. [168317]

Ms Blears: As part of the Crime Reduction Programme, Burnley claimed £198,526 to extend the existing CCTV coverage to Padiham, enhance the current town centre scheme and relocate the control room.

Other crime reduction funding has been allocated directly to the local Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnership and Basic Command Unit in Burnley to fund a variety of interventions, included CCTV. Information about the allocation of that funding is not held centrally.

Correspondence

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will reply to the letters from the right hon. Member for North-East Hampshire of 26 May, 1 July and 12 August, regarding a constituent, Mrs. Babur. [190865]

Mr. Browne [holding answer 14 October 2004]: I wrote to the right hon. Member on 3 November.

Crime (Tamworth)

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) successful and (b) unsuccessful criminal prosecutions were brought for crimes perpetrated in Tamworth constituency in each year since 1997; and how many criminal charges were pressed for crimes perpetrated in the Tamworth constituency in each year since 1997. [188112]

Paul Goggins: Statistics for defendants charged with offences are not collected centrally, nor is it possible to break down the court proceedings data collected centrally to constituency level.

The following table, however, gives the number of defendants (a) convicted and (b) not convicted in the Staffordshire police force area as a whole.

Defendants convicted and those not convicted of offences of all types at all courts in the Staffordshire police force area, 1997 to 2002

	Defendants convicted	Defendants not convicted[1]
1997	31,504	10,119
1998	33,009	9,256
1999	29,562	8,734

[1] Includes defendants whose proceedings were discontinued, those discharged under section 6 MCA 1980, and those, whose charges were withdrawn, dismissed or acquitted.

[2] Staffordshire police force were only able to supply a sample of data for magistrates courts proceedings covering one full week in each quarter for 2000. Estimates based on this sample are included in the figures as they are considered sufficiently robust at this high level of analysis.

Statistics for 2003 will be published in November.

DNA Database

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether an assessment has been made of the usefulness of the DNA database. [194872]

Caroline Flint: An assessment of the usefulness of the National DNA Database has been carried out through the on-going evaluation of the Home Office DNA Expansion Programme. The programme was set up in April 2000 to fund police forces to increase the collection of offender DNA samples and facilitate the build up of DNA profiles on the database. It also funds the retrieval of more DNA material left by offenders at crime scenes. It has provided £182.6 million to police forces between April 2000 and March 2004 in addition to £19 million per annum approximately from forces' own budgets. The majority of the £182.6 million is used by forces to cover the costs of processing DNA samples in forensic laboratories and the cost of 650 additional Scenes of Crime and Intelligence Staff and equipment.

The programme's target was to hold a DNA profile for all known active suspect offenders on the database by March 2004 (it held 760,000 DNA profiles from suspect offenders in April 2000). This was achieved. There are currently 2.73 million DNA profiles taken from 2.45 million suspected offenders on the database (as at end September 2004), the great majority of known active suspect offenders. The UK now leads the world in terms of its ability to identify offenders and eliminate suspects by using a DNA database.

Police data returns show that there were over 45,200 DNA "offender-to-scene" matches in 2003–04. The chance of a match with a subject profile when a crime scene profile is first added to the database is now about 45 per cent. The match rate increases to about 70 per cent. when matches obtained later as new subject profiles are loaded and included.

Evaluation of the DNA Expansion Programme has shown that the database can make a significant contribution to crime detection by linking DNA evidence found at crime scenes to offenders and significantly increasing the probability of crime detection. Where crime scene DNA is added to the database the rate of detection can be significantly increased. In 2003–04, the overall detection rate was 23 per cent. but where DNA was successfully recovered from a crime scene and loaded on to the National DNA Database the detection rate rose to 43 per cent.

The DNA detection rates for volume crime show striking increases—as shown in the table.

Percentage

Crime category	National	DNA rate
All recorded crime	23	43
Domestic burglary	15	45
Burglary OTD	10	53
Theft of vehicle	13	26
Theft from vehicle	6	54

Evaluation of the impact of the programme and of the usefulness of the database is continuing in 2004–05.

Great Gorilla Run

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his answer of 15 October 2004, Official Report, column 412W, on the Great Gorilla Run, how many police were provided to redirect traffic during the Great Gorilla Run in London on 19 September; how many roads were closed; and how many diversions were created. [194656]

Caroline Flint: No roads were closed and no diversions were created as a result of the Great Gorilla Run. I understand that five police officers were present during the event in a public safety capacity.

Hate Crime

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the Government will amend legislation on hate crimes against (a) people with disabilities and (b) gay, lesbian and bisexual people to make it as extensive as that which applies to hate crimes on the grounds of race and religion; and if he will make a statement. [186890]

Paul Goggins: The Criminal Justice Act 2003 provides that where criminal offences are motivated by prejudice or hostility against the victim's sexual orientation or disability, as well as race or religion, the courts should treat this as an aggravating factor in sentencing.

This is to act as a deterrent and so help protect these groups from harassment and attack, as well as sending a clear message that such behaviour is unacceptable in our society.

The Government work continuously to ensure that legislation meets the needs of society, and will continue to keep under review the protection offered to different groups.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the Merseyside Police's Hate Crime Policy. [146244]

Ms Blears: Merseyside Police Hate Crime policy was originally produced as a result of the Stephen Lawrence inquiry in 1999. The policy offers procedural guidance in the identification of hate crime/incidents and the reporting, recording and investigation of such crime/incidents. The policy also includes information in respect of the third party reporting process and a self-reporting process.

The policy was formally launched in February 2003 and then internally reviewed in March 2004. The good practice contained within the policy has been recognised by several other forces, including the authors of the Association of Chief Police Officers hate crime policy. This policy has been created by Merseyside Police and is their responsibility.

Indymedia

John McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what (a) grounds and (b) legal authority the web servers of the news agency Indymedia were seized on 7 October. [193709]

Caroline Flint: I can only confirm that no UK law enforcement agencies were involved in the matter. I am not at liberty to discuss the specific case in more detail.

Knife Crimes

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many victims of reported crimes were (a) injured and (b) killed by knives or other bladed weapons in each year since 1997; and if he will make a statement. [193041]

Ms Blears: Information on victims of recorded crime injured by knives is not collected centrally. The British Crime Survey (BCS) collects information on the use of weapons in violent incidents, whether or not the incident was reported to the police.

The 2002–03 BCS estimates that weapons were used in 26 per cent. of violent incidents. A knife was used in 8 per cent. of violent incidents, and another type of stabbing implement was used in 2 per cent. of violent incidents (more than one type of weapon could be used in an incident). These figures were published in Crime in England and Wales 2002–03 Supplementary Tables: Nature of burglary, vehicle and violent crime, an internet only publication available at: www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/crimeew0203_tables_bvv.html

However the use of a weapon does not necessarily mean that injuries were sustained as the weapon may have been used to threaten the victim. No data is available from the BCS on injuries caused by a weapon, only on injuries sustained in violent incidents generally.

Injuries were sustained in 50 per cent. of violent incidents in the 2003–04 BCS. Cuts were sustained in 14 per cent. of violent incidents where injury occurred (more than one type of injury could have occurred); however these were not necessarily caused by a weapon. These figures were published in Crime in England and Wales 2003–04.

Statistics on victims of homicide killed with a sharp instrument are published annually in a Home Office Statistical Bulletin. The latest available figures were published in Home Office Statistical Bulletin number 01/04, "Crime in England and Wales 2002–03: Supplementary Volume 1: Homicide and Gun Crime".

For 2002–03, there were 272 currently recorded homicides where the method of killing involved a sharp instrument.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to review (a) sentencing for and (b) provisions for deterrence of crimes using knives and other bladed weapons; and if he will make a statement. [193043]

Caroline Flint: We are conducting an analysis of the nature of knife related crime and actions which can and should be taken to tackle it. This includes examining the legislation and penalties to deal with the possession or use of knives and offensive weapons.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce a licensing system for owners of (a) swords, (b) machetes, (c) meat cleavers and (d) similar bladed instruments; and if he will make a statement. [193044]

Caroline Flint: Section 139 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988 already prohibits the possession of an article with blade or point in a public place without good reason or lawful authority, with the exception of a folding pocket knife with a blade not exceeding three inches.

We have no plans to introduce a licensing system for these weapons. Many of these items are used legitimately and such a move would penalise law-abiding people. Licensing would also be expensive to administer and would involve the police in considerable extra work, which inevitably will affect their other policing priorities.

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will implement a ban on carrying all kinds of knife other than for professional use. [193068]

Caroline Flint: Section 139 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988 already prohibits the possession of an article with blade or point in a public place without good reason or lawful authority, with the exception of a folding pocket knife with a blade not exceeding three inches. It is a defence for a person to prove that the article is for use at work, for religious reasons or as part of a national costume.

This legislation is kept under constant review but there are no plans to introduce legislation to prevent the carrying of folding pocket knives.

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps the Government are taking to tackle the problem of assaults on children involving knives. [193070]

Caroline Flint: It is unacceptable for young people to carry knives and the Government take their responsibility for public safety in this area extremely seriously. There is a range of legislation and police powers in place aimed at preventing the possession or use of knives and offensive weapons and this is kept under constant review to ensure it is comprehensive and effective.

It is essential to educate young people about the dangers and consequences of becoming involved in criminality associated with weapon-carrying and the Home Office funds and operates a number of community-based initiatives aimed at encouraging good citizenship and turning vulnerable young people away from crime.

Leicestershire Police

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many times he has met the Chief Constable of Leicestershire police since January. [194374]

Ms Blears: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has met the Chief Constable of Leicestershire Constabulary twice since January.

Metropolitan Police (Racism)

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on progress made by his Department in combating racism within the Metropolitan Police Force. [194156]

Ms Blears: The Government and the Metropolitan Police Service (MPS) remain committed to combating racism within the MPS.

The MPS has made significant progress in combating racism as an organisation. It has acted robustly around the recommendations from the Stephen Lawrence Inquiry Report and continues to take a strong stance against any suggestion of racist behaviour.

The MPS were one of the first forces to adopt the new assessment procedures for police recruitment. The assessment centre tests candidates' attitudes to race and diversity at least seven times across the process, including at interview. Those who do not score sufficiently highly are not offered a job—irrespective of how well they do in the rest of the selection process.

Sir Bill Morris is currently chairing an inquiry into the conduct of the MPS in relation to: complaint, allegation and grievance matters, employment tribunal claims and the resolution of workplace conflicts. The MPS is not complacent and will continue to develop as an organisation in all fields of diversity and currently awaits the outcome of the Morris Inquiry as part of this development.

While the BBC programme "Secret Policeman" did not portray the MPS, the Commissioner of Police for the Metropolis tasked Assistant Commissioner Ghaffur with undertaking a thorough review of practices within the MPS. The review made a number of recommendations that included issuing guidance on behaviour. In particular, recruits now sign a "Principles of Conduct" statement which clearly sets out the Met's expectations of individuals regarding their own and others' behaviour.

The MPS has also produced guidance for potential recruits and training school staff on appropriate behaviour, tolerance, respect and politeness. This puts a responsibility on new recruits and training school staff to eliminate and not tolerate racist behaviour.

National Offender Management Service

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the role of probation officers dealing with serious sex offenders will be included within the National Offender Management Service. [172842]

Paul Goggins: Offender managers will have responsibility for the full range of offenders, including serious sex offenders.

Overseas Corruption

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the cases on the register of allegations of overseas corruption offences have been categorised as requiring no further action. [194717]

Caroline Flint: The National Criminal Intelligence Service currently has 10 cases on the register of allegations of overseas corruption offences that have been categorised as requiring no further action.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the allegations on the register of allegations of overseas corruption offences have come from (a) the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, (b) the Export Credits Guarantee Department, (c) foreign jurisdictions, (d) Interpol, (e) local police stations within the UK (f) suspicious activity reports, (g) whistle-blowers and (h) other sources. [194685]

Caroline Flint: The register of allegations of overseas corruption offences is made up allegations from the following sources:

	Number
(a) Foreign and Commonwealth Office	15
(b) Export Credits Guarantee Department	6
(c) Foreign jurisdictions	0
(d) Interpol	3
(e) Local police stations within the UK	0
(f) Suspicious activity reports	0
(g) Whistleblowers	0
(h) Other sources	13

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions the National Criminal Intelligence Service has reported to the authorities of a foreign jurisdiction allegations of overseas corruption that they believe to be worthy of investigation. [194716]

Caroline Flint: At this time the National Criminal Intelligence Service has not reported any allegations of overseas corruption to any authorities for further investigation, other than to the appropriate UK law enforcement agencies.

Police

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the net expenditure on policing in England and Wales has been in each year since 1979, expressed in real terms at today's prices, broken down by police authority area in England and Wales. [190842]

Ms Blears: Information in a common format has been available since 1990. Information for the years 1990–91 to 2003–04 has been placed in the Library.

Overall, police expenditure has increased in real terms by 38 per cent. since 1990–91.

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his target number is for police officers per head of population in (a) urban and (b) rural areas. [193909]

Ms Blears: No target is set by central Government for the number of police officers per head of population.

The Government have recognised the particular problems of policing sparsely populated areas. We are allocating an additional £30 million to 31 forces under the Rural Policing Fund. It is for the Chief Officer of Police to decide how he will deploy available resources to improve the policing of sparsely populated areas.

On 31 March 2004 there was 268 police officers to 100,000 population in England and Wales. Police/population ratios can be found on a force-by-force basis at Table 4 of Home Office Statistical Bulletin 13/04 ("Police Service Strength—England and Wales, 31 March 2004") published on 29 September 2004.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the first phase of police reform; what the key elements of the second phase of police reform are; and what the timetable is for further developments on police reform. [194860]

Ms Blears: The Government are engaged in a sustained programme of police reform which began with the publication of the white paper "Policing a New Century" in December 2001. The first phase of reform has produced real successes—a performance management culture has been embedded within the service; the National Intelligence Model has been implemented in all 43 forces ensuring an intelligence led approach to policing; we now have 4,000 Community Support Offices providing a visible, reassuring uniformed presence on the streets; we have a record 140,000 police officers and record investment in the service; and a major pay and conditions package has been implemented to provide a fairer, more flexible and modernised system of pay and rewards.

The Government will shortly publish a further white paper building on the first phase of reform and the broad endorsement for the direction of travel received in response to the November 2003 consultation "Policing: Building Safer Communities Together". The focus of this phase of reform will be around spreading a system of responsive neighbourhood policing throughout England and Wales and building a stronger customer service culture within policing. Further modernisation of the workforce and strengthened accountability mechanisms will help to deliver this vision.

Some of the proposals outlined in the paper will require legislation which will be taken forward as soon as parliamentary time allows. However, many of the changes can begin to be made immediately and the Government will work closely with police forces, authorities and other partners to take this forward.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the work of the Police Standards Unit. [194861]

Ms Blears: The Police Standards Unit (PSU) was set up by the Home Secretary in June 2001 to help deliver the Government's commitment to raise standards and improve the operational performance of the police. The focus of PSU's activities is to:

measure and assess police forces' performance;

understand the underlying causes of performance variations;

provide support and focused assistance to forces where a problem with performance has been identified; sponsor and disseminate proven good practice.

Performance management

PSU has driven the development of 'iQuanta', an on-line analysis tool for police performance data. Through iQuanta there is now timely data on the performance of all forces and Basic Command Units across all the major crime types. This data is also available to forces themselves and police authorities, who now have a means of holding forces to account. PSU's work on the audit of performance data has helped ensure accuracy and consistency in recording practices across forces.

The development of a National Standard for Incident Recording (NSIR) should help measure and handle the police response to the weight of non-crime incidents more effectively.

The on-going development of the Policing Performance Assessment Framework (PPAF) is helping to understand police performance in the round. PPAF has been accepted by the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) and the APA as a fair means of assessing the complexities of police duties.

Operational support

PSU is engaged with seven under-performing or "target" forces: Cambridgeshire, Cleveland, Greater Manchester, Humberside, Nottinghamshire, Northants, and West Yorkshire. This proactive role has changed the dynamic of the Department's relationship with the police service, underpinned by a sound analytical and evidence-based footing, and demonstrating a new and effective way of doing business. Each engagement has been different. In some, PSU has helped a force's own improvement regime to go further and faster. In others, the unit has been a catalyst for change. In the third category, PSU's involvement has a more fundamental process of attempting to put the force on a path towards recovery.

In liaison with the ACPO, PSU launched the high profile, national Alcohol Misuse Enforcement Campaign. This links in to the government's Alcohol Harm Reduction Strategy and aims to crack down on alcohol-fuelled disorder, as well as using tough enforcement measures to take action against irresponsible drinkers and vendors who are fuelling anti-social behaviour. This campaign was positively received and early data has provided a baseline to measure the impact and success of this.

PSU's work on national projects, such as Automatic Number-Plate Recognition (ANPR), National Video Identification (NVIS) and the Policing Priority Areas (PPAs) have been widely recognised as a success. In the period June 2003 to May 2004, during the ANPR project, 173,000 vehicles were stopped, 13,000 arrests made, 51,000 FPNs issued and £8 million property recovered. £1 million in hypothecated income has been generated and the rate of 100 arrests per full-time officer is 10 times the national average.

PSU's role in police use of forensic science has also been successful, in particular on DNA and NAFIS (Fingerprint Automation) and through reviewing and changing force-level forensic processes. This has helped the 62 per cent. increase in the number of DNA matches achieved and the 34 per cent. increase in the number of "DNA detections" delivered. PSD have led on the development of a computer simulation model for forces to identify blockages in their forensic processes. A work-package of good practice is to be disseminated to all forces.

Launched in March 2002, the Policing Priority Areas (PPA) Programme was aligned to the Government's Strategy for Neighbourhood Renewal and sites were first piloted in Bradford, Bristol, Camberwell, Rhyl and Stoke. Each has demonstrated how working with small communities suffering from crime, the fear of crime and anti-social behaviour can bring about significant improvements in police and partnership working. This police-led programme has now been extended and there are now 29 identified sites. There has been significant success in reducing crime and providing public reassurance in the existing PPAs and the programme continues to build on the progress made so far.

Improving performance through applied knowledge for the policing community

PSU has established a Programme Board to bring together the main stakeholders: ACPO, HMIC, NCPE, PITO, as well as the Home Office Partnership and Regions Drugs Unit (PRDU), and Research, Development and Statistics (RDS). This will provide a forum for coordinating and driving forward our knowledge needs, and the roles of the key stakeholders have been mapped out to ensure that these fit together most effectively.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the Government's main priorities are for the police in terms of science and technology. [194870]

Caroline Flint: The Government's priorities for the police's use of science and technology were first outlined in the Police Science and Technology Strategy 2003–2008, which was published by the Home Office in January 2003. A second strategy, which builds on the original and provides an updated position, was published in May 2004

The strategy identifies where science and technology can have the greatest impact on policing over the next five years. The priority applications for police science and technology set out in the strategy are, in order:

Identifying and eliminating threats to public safety, taking account of the increased risk of terrorist activity.

Effective use of intelligence-gathering technology.

Secure exchange of data between forces and other agencies.

Mobile data input and retrieval.

Maximising the value of evidence.

Effective management of investigations including the use of intelligent systems to assist decision-making.

Monitoring offenders that pose a threat.

Undertaking effective surveillance.

Effective location and recovery of evidence.

Protection of officers and vulnerable individuals.

The Strategy's key aims are:

to establish priorities for current and future science and technology applications and research, to co-ordinate the development and implementation of technology between users and suppliers to ensure a coherent and effective process, and to implement processes for future scanning to ensure that the police service can exploit new technology at the earliest opportunity and is prepared for new technology-based threats.

The strategy builds on the Government's key priorities for policing as laid out in the National Policing Plan 2004–07. It also provides a framework for forces, police authorities, and key providers like the Forensic Science Service, the Police Scientific Development Branch and Police Information Technology Organisation, to draw up their individual plans for the use of science and technology.

Copies of both editions of the Police Science and Technology Strategy can be found in the Library.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the (a) work of and (b) resources available to the National Centre for Policing Excellence. [194903]

Ms Blears: All of the work by the National Centre for Policing Excellence (NCPE) on doctrine development is subject to extensive consultation with the Home Office, as well as the Police Service and other key stakeholders.

The NCPE itself was inspected by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary (HMIC) during summer 2003 as part of its overall inspection of Centrex, and a report was published in January 2004. Future inspection will be based on the result of monthly performance reports which will be submitted to HMIC, and an annual European Foundation Quality Management (EFQM) self-assessment.

The NCPE is resourced from the overall grant-in-aid allocated to Centrex by the Home Office. This process is overseen by the Centrex Board, on which the Home Office are represented. The Home Office also allocate additional ring-fenced funding to the NCPE. In 2004–05 this additional funding amounts to £5 million. We are confident that the NCPE is adequately resourced in order to meet their key aims and objectives.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures will be introduced to address variations in training between police forces. [194905]

Ms Blears: From summer 2005, Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary (HMIC) will collect information about training through its baseline assessment of all forces. This information will be analysed within HMIC and published on the internet. Any matters for concern in terms of trends, or individual forces being out of step with others, will be picked up by HMIC.

Within the Home Office, officials are working with key stakeholders and forces to facilitate collaboration between forces and common standards in training.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from Her Majesty's Inspector of Constabulary on the most recent National Policing Plan. [194906]

Ms Blears: To date, we have received no representations from Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary on the draft National Policing Plan for 2005–08.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which major recommendations of the O'Dowd report on police bureaucracy remain unimplemented; and if he will make a statement on progress with implementation. [194910]

Ms Blears: We have made good progress with implementing the recommendations of the O'Dowd report. Those outstanding mostly require legislation, developments in IT or wide-ranging changes to the criminal justice system.

Among our achievements to date, over 7,700 forms have been made obsolete across all 43 forces; all 43 forces now undertake video identity parades; over 72,000 police officers and staff now use Airwave radios in 40 forces; the national rollout of the penalty notice for disorder scheme was completed in April 2004 with over 20,000 tickets having been issued at the end of August; and we are investing £13 million over two years into 10 pilot projects which test out new ways of using police staff.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will repeat the study, "A Diary of a Police Officer", in 2005. [194919]

Ms Blears: We have no plans to do so at present.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment has been made of the effects of updating and integrating police IT systems on police bureaucracy. [194921]

Caroline Flint: We are committed to tackling the administrative burdens and inefficient working practices that keep officers from front line duties. A steering group has been set up to oversee the work on reducing bureaucracy in the police service, which includes the development and more efficient use of information technology.

The Custody and Case Preparation Programme will deliver an electronic and paperless system for the handling of an arrest through the provision of a case file for the Crown Prosecution Service and courts. It will also allow courts to input results of cases directly onto the case file, which will automatically update the Police National Computer.

The National Management Information System will reduce much of the work required of forces in their statistical and performance reporting to the Home Office. The Police Portal is already enabling both the public and police to benefit from efficiency savings through the development of the "minor" online crime notification facility.

Intelligence Management Prioritisation Analysis Co-ordination and Tasking (IMPACT), the programme to create a national IT system to support police intelligence and enable sharing of intelligence data between forces will deliver significant business benefits.

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the average spending per capita on policing in the Islington, North constituency was in each year since 1996–97. [194015]

Ms Blears: Resources are allocated directly to borough operational command units using the Service's resource allocation formula. I understand from the Commissioner of Police for the Metropolis that the provision for Islington, North is now part of the overall provision for the Islington command unit and can be apportioned as follows:

	£ per capita
1999–2000	102
2000–01	104
2001–02	108
2002–03	117
2003–04	142
2004–05	151

Notes:

1. In 1990–2000, separate budgets were available for Holloway division (Islington, North) which represented 47 per cent. of Islington borough's total budget. The following years have been calculated as 47 per cent. of Islington borough's total budget.
2. Earlier budget information is not available owing to a change in the financial system in April 1999.

In addition, borough units are able to call upon all London Units (such as dog sections, Territorial Support Group, Traffic and Air Support Units) when operational priorities dictate.

Police Federation

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next plans to meet the chairman of the Police Federation. [194378]

Ms Blears: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary meets the chair and other officials of the Police Federation on a regular basis. Their next meeting is scheduled for December 2004.

Police Stations

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria he has set on deciding whether a new police station should be built; and what the criteria are for consultation with (a) the public and (b) the local hon. Member. [191133]

Ms Blears: It is the Government's role to allocate grant funding to police force areas. It is for the Police Authority and Chief Officer to decide on planning and deployment of available resources.

Under the provisions of the Police Act 1996 (s.96) police authorities are required to make arrangements for obtaining the views of their community on policing in their area.

Rackspace

David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received from the Federal Bureau of Investigation concerning the activities of UK-based customers of the US company Rackspace; and if he will make a statement. [193230]

Caroline Flint: The Secretary of State did not receive any representations from the Federal Bureau of Investigations in this matter. In the circumstances I do not therefore believe that it is necessary for me to make a statement.

Safer Neighbourhoods Programme (London)

Linda Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will ensure continuity of funding in the roll-out of the Safer Neighbourhoods Programme in London over the next few years. [194130]

Ms Blears: Operational policing initiatives are matters for each police chief officer, within plans and budgets set by the police authority. The Metropolitan Police Authority (MPA) /Metropolitan Police Service (MPS) are developing the Safer Neighbourhood Programme within their own budget. Police authorities receive general grant to help fund their budgets, broadly in relation to their relative needs for policing and in the light of local resources. This year, general grant provides for about 79 per cent. of the MPA's net budget requirements. The level of grant is considered annually.

The Government have provided an increase in police funding of 21 per cent. in real terms since 1997 and has helped to secure higher police officer numbers through the Crime Fighting Fund.

Neighbourhood policing is one of Government's key priorities for the next five years and it will support a significant expansion of accessible and responsive neighbourhood policing across all forces. The Government are providing funding to increase the numbers of community support officers in England and Wales to 5,500 by March 2005 and will provide further funding to increase numbers to 24,000 by the end of 2007–08.

Special Constables

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many special constables have become members of the full-time police force in each of the last five years. [193894]

Ms Blears: Information on those joining the Police Service and the wastage rates for the special constabulary is published annually in a Home Office Statistical Bulletin. Recruits who had served previously as special constables are not separately identified.

Tobacco Smoke Testing

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reasons it is his policy to grant licences under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 to test the effects of tobacco smoke. [191135]

Caroline Flint: The Government stand firmly by their ban on tests which involve animals in the development and testing of tobacco products announced in November 1997. No such tests have been authorised under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 since that time. However, applications may be considered for licence authorities involving the potential exposure of animals to tobacco smoke when this is the only means of studying an important feature of the development or treatment of a number of health problems.

Under-age Drinking

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the (a) on licence and (b) off licence premises discovered to be selling alcohol to underage young people during the Home Office's Police Standards and ACPO summer initiative have been prosecuted successfully. [193740]

Ms Blears: Statistics on the number of successful prosecutions during the Home Office's Police Standards and the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) summer initiative cannot be separately identified on the Home Office Court Proceedings database. However the Police Standards Unit is monitoring the progress of prosecutions resulting from the summer campaign. At present it is too early to determine the outcome of these prosecutions.

HEALTH

Alcoholism (Greater London)

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had, and with whom, on co-ordinating policy to reduce alcoholism in Greater London. [194155]

Dr. Ladyman: The Government's alcohol harm reduction strategy for England was published in March 2004 and includes a range of actions to tackle all aspects of alcohol-related harm. Responsibility for implementation lies jointly with the Department and the Home Office.

The strategy contains actions that focus on tackling serious alcohol problems and alcohol dependence, for example, improving training for doctors, nurses and other health professionals, emphasising early identification of alcohol problems. The Department is conducting an audit of the demand for and provision of alcohol treatment in England by the end of January 2005. The audit will provide information on gaps between demand and provision of treatment services both locally and nationally and will be used as a basis for the Department to develop a programme of improvement to treatment services. The information will provide local data on all areas including Greater London that can be used by local strategic planners.

Autism

Paul Holmes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what training general practitioners receive in autism awareness; and if he will make a statement. [194783]

Dr. Ladyman: The training of general practitioners is a matter for the relevant professional bodies. This question should be addressed to the Royal College of General Practitioners.

Care Homes

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) care homes and (b) care home beds there have been in (i) the Jarrow constituency, (ii) South Tyneside, (iii) Tyne and Wear and (iv) the UK in each year since 1997. [193605]

Dr. Ladyman: I understand from the chair of the Commission for Social Care Inspection (CSCI) that figures for later years were collected by the National Care Standards Commission, and now the CSCI, but that comparable details are not available. The number of care homes and care home beds for the nearest equivalent areas are shown in the tables.

Table 1 shows the number of care homes in Gateshead and South Tyneside, Newcastle and North Tyneside, Northumberland, and England at 31 March for the years 1997 to 2001.

Table 2 shows the number of care home places in Gateshead and South Tyneside, Newcastle and North Tyneside, Northumberland, and England at 31 March for the years 1997 to 2001.

Childhood Vaccinations

Angela Watkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements are in place for parents who wish their babies to receive each childhood vaccination separately. [194213]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Department provides the combined childhood vaccine because it provides the most effective protection against a number of potentially serious diseases. Single vaccines are not provided on the national health service as they leave the child at risk of infection for a longer period of time. Also, some single antigen vaccines are not manufactured.

Consultants

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many consultancy firms or companies have been retained by the Department since June 2001; what the projects are for which each has been retained; and what the total is of the fees paid or incurred in each case. [193420]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Department does not hold centrally a record of individual contracts, nor does it have similar details for its agencies. To secure such details could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Publications (Access)

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many and what proportion of publications issued by his Department are available in (a) Braille, (b) autoprint, (c) large print and (d) easy read format. [194303]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Where we assess that a publication will have wide interest, including consultation documents and public facing information, materials are produced as standard in alternative formats on, or as close as possible, to the initial publication launch date. Many of the Department's public facing materials are produced in large print format (conforming to Royal National Institute for the Blind guidelines) as a matter of course.

Additionally, the Department undertakes to produce all publications in alternative formats upon request. Alternative formats may include Braille, audio-cassette, British Sign Language video, compact disc, large print format and versions for people with learning difficulties.

Documents are simultaneously published on the Department's website, which conforms to Government guidelines and W3C (World Wide Web consortium) accessibility standards at level "A".

Recently, the Department's website has been speech enabled with software which reads webpages aloud, highlighting text as it goes. This makes content more accessible for those who are dyslexic; have learning difficulties; for whom English is not their first language and those with mild visual impairment.

The Department does not centrally record information about individual requests and subsequent production of alternative formats and so it is not possible to provide figures on the numbers of publications available in each format.

Energy/Carbon Strategy

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the energy/carbon strategy by NHS estates will be published; and how it has taken into consideration the role of good quality combined heat and power plant. [193826]

Mr. Hutton: The NHS Estates document entitled "Carbon/Energy Management in Healthcare—Best practice advice for the NHS in England on the meeting of mandatory carbon/energy targets", will be published at the end of November 2004. A copy will be placed in the Library.

The document will contain a checklist of actions for new build programmes, or refurbishments, advising the national health service to consider installing combined heat and power plant (CHP) to maximise efficiencies, benefit from exemptions from the Climate Change Levy and contribute towards the Government CHP target (10,000 more CHP plants by 2010).

Epidermolysis Bullosa

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps are being taken to improve (a) awareness of and (b) training on epidermolysis bullosa for health professionals; and if he will make a statement. [194234]

Dr. Ladyman: The Department is not responsible for setting curricula for health professional training. However, we do share a commitment with statutory and professional bodies that all health professionals are trained, so that they have the skills and knowledge to deliver a high quality health service to all groups of the population with whom they deal.

The General Medical Council's Education Committee published recommendations on undergraduate medical education in 2002. It states that graduates must know and understand normal and abnormal function including the natural history of human diseases and disease presentations.

We are committed to improving services for patients with genetic diseases, such as epidermolysis bullosa. The Department published a £50 million strategy to harness the potential of advances in genetics for the benefit of national health service patients in June 2003. The White Paper "Our Inheritance, Our Future—Realising the potential of genetics in the NHS" set out the Government's commitment to developing genetics knowledge, skills and provision within the NHS.

Free Eye Tests (Cleethorpes)

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many pensioners in Cleethorpes constituency have had free eye tests since they were introduced. [194184]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Figures for the number of sight tests by constituency or pensioners are not collected centrally.

The following table shows the number of national health service sight tests paid by South Humber Health Authority (HA) for the years ending 31 March 2000 to 2003 and the two primary care trusts (PCTs) that now cover the old South Humber HA area for the year ending 31 March 2004.

HIV

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) men and (b) women living in the Greater London area are HIV positive. [195371]

Dr. Ladyman: The survey of prevalent diagnosed HIV infections showed there were 13,131 men and 5,972 women of all ages with diagnosed HIV infection living in London in 2003.

Hospital Infections

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many staff members the Skipton Fund are employing to respond to the applications for help from those infected with Hepatitis C; and if he will make a statement. [193651]

Miss Melanie Johnson: There are four members of staff employed by the Skipton Fund. In addition, support services, including financial assistance, are provided by the staff members of the Macfarlane Trust.

Long-term Care

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to the answer of 21 October 2004, Official Report, column 927W, on long-term care, whether the study established what proportion of those people (a) were discharged to their own homes with no further need for personal care at that time, (b) were discharged to their own homes with further domiciliary care provided, (c) were admitted to hospital and (d) died. [194238]

Dr. Ladyman: The study involved a longitudinal follow-up of a sample of people admitted to residential or nursing care. It revealed that after 42 months had elapsed some 0.9 per cent. of the original sample had been discharged to private households (it is not possible to split (a) and (b)), 0.4 per cent. had been admitted to hospital and 67 per cent. had died.

Data taken from "Survey of Admissions to Residential and Nursing Home Care—final report of the 42 month follow-up" by Bebbington, Darton et al, Discussion paper 1675, Personal Social Services Research Unit, University of Kent—August 2000.

Matrons

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people are employed as matrons by Essex Rivers Health Care at (a) Colchester General Hospital and (b) Essex County Hospital. [195832]

Dr. Ladyman: The information requested is not collected centrally. Information is collected on the number of nurse managers, which includes matrons, at national health service trust level and figures for Essex Rivers Healthcare NHS Trust are shown in the table.

Medicines (Children and Infants)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will estimate what proportion of medicines prescribed to (a) children and (b) infants have never been tested on children or infants; [194246]

(2) for what proportion of medicines prescribed to (a) children and (b) infants there is no agreed level of dosage; [194252]

(3) what recent assessment he has made of drugs which are not licensed for that purpose being used for the treatment of children; [194255]

(4) what percentage of medicines used for treatment of children do not have a dosage approved by the Medicines and Healthcare Products Regulatory Agency; and if he will make a statement. [194258]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Medicines and Healthcare Products Regulatory Agency (MHRA) does not have access to data in a form that would allow any of the requested estimates to be made. For many medicines, there is a dosage regimen for use in children and infants which has been agreed by an authoritative body of health professionals, based on clinical experience, medical practice and evidence from the published literature. Such dosage regimens, for example, are set out in the Medicines for Children Formulary, which is published by the Royal College of Paediatricians and Child Health and is to be replaced in 2005 by the British National Formulary for children, published by the British Medical Association and the Royal Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain. However, the dosage regimens, although agreed by health professionals, are not necessarily authorised by the MHRA.

We are unable to provide the percentage of medicines that do not have an authorised dosage regimen for use in children, as we do not hold data in that form. In addition, some medicines are authorised for some, but not all appropriate, paediatric age ranges.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what progress has been made on a European regulation to encourage more drug companies to research specific medicines for children; [194254]

(2) what steps he is taking to ensure that pharmaceutical companies in the United Kingdom provide clear dosage information for children and adults on all drugs they produce; and if he will make a statement. [194257]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Government published on 17 August a strategy to produce improvements in the short and medium term in the availability of medicines licensed for use in the paediatric population and to improve the information available on paediatric use. This includes requesting companies to submit completed paediatric clinical trials and assessing the data with a view to including information on paediatric use in the summary of product characteristics (SmPC). The Medicines and Healthcare Products Regulatory Agency (MHRA) is also stressing the need to provide data on paediatric use in its discussions with companies prior to the submission of marketing authorisation applications. The MHRA offers free scientific and regulatory advice to companies wishing to discuss paediatric drug development and grants a fee waiver to applications for certain applications to introduce paediatric information into the SmPC. It will consult shortly on a fee waiver for new applications for authorisations for paediatric use.

The European Commission published a proposal for a Regulation on medicines for paediatric use on 29 September. It contains a requirement that companies provide paediatric data for all new applications for marketing authorisation and for certain changes to existing authorisations. The member states will begin discussing the text of the draft Regulation on October 29 under the Dutch presidency. The United Kingdom will have an opportunity to drive the negotiations forward during its presidency in the second half of 2005. It is anticipated that the Regulation will not be finalised before the end of 2006.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the number of children who (a) died and (b) were injured as a result of treatment with drugs not licensed for the treatment of children in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [194256]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The following table shows the total number of suspected adverse drug reaction (ADR) reports received via the yellow card scheme from 1 January to 31 December for each of the last five years, where the patient age was specified as 18 years or less. We do not have a sub-analysis of reports received in association with medicines not licensed for use in children.

Calendar year	Number of suspected ADR reports received, where patient age specified as 18 years or less	Number of suspected ADR reports received with a fatal outcome, where patient age specified as 18 years or less	Total number of suspected ADR reports received
1999	2,820	29	18,486
2000	12,495	39	36,152
2001	1,809	39	21,467
2002	1,717	37	17,622
2003	2,592	35	19,267

Please note that data held on the adverse drug reactions on-line information tracking (ADROIT) database is dynamic and may be subject to change.

It is important to note that a report of an adverse drug reaction does not necessarily mean that it was caused by the drug. Many factors have to be taken into account in assessing causal relationships including temporal association, the possible contribution of concomitant medication and the underlying disease.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to introduce a system of learning from the yellow card system about the correct dosage and prescribing methods for medicines for children. [194259]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The yellow card scheme is not designed to enable lessons to be drawn about correct dosage or prescribing methods for medicines for children. There are no plans to introduce a system of learning in this context.

Reports of suspected adverse drug reactions (ADRs) are held on a purpose designed computer database known as the adverse drug reactions on-line information tracking (ADROIT) database, which was introduced in 1991. Data held on ADROIT is dynamic and may be subject to change.

The Committee on Safety of Medicines/Medicines and Healthcare products Regulatory Agency (CSM/MHRA) request that all suspected ADRs which occur in children are reported, regardless of whether the medicine is licensed for use in children. This is because the nature and course of illness and ADRs may differ between adults and children. In general, children are not exposed to medicines in clinical trials, many drugs which are routinely used to treat children are not licensed for use in this age group. It is therefore particularly important to focus on the safety of medicines in children.

We are interested in any side effects of medicines as used in clinical practice, regardless of whether they are being used according to the terms of the licence, as described in the product information.

It is important that we are aware of side effects which arise when medicines are used "off label", so that we can act to warn health professionals if necessary. However, the treatment of individual patients remains the responsibility of the doctor.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made on the initiative in the Trent region to encourage reporting of adverse drug reactions in the use of medicines in the treatment of children. [194260]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Between 1998 and 2001 the Medicines Control Agency (MCA) the predecessor of the Medicines and Healthcare products Regulatory Agency (MHRA) funded a pilot scheme in Trent to stimulate reporting of adverse drug reactions (ADRs) to medicines used in the treatment of children. The project had limited success in stimulating reporting. Following on from this and using lessons learned, the MHRA has pursued a wider strategy to enhance existing data collection mechanisms.

This has included working with the British Paediatric Surveillance Unit (BPSU), of the Royal College of Paediatricians and Child Health and working with the Committee on Safety of Medicines Regional Monitoring Centres to promote ADR reporting in children.

The strategy will be taken forward in the European Regulation on medicines for paediatric use. In addition the MHRA is currently leading the development of a European guideline on paediatric pharmacovigilance.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the (a) time spent in hospitals and (b) cost involved in treating a person who has experienced an adverse drug reaction. [194261]

Ms Rosie Winterton: We do not hold data to answer this question. However a recent study, funded by the Medicines and Healthcare products Regulatory Authority and published in the British Medical Journal, provides relevant information.[1]

Of 18,820 patients aged over 16 years admitted to hospital over a six month period and assessed for cause of admission, there were 1,225 admissions judged to be related to an adverse drug reaction (ADR), giving a prevalence of 6.5 per cent. Of these 1,225, the ADR was judged to lead directly to the admission in 80 per cent. of cases. The median bed stay was eight days, accounting for 4 per cent. of the hospital bed capacity. The projected annual cost of such admissions to the NHS is £466 million. The overall fatality was 0.15 per cent. Most reactions were either definitely or possibly avoidable. Drugs most commonly implicated in causing these admissions included low dose aspirin, diuretics, warfarin, and non-steroidal anti-inflammatory drugs other than aspirin, the most common reaction being gastrointestinal bleeding. There was no assessment made of whether the ADR was associated with off-label or unlicensed use.

Mental Health

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many carers of people with mental health problems have been identified by NHS trusts; and how many of those carers have received care plans. [194239]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The information is not collected centrally.

In line with the sixth standard of the national service framework for mental health (1999), all individuals who provide regular and substantial care for a person on care programme approach should have an assessment of their caring, physical and mental health needs, and be given their own written care plans which are implemented in discussion with them.

Up to 700 carer support workers will be in post by the end of the year to increase the breaks available for carers and to strengthen carer support networks. To consolidate the progress that is being made and to build on good practice and research, the Department has published guidance, entitled "Developing Services for Carers and Families of People with Mental Illness", in 2002.

Military Low Flying

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to the Answer of 16 September 2004, Official Report, column 1762W, on military low flying, if he will undertake a study into the health effects of military low flying on people living within military tactical training areas. [193728]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Department has recently set up an expert advisory group to look at the effects on health of environmental noise. A report is expected in 2005.

National Clinical Director

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the 11 individuals appointed to the post of National Clinical Director or its equivalent. [194738]

Ms Rosie Winterton [holding answer 1 November 2004]: The 11 individuals appointed to the post of national clinical director or equivalent are listed in the table.

Appointee
Professor Sir George Albert	Emergency access
Professor Louis Appleby	Mental health
Professor Al Aynsley-Green	Children's services
Dr. Roger Boyle	Heart disease
Mr. Harry Cayton	Patient experience and the public
Dr. David Colin-Thomé	Primary care services
Mrs. Kathryn Hudson	Social care
Professor Ian Philp	Older people's services
Professor Mike Richards	Cancer
Dr. Sue Roberts	Diabetes
Mr. Surinder Sharma	Equality and human rights

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what (a) salaries and (b) payments have been made to the 11 individuals appointed to the post of National Clinical Director or its equivalent since their appointments; and if he will make a statement. [194740]

Ms Rosie Winterton [holding answer 1 November 2004]: Three directors have been appointed as senior civil servants on pay band 2 of the senior civil service scale, which covers the range £73,762 to £155,008. All other directors are seconded from their existing employers, and have retained their previous salaries. Two directors receive compensation for loss of earnings from private practice.

National Programme for IT

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he has taken to ensure that all local service providers are fully insured against failure to deliver the national programme for IT in the NHS. [194894]

Mr. Hutton: The National Programme for Information Technology requires its contractors to maintain insurance policies as required by applicable law and as appropriate for the performance of services of the size and type contracted. These policies remain in force throughout the contract term and for a suitable subsequent period.

Organ Donation

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to the answer of 16 June 2004, Official Report, column 1009W, on organ donation, what research has shown that non heart beating donors may prove to be a good source of lungs for transplantation; and if he will place the research studies in the Library. [193739]

Ms Rosie Winterton: There are a significant number of studies relating to non-heart-beating donors as a source of lungs for transplantation. A selection of these have been placed in the Library.

Over-30-months Scheme

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent discussions he has had with Ministers from the (a) Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs and (b) Treasury on the over-30-months scheme; and when a decision is expected on its cessation. [194197]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Government are considering the Food Standards Agency's advice on the over-30-months rule and an announcement will be made in due course.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from those requesting an end to the over-30-months scheme. [194198]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Written representations have been received from the National Beef Association and from a small number of hon. and right hon. Members on behalf of beef farmers.

Primary Care Trusts (Leeds)

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the expenditure was of primary care trusts in Leeds in (a) 2002–03 and (b) 2003–04; and what the estimated expenditure is for 2004–05. [194618]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Information on expenditure is not available for 2004–05. Expenditure for 2002–03 and 2003–04 is shown in the table.

Expenditure by Leeds primary care trusts (PCTs)

Private Finance Initiatives

Mr. George Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance is provided to procuring authorities within the NHS about the treatment of PFI arrangements in the accounts of public bodies. [193889]

Mr. Hutton: In determining the accounting treatment of private finance initiative (PFI) arrangements, public bodies are required to follow United Kingdom generally accepted accounting practice, including financial reporting standards (FRSs) issued by the Accounting Standards Board (ASB). The specific guidance issued by the ASB for accounting for PFI is "Application Note F to FRS 5—Private Finance Initiative and Similar Contracts," as supplemented by the Treasury-issued "Technical Note No. 1 (Revised)—How to Account for PFI transactions."

Mr. George Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the private finance initiative arrangements in which the Department is engaged; what the total cost of each arrangement is (a) over its lifetime and (b) in each year of its operation; and how the arrangement appears in the Department's public accounts. [193980]

Mr. Hutton: Information showing details of unitary payments for all signed contracts for private finance initiative hospital schemes (PFI) with a capital value of £10 million and over has been placed in the Library. These will be accounted for by each contracting trust. Detailed information is not held centrally for schemes below this capital value.

Individual national health service trust accounts are not currently consolidated within the Department's resource accounts, but those for primary care trusts are, so any assets or liabilities related to their PFI schemes would be reflected in them.

NHS trust accounts are consolidated into the NHS trust summarised accounts.

Silzone Heart Valves

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library copies of the reports which the Medicines and Health Care Products Regulatory Agency has received concerning adverse incidents involving the St. Jude Silzone heart valve. [193088]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Department is unable to provide copies of these reports due to statutory obligations under the terms of the European Medical Devices Directives. Furthermore, such reports contain individual patient information, which cannot be released for reasons of confidentiality. However, extensive action has been taken to warn clinicians and thereby patients implanted with this particular heart valve.

Skipton Fund

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the ease of access for applicants to information about the progress of their applications from the Skipton Fund; and if he will make a statement. [193652]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Since the Skipton Fund became operational on 5 July, a key priority for the fund has been the despatch and process of stage 1 application forms.

Each applicant who has registered with the Skipton Fund may telephone the Skipton Fund helpline to inquire about progress with their application. The Haemophilia Society website, at www.haemophilia.org.uk, provides an update on the range of applications that are being processed.

Smoking

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his Department's estimate is of the number of people who die from smoking-related diseases in each of the last five years. [194199]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The latest data available on smoking related deaths estimated that in the United Kingdom in 1995, smoking caused more than 120,000 deaths of people aged 35 years or over ("The UK smoking epidemic: Deaths in 1995."—Health Education Authority 1998. A copy is available in the Library).

The Health Development Agency is undertaking a similar study, updating this work, estimating the number of smoking attributable deaths. A report will be published in due course.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will carry out an assessment of the Irish ban on smoking in enclosed public spaces. [194200]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Government are aware of the reports from Ireland on the effect of the smoking ban in workplaces, including those from the Office of Tobacco Control. No additional assessment is planned.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many smokers there are in England. [194240]

Miss Melanie Johnson: It is estimated that in England in 2002, 26 per cent. of adults aged 16 and over smoked cigarettes regularly, at least one cigarette a day; this is around 10.3 million adults.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been spent by his Department on prevention of smoking, broken down by (a) advertising and (b) smoking cessation services, in each year since 1997. [194241]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Prior to 1999–2000, the Health Education Authority ran the public education campaign on the dangers of smoking. The Department took over this work in December 1999.

Table 1 shows advertising expenditure on the dangers of smoking from 1999–2000 to date.

	Amount (£ million)
1999–2000	6.18
2000–01	8.97
2001–02	7.79
2002–03	7.88
2003–04	19.36

The national health service stop smoking services, formerly smoking cessation services, were launched in the health action zones (HAZs) in 1999–2000, with services rolled out across the NHS in 2000–01.

Table 2 shows financial allocations to the NHS stop smoking services from 1999–2000 to date.

	Amount (£ million)
1999–2000	[1]10
2000–01	20
2001–02	23
2002–03	23
2003–04	41
2004–05	46

[1] HAZs only.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many people attended the smoking cessation clinic held on the Parliamentary Estate on 2 March; what plans there are to run a quit clinic within the Parliamentary Estate in the near future; and if he will make a statement; [195732]

(2) whether he has received representations from those within the Parliamentary Estate to provide smoking cessation services within the Estate for staff of the House, Members of both Houses and their staff; and if he will make a statement. [195735]

Sir Archy Kirkwood: I have been asked to reply.

The smoking cessation clinic took place on 2 March 2004, and was run in partnership by Cancer Research UK, QUIT and the Occupational Health, Safety and Welfare Service of the Houses of Parliament. The initiative ran with the approval of Parliament's Medical Panel and was timed to help raise the profile of the national No Smoking Day, 10 March 2004. The promotion was open to all passholders of the Parliamentary Estate and just under 100 people attended the clinic (including Members and Peers), either to see a QUIT counsellor or to gain general advice on smoking-related health issues and ways to reduce their risk of developing cancer. Following the event a survey of attendees was carried out and responses indicated that it had been very well received and should be repeated in the future.

Currently information and advice on smoking cessation is available via the Occupational Health, Safety and Welfare Service, including information packs. Plans are in hand also to make this information available via the parliamentary intranet.

No representations about smoking cessation services have been received by the Commission. The Occupational Health, Safety and Welfare Service are planning a schedule of health awareness events for 2005, including a smoking cessation clinic. Discussions are taking place with Cancer Research UK with a view to running one at about the same time as the next national No Smoking Day, 9 March 2005.

Special Advisers

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many unpaid special advisers the Department has; what their names are; and which Government (a) bodies, (b) committees and (c) strategy groups each unpaid adviser (i) belongs to, (ii) advises and (iii) works alongside. [194060]

Ms Rosie Winterton: For information relating to numbers and names of unpaid advisers, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 28 October 2004, Official Report, column 1380W.

Specialist Services (Funding)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what safeguards are in place to ensure that the introduction of payment by results does not indirectly divert resources away from specialist services which are not covered by tariffs. [194362]

Mr. Hutton: Primary care trusts (PCT) are responsible for commissioning health and social care for their local communities. It will be a matter for PCTs, working with those organisations providing treatment, to ensure that all relevant services to meet health care needs are commissioned and funded. PCTs will also be responsible for monitoring activity within service level agreements and taking appropriate action in cases of under- or over-delivery.

Work is continuing to develop the scope of the payment by results scheme and it is expected that all services will be brought into the scheme by 2008–09.

Spinal Surgery (Dorset)

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on the provision of spinal surgery for people living in the Poole and Bournemouth area; [194549]

(2) what provision of spinal surgery is available for people living in the Poole and Bournemouth area. [194550]

Ms Rosie Winterton [holding answer 2 November 2004]: It is the responsibility of primary care trusts (PCTs), in conjunction with their strategic health authorities, to assess the health care needs of their population and commission in-patient services, including specialist facilities such as spinal injury units.

The national health service organisations responsible for planning and commissioning spinal surgery in the Bournemouth and Poole areas are the Bournemouth Teaching PCT, the Poole PCT and the South and East Dorset PCT.

I am informed that these PCTs have adequate and effective commissioning arrangements in place for the provision of prompt and clinically appropriate services, including spinal surgery.

Stair Lifts

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what responsibility the Medicines and Healthcare Products Agency has for ensuring that stair lifts are installed and maintained safely. [R] [195242]

Dr. Ladyman: The Medicines and Healthcare products Regulatory Agency (MHRA), in its role of safeguarding public health and adverse incident investigation, gives advice to persons responsible for the provision of stair lifts on the importance of ensuring that approved installers are used and that maintenance procedures are carried out in accordance with manufacturers instructions. Providers are also advised on the need for a full assessment of the patient and their living environment to ensure safe use.

The MHRA has issued guidance document DB9801, "Medical Device and Equipment Management for Hospital and Community-based Organisations", which contains guidance on maintenance and repair.

Taiwan (World Health Organisation)

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department supports the request by Taiwan to be given observer status at the World Health Organisation; and if he will make a statement. [194631]

Mr. Hutton: As a United Nations specialised agency, the World Health Organisation (WHO) requires statehood as a prerequisite for full membership. At the World Health Assembly last May, the Presidency of the European Union Council expressed the hope that the WHO secretariat and others organising technical and working groups under WHO auspices would show flexibility in finding mechanisms to allow Taiwanese medical and public health officials to participate in these activities. Her Majesty's Government will continue to look at ideas for finding that flexibility.

Waiting Lists/Times

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have been waiting for 12 weeks or more for their first appointment with a consultant at St. George's Hospital, Tooting. [194630]

Dr. Ladyman: The information requested is not available centrally.

At quarter ending June 2004, there were 518 patients waiting 13 weeks and over at St. George's Healthcare National Health Service Trust for their first consultant out-patient appointment following general dental practitioner referral.

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients in Essex are waiting for cardiac surgery. [194926]

Dr. Ladyman: The requested information is collected on a provider basis. There are no patients waiting at providers within the Essex strategic health authority area.

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients in Essex are waiting for (a) knee and (b) hip replacements. [194927]

Dr. Ladyman: The information requested is not held centrally.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Cancer Screening

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the uptake rate is for breast cancer screening in Northern Ireland. [195420]

Angela Smith: The uptake rate for breast screening in Northern Ireland during the three years ending 31 March 2004 was 75 per cent., and is in respect of all women aged 50–64 who were invited for screening.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the extent to which those with learning difficulties in the Province make use of screening programmes for (a) breast and (b) cervical cancer. [194525]

Angela Smith: All women in Northern Ireland who are in the screening age group are routinely invited for breast and cervical screening. Routine data are available to show the uptake and coverage rates for the breast and cervical screening programmes as a whole. Data specifically relating to the number of women with learning difficulties being screened are not routinely collected as there is no single database that will provide a comprehensive list of women with learning difficulties.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the coverage is of the cervical screening programme in Northern Ireland. [195419]

Angela Smith: The cervical screening programme in Northern Ireland covers women aged 20–64. Over the five-year period ending March 2003 (the latest date for which such information is available), 72 per cent. of women in that age group had been screened.

Carers

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans the Government have to introduce a non-means tested payment for carers who stay at home to look after elderly parents and relatives; and if he will make a statement. [195217]

Mr. Spellar: Carer's allowance, which is a non-means tested social security benefit, is already available to carers aged 16 or over who provide regular and substantial care to people, including older people, in receipt of attendance allowance, or the equivalent rates of disability living allowance care component, or an equivalent benefit paid under the war disablement pensions scheme, or the industrial injuries disablement benefit scheme.

Child Care Provision

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether a review of out-of-school play care provision within Northern Ireland has been conducted; and if he will make a statement. [195778]

Angela Smith: Any review of out-of-school hours provision in Northern Ireland will be undertaken within the context of the overall review of "Children First"—the Northern Ireland Childcare Strategy. As this review will be comprehensive in its remit, one of the specific areas it will look at is that of out-of-school hours provision.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he is taking to tackle problems within the Child Support Agency in Northern Ireland. [194613]

Mr. Spellar: The Child Support Agency is continuing to work closely with Electronic Data Systems (EDS) to remove the defects within EDS's computer service and which are causing many of the current delays in processing cases. They have implemented a number of software releases and hardware upgrades that are progressively improving that service. There are plans for further releases later this year and in the early part of next year. EDS are also providing further guidance, advice and coaching to members of teams handling new applications with a view to increasing their productivity even within the constraints of the existing computer service.

Contractors (Security Clearance)

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) contractors, (b) sub-contractors and (c) their employees have (i) been refused and (ii) had withdrawn security clearance to work in prison and security force establishments in each year since 2000, to date. [195051]

Mr. Pearson: Statistics for contractors who have been refused security clearance by the Northern Ireland Prison Service from 2000 to 2004 are as follows.

	Security clearance refusals
2000	4
2001	5
2002	1
2003	9
2004	29

The increase in the number of refused applications is due to some applicants not disclosing all previous convictions.

The PSNI does not vet companies for security clearance but does vet individuals that companies propose to employ on police sites. The following table provides a breakdown of the 453 individuals who have been refused clearance to work on police sites since 2000:

	Security clearance refusals
2000	46
2001	75
2002	62
2003	142
2004 (to 27 October)	128

The PSNI do not keep a separate record of contractor employees whose clearance has been withdrawn.

Statistics are not available separately for contractors, sub-contractors or employees nor for the number of security clearance applications withdrawn. Producing such figures would incur disproportionate costs.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has also advised me that for the year 2004 to date there were 1,519 applications for contractor's clearance on to security force establishments with 42 denials. Figures prior to that year are not readily available and could be provided only at a disproportionate cost.

Crimestoppers

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people called Crimestoppers in Northern Ireland in each of the past four years; and what budget allocation has been made in each year to cover the costs of the scheme. [193554]

Mr. Pearson: The total number of calls made to Crimestoppers in each of the past four years are as follows.

	Total calls
2000	19,126
2001	19,019
2002	16,188
2003	27,262
2004 (until 30 September)	17,663

Crimestoppers is a registered charity and as such its general running costs are not met from public funds although some funds have been made available to finance publicity campaigns.

Crowd Control (Policing Ombudsman)

Mr. Gregory Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland in how many instances in the last year police in Northern Ireland have dealt with crowds of people involved in riotous behaviour or behaviour likely to lead to a breach of the peace resulting in the case being referred to the Policing Ombudsman. [194794]

Mr. Pearson: The Police Ombudsman has advised that the office has recorded 16 incidents in the last 12 months, which they would classify as public order incidents, in relation to which complaints have been received.

Dementia

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on provision of care (a) within the community and (b) in residential or nursing homes for those in the Province with learning disability who suffer dementia. [194635]

Angela Smith: Health and Social Services Boards are expanding and developing services to meet the needs of people with a learning disability who also suffer from dementia. The aim is to support such people in familiar surroundings. In the community, this need is primarily met by psychiatric, nursing, allied health professional and social care within learning disability services. Appropriate day activity places are also being provided to meet the particular needs of individuals.

For people who require nursing or residential care, Boards endeavour to place each individual in a setting most appropriate to their assessed needs.

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he has taken to improve the provision of care for those with learning disability who suffer dementia; and if he will make a statement. [194636]

Angela Smith: Health and Social Services Boards are reviewing their provision for people with learning disability who suffer dementia. This has resulted in awareness training in dementia for staff in learning disability services; the development of specific day care provision and the purchase of some dementia specific residential provision. Further service development will be subject to the availability of additional resources.

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to develop services in the Province so those with learning disability who develop dementia can access mainstream dementia services in their locality. [194637]

Angela Smith: As people with a learning disability may develop dementia at a younger age it is not always appropriate for them to be cared for in settings designed for older people. Those for whom mainstream services are considered to be appropriate can already access local services.

An Expert Working Committee on Issues in Old Age has been established as part of the review of mental health to take forward further work on this issue. As dementia is not exclusive to older people, the Committee has been asked to consider the subject in its broadest sense.

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what change there has been in the prevalence of dementia in the Province among (a) males and (b) females with learning disabilities in the last 10 years. [194638]

Angela Smith: The information requested is not available.

Disabled Patients (Health Service Access)

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps have been taken by each of the Province's health trusts to ensure disabled patients have the same access to services as the rest of the population. [194528]

Angela Smith: Health and social services trusts have been taking a range of action to meet their obligations under the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 (DDA). The action has included reviewing practices, policies and procedures on service provision, providing auxiliary aids or alternative services to improve access, and disability awareness training for staff. Trusts have also undertaken access audits of buildings and identified remedial work has been factored into planned maintenance schedules.

The Department has provided an additional £3.5 million in 2003–04 and a further £5 million in 2004–05 to address DDA remedial work. It has also recently appointed Disability Action to carry out a review of action taken to date by health and social services boards, trusts and agencies to comply with the access provisions of the DDA. A report of the review is expected in May 2005.

Education Funding

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the per pupil funding in each of the education and library board areas in Northern Ireland is in the current financial year. [195238]

Mr. Gardiner: The following information is taken from the Budget statements published by each of the education and library boards:

2004–05 formula funding

Education and library board	Per capita (£)
BELB	2,473
NEELB	2,340
SEELB	2,327
SELB	2,397
WELB	2,437

In addition to Formula Funding allocations, schools also have access to certain earmarked funds and central services provided on their behalf by the education and library boards.

Farm Payments

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many, and what value of farm payments that were due to be paid by 30 June have not yet been paid, broken down by category of farm payment. [195831]

Mr. Pearson: The number and potential value, if paid in full, of farm subsidy claims currently outstanding is as follows:

	Applications unpaid	Value (£ million)
Beef special premium	1,972	0.9
Slaughter premium	1,167	0.6
Suckler cow premium	285	0.3
Extensification payment	1,158	2.5

These applications relate to unresolved cases where there is a query or penalty to be applied. It is not expected, therefore, that all claims will be paid in full.

Fire Tenders

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many of the fire tenders manufactured by Sidhean Teo of Galway and delivered to the Northern Ireland Fire Brigade in July are now in full operational service. [195052]

Angela Smith: All of the fire tenders manufactured by Sidhean Teo of Galway are in full operational service.

Fireworks (Hospital Admissions)

Mr. Gregory Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many admissions to hospitals in Northern Ireland in September and October of each of the last five years were primarily as a result of involvement with, or being in close proximity to, fireworks. [194788]

Angela Smith: Information on the number of admissions to hospitals in Northern Ireland during September and October in each of the last five years as a result of involvement with, or being in close proximity to, fireworks is not available. However, information on the number of patients reporting to A&E Departments and Minor Injuries Units with injuries from fireworks and those admitted to hospital, over a selected 4–5 week period covering the end of October and start of November (Halloween period) is available and is detailed in the following table.

	Number of patients reporting to A&E/Minor Injuries Units during Halloween period	Number admitted after reporting to A&E/Minor Injuries Units during Halloween period
1999	139	17
2000	100	6
2001	136	19
2002	38	6
2003	45	5

Notes:

1. Figures do not include injuries from fireworks outside the survey period and will not include injuries, which were not sufficiently serious to warrant attendance at an A&E Department or Minor Injuries Unit.

2. Numbers admitted included those admitted to the hospital attended and those transferred to another hospital.

Higher Education Access

Mr. Gregory Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans there are to ensure greater access to higher education by people living in East Londonderry constituency. [194790]

Mr. Gardiner: The Department for Employment and Learning is committed to improving access to higher education to people throughout Northern Ireland including in East Londonderry, and in particular those groups who are currently underrepresented.

Measures to improve access include a marked expansion in domestic HE provision. Since 1998, DEL has allocated the University of Ulster some 1,367 additional full-time equivalent (FTE) student places. It is for the university, as an autonomous body, to determine the distribution of places among its various campuses including the Coleraine campus. The university also has the flexibility to accommodate as many part-time and post-graduate students as it wishes.

There has also been significant growth in higher education provision delivered in the further education sector. One of the main purposes behind the expansion of higher education courses delivered in further education colleges is to widen access to higher education for mature students, students wanting to study part-time, students who want to study close to home, disabled students and students who do not have traditional qualifications.

In addition, a number of measures have been introduced to widen access to higher education by disadvantaged groups. These include: a package of student support measures to assist students from low income families; a widening access premium for students from disadvantaged backgrounds; and a widening access premium for students with disabilities and capital funding to assist the universities improve access for disabled students.

The Department has also provided special project funding specifically aimed at allowing the universities to carry out "outreach" activities in schools with traditionally low levels of participation in HE in order to raise the aspiration, motivation and academic performance of pupils to progress to higher education. These outreach activities include the tutoring of pupils, "taster" programmes, university open days, and summer schools. Decisions on where outreach activities take place are a matter for the universities.

Hospital Deaths

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to introduce more rigorous methods of investigating hospital deaths in the Province; and if he will make a statement. [194642]

Angela Smith: A Safety in Health Care Steering Group was established by the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety following the publication of the consultation document entitled "Best Practice, Best Care" in April 2001. In July it issued interim guidance (HSS (PPM) 06/04) to the HPSS and special agencies on the reporting and management of serious adverse incidents.

The Department has also established a multi-agency group comprising departmental officials and representatives from the Police Service of Northern Ireland, the Health and Safety Executive (HSE), and the coroners' service to develop a memorandum of understanding for the investigation of death and serious incidents in hospitals. This will take account of a recent memorandum of understanding issued for consultation in England and Wales: "Investigating patient safety incidents (unexpected death or serious untoward harm): a protocol for liaison and effective communications between the NHS, Association of Chief Police Officers and HSE", which can be viewed at: http://www.dh.gov.uk/assetRoot/04/08/48/61/04084861.pdf.

MMR Vaccinations

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the rate of uptake of the MMR vaccination is among children aged 24 months in Northern Ireland. [195418]

Angela Smith: The rate of uptake of the MMR vaccination for children aged 24 months in Northern Ireland is shown for the four quarters of the financial year 2003–04 in the following table:

Vaccination against measles, mumps, rubella (MMR)

	Percentage
June 2003	87.8
September 2003	87.2
December 2003	88.9
March 2004	87.6

Note:

The uptake rate is in respect of children who reached their second birthday during the relevant quarter. The information is published on a quarterly basis.

Intravenous Fluid Management

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action he has taken to (a) improve knowledge of intravenous fluid management and (b) prevent deaths of children from dilutional hyponatraemia in hospitals in the Province and if he will make a statement. [194641]

Angela Smith: There is undergraduate teaching on fluids and electrolytes and the topic of fluid management is included during the induction training of junior doctors. Also the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety has issued guidance on the prevention of hyponatraemia in children (March 2002) and the Clinical Resource Efficiency Support Team (CREST) has also issued guidance on the management of hyponatraemia in adults (June 2003).

The guidance issued by the Department in March 2002 stresses that hyponatraemia can be extremely serious and potentially fatal. The guidance has been prepared as an A2 sized poster for display in all hospital units where children may receive IV fluids or oral rehydration.

Learning Disabilities (Health Provision)

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps are being taken to ensure that those with learning disabilities make use of screening for (a) breast and (b) cervical cancer. [194532]

Angela Smith: Each of the four Health Boards in Northern Ireland is actively involved in health promotion activities within their Board area. Staff are continuously working to increase awareness and educate all women about breast and cervical screening with particular focus being placed on disadvantaged areas, ethnic minority groups, women with learning/literacy difficulties and individual groups with special needs. Specialist literature for women with learning difficulties has been produced by the National Screening Committee. Plans are also in place to produce a DVD aimed at women with learning difficulties. A partnership approach has been developed with Action Cancer with the provision of special screening clinics for women with learning difficulties. Tailored training and education programmes have been introduced for GP's, Action Cancer and Ulster Cancer Foundation personnel and Community Learning Disability Nurses; information sessions have been introduced for clients, carers, staff and supporters in Day/Adult Centres.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many individuals there are in the Province with a learning disability. [194521]

Angela Smith: Information on the total number of people with a learning disability is not available, as many people with learning disabilities are not in contact with healthcare providers. However, provisional figures for the year 2003–04 indicate there were 9,692 people in the Learning Disability Programme of Care who were in contact with social services.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what role those with learning disabilities, and their carers and families, have in the planning and commissioning of health services in the Province. [194522]

Angela Smith: Each of the four Health and Social Services Boards has a strategy for the development of learning disability services in their areas. These have been developed through consultation with people with a learning disability and their carers.

In a number of Health and Social Services Trust areas there are groups of people with a learning disability and carers who are consulted on local service development. Local advocacy services are being developed, as resources permit, for those with communication difficulties to enhance this process.

The Learning Disability Working Committee, which is reviewing learning disability policy and services, has a person with a learning disability and a carer in its membership. It has also established two reference groups, one for people with a learning disability and the other for carers, to inform its work. The Committee has consulted widely with people with a learning disability and their carers through public meetings staged at venues around the Province.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proportion of those with learning difficulties in the Province are registered with a general practitioner. [194526]

Angela Smith: Information on the proportion of those with learning difficulties in the Province registered with a general practitioner is not available centrally.

Everyone who is resident in Northern Ireland has an equal right to register with a general practitioner. However, those with severe learning disabilities who require dedicated facilities and are resident within a hospital are not registered with a general practitioner as their needs are covered by the relevant Trust.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what training in disability awareness is provided to staff by health trusts in the Province; [194529]

(2) what training on learning disability staff receive from health trusts in the Province; and whether individuals with learning disabilities are involved in any aspect of such training. [194530]

Angela Smith: All trusts provide induction training to staff covering disability awareness. In addition, mandatory, role specific and specialist training is provided to enable staff deliver the needs of user groups. Organisations such as the Royal National Institute for the Deaf and the Royal National Institute for the Blind are involved in the construction and delivery of training programmes. Staff can also avail of a wide range of other training opportunities provided by in-service training units and other education providers.

I am satisfied that trusts are acutely aware of and are pro-active in recognising their obligations in providing appropriate training for staff who care for users with learning and other disabilities. Where possible, trusts involve disabled people in identifying and delivering appropriate staff training.

Lucy Crawford

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether a police investigation has begun into the death of Lucy Crawford, which was broadcast on 21 October. [194801]

Mr. Pearson: A Senior Investigating Officer was appointed to carry out an investigation into the death of Lucy Crawford prior to the UTV insight programme on 21 October 2004.

Medical Schools

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many medical school places there are in the Province. [192871]

Mr. Gardiner: For the 2004–05 academic year, 844 Home and EU full-time undergraduate students have been awarded places in the medical school at Queen's University, Belfast. This reflects numbers on all five years of the degree programme in medicine.

Organ Retention

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps have been taken to assist those in the Province who wish to pursue compensation following the retention without permission of organs of their deceased relatives; and if he will make a statement. [194639]

Angela Smith: Since July 2003 my Department has held meetings with the relevant boards, trusts and legal advisers to facilitate a consistent and co-ordinated approach to handling claims for compensation that have arisen from the removal, retention and disposal of human organs at hospital post mortem examinations in Northern Ireland. Compensation claims in respect of coroners' post mortems are a matter for the NI Court Service.

It has been agreed that the possibility of using Alternative Dispute Resolution (ADR) in as many cases as possible should be explored with claimants' solicitors, but it is accepted that ADR might not suit all claimants and those who wish to proceed by litigation remain free to do so.

Boards and trusts have agreed to actively seek a speedy solution to as many cases as possible. In addition, my Department has continued to keep the Relatives' Reference Group apprised of any developments in relation to the handling of compensation claims.

Patient Confidentiality

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland under what circumstances doctors in the Province may refuse to provide evidence in court during cases regarding patients who were under their care; and if he will make a statement. [194634]

Angela Smith: In almost all respects the duty of a doctor in court proceedings is that of any citizen. They are required to provide evidence to help a court reach its decision. They are not obliged to answer questions that may be considered incriminating. Further, they must maintain patient confidentiality. Confidential matters may be disclosed on the order of the court. There must be a clear legal basis for a doctor refusing to provide evidence, if so ordered.

Pensioners

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will take steps to allow those over 65 (a) to claim exemption from Vehicle Excise Duty and (b) access to the Motability Scheme. [194949]

Mr. Spellar: Entitlement to the higher rate mobility component of disability living allowance provides access to (a) Vehicle Excise Duty exemption and (b) the Motability scheme as part of the assistance focused on people who are severely disabled early, or relatively early, in life and who therefore face significantly more difficulties than those who become disabled and develop mobility problems after the age of 65. Attendance allowance, which provides help with the disability-related extra costs of people who experience the onset of disability after age 65, is part of the wide range of support that the Government makes available to older people. There are no plans to change these arrangements.

Previous Convictions (Disclosure)

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to extend to Northern Ireland changes in the legal system that would permit juries in child sex and theft cases to be made aware of previous similar convictions of defendants; and if he will make a statement. [195106]

Mr. Spellar: The Criminal Justice Act 2003 contains provisions in sections 98 to 110 to allow evidence of a defendant's previous convictions and other misconduct to be admitted at trial where these are relevant to the case and provided their value is greater than the risk that such evidence might unduly prejudice the fairness of the trial. These sections of the Act already apply to Northern Ireland. I am currently considering the Home Secretary's proposals for the first categories of offence to be covered by the Act with a view to commencement of the evidence of bad character provisions for Northern Ireland in April 2005.

Special Advisers

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many unpaid special advisers the Department has; what their names are; and which Government (a) bodies, (b) committees and (c) strategy groups each unpaid adviser (i) belongs to, (ii) advises and (iii) works alongside. [194059]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 28 October 2004, Official Report, column 1380W.

School Expulsions

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many children were expelled from (a) secondary schools and (b) grammar schools in Northern Ireland in the past five years, broken down by education and library board area. [195237]

Mr. Gardiner: The information sought is not available in the form requested. However, the number of pupils in each education and library board area in Northern Ireland who have been expelled in each of the past five years is as follows:

	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02	2002–03
BELB	6	19	5 (5)	7 (7)	18 (18)
WELB	18	25	19 (19)	16 (16)	12 (10)
NEELB	29	20	29 (29)	18 (18)	17 (16)
SEELB	6	3	11 (11)	12 (12)	16 (16)
SELB	14	16	16 (14)	23 (23)	7 (7)
Total	73	83	80 (78)	76 (76)	70 (67)

Note:

Figures in brackets denote the number of pupils expelled from post-primary schools. The Department does not have this breakdown prior to 2000–01.

CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

Barristers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what the dining requirements necessary to become a barrister are; what plans he has to remove these requirements; and if he will make a statement. [193589]

Mr. Lammy: From the beginning of the 1997–98 academic year the dining requirement forming part of the criteria for call to the Bar was changed. Students are now required to complete 12 qualifying units in order to be called to the Bar. This can be achieved in a number of ways, including attendance at education days and dining sessions (which normally include a lecture). Admission to an Inn is required before registration on the Bar Vocational Course, although many undergraduates join before this stage in order to participate in the activities, use the library, or start dining. At present the Bar have no plans to alter these arrangements. It is possible, though by no means certain, that following the Government's consideration of Sir David Clementi's report, that changes will be made to the training and education requirements.

Correspondence

Mr. Amess: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs when he will reply to the hon. Member for Southend, West's letter of 1 September, forwarded to his office from Her Majesty the Queen's Private Secretary, Mr. Montazir Khan; and if he will make a statement. [195836]

Mr. Lammy: My officials wrote to the hon. Member for Southend, West on 15 October requesting further documentation. We have yet to receive a reply. However, to avoid further delay, I wrote to the hon. Member on 1 November on the basis of the documentation we currently hold. I apologise for the delay.

Court of Protection

Paul Holmes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs in how many cases since 1974 a receiver has been appointed by the Court of Protection. [195685]

Mr. Lammy: There are presently 19,964 cases under administration where a receiver has been appointed by the Court of Protection.

There are also 3,869 cases where the client has died and case closure proceedings are not complete and 4,991 cases where an application has been made but no receiver has yet been appointed.

In the financial year 2003–04, 6,854 receivers were appointed by the court.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Benefit Claimant Appointees

Paul Holmes: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many benefit claimants there are for whom an appointee has been appointed under Regulation 33 of the Claims and Payments regulations. [195684]

Mr. Pond: The information requested is not available. The only available information is for the number of pension credit and income support claimants with appointees.

At the end of February 2004 there were 174,700 pension credit appointees.

At the end of February 2004 there were 118,200 income support appointees.

Source: IAD Information Centre

Paul Holmes: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what checks are undertaken on an individual who has applied to be an appointee to make and receive benefits on behalf of a claimant. [195686]

Mr. Pond: An officer experienced in appointee work will interview the prospective appointee to obtain information from them to establish whether they are an appropriate and suitable person to act.

The officer will also advise the prospective appointee of the roles and responsibilities of the appointment and confirm that they understand these and are willing to undertake them before any appointment is made. They will be asked to sign a declaration that they will act in the best interests of the claimant.

The prospective appointee will also be advised that the appointment can be revoked.

Paul Holmes: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what checks are undertaken by staff in his Department to ascertain whether a claimant lacks the capacity to manage his benefit income. [195687]

Mr. Pond: A visiting officer, experienced in appointee work, undertakes an independent assessment of a customer's ability to manage his or her own affairs based on departmental guidelines. In cases where there is doubt, the opinion of a suitably qualified professional may be sought, for example a social worker, community psychiatric nurse or general practitioner.

Benefit Processing

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions on what date he expects benefit processing will move from Edgware benefit office to another London location; what the other London location will be; and if he will make a statement. [194848]

Jane Kennedy: The administration of Jobcentre Plus is a matter for the Chief Executive of Jobcentre Plus, David Anderson. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from David Anderson to Mr. Andrew Dismore, dated 3 November 2004:

As Jobcentre Plus is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question concerning the movement of benefit processing from Edgware Social Security Office.

On 16 September the Secretary of State announced that, subject to further detailed planning, Jobcentre Plus benefit processing would be centralised in 81 sites by 2008.

As part of this process our intention is that the benefit processing work for North London, currently processed in five sites including Edgware, will be moved to Stratford in stages over the first three quarters of next year.

I hope this is helpful.

Consultants

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will list the contracts awarded by his Department to consultants in each of the last five years, stating in each case (a) the name of the consulting company, (b) the value of the contract and (c) the purpose for which the contract was awarded; and if he will make a statement. [191736]

Jane Kennedy: The Department for Work and Pensions was established in June 2001.

The information from June 2001 to March 2004 is not available in the format requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Housing Benefit

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many convictions for fraud regarding the payment of housing benefit there have been in the last 12 months. [194150]

Mr. Pond: In the 12 months up to 30 September 2004, the total number of convictions for fraud regarding housing benefit and council tax benefit was 4,135. Information is not available on the number of convictions for housing benefit only.

Information and Communication Specialists

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how much the Department spent on outside information technology and communication specialist consultants and engineers in the 2003–04 financial year. [191914]

Maria Eagle: The Department for Work and Pensions spent £139.66 million on outside information technology and communication specialist consultants and engineers in the 2003–04 financial year.

Jobcentre Plus Offices

David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what advice on debt management is available from Jobcentre Plus offices. [194501]

Jane Kennedy: The administration of Jobcentre Plus is a matter for the Chief Executive of Jobcentre Plus, David Anderson. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from David Anderson to Mr. David Taylor, dated 3 November 2004:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question concerning what advice on debt management is available to people from Jobcentre Plus offices. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of Jobcentre Plus.

Jobcentre Plus has distributed to offices a short leaflet produced by DWP which provides basic information on debt and dealing with it, the benefits of seeking advice and where to obtain it. We have also updated our guidance for Personal Advisers to emphasise the importance of referring customers with debt problems to debt advice provision, and distributed debt fact sheets produced by the Social Exclusion Unit to all districts.

Customers in receipt of Jobseekers Allowance (JSA) can receive support relating to debt problems via the New Deal for Young People and New Deal 25 plus programmes. When required, New Deal Personal Advisers have the discretion to secure suitable provision to enable customers to receive debt counselling and advice.

Jobcentre Plus is also making £3 million available this financial year and a further £3 million in 2005–06 to buy in additional advice, if needed, on debt to help some of our most vulnerable customers return to work. This scheme will enable lone parents, other benefit recipients (excepting those in receipt of Jobseekers Allowance), and partners of benefit recipients to get help where debt is proving to be a barrier to taking-up work.

I hope this is helpful.

New Deal

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many people have gained work through the New Deal for Lone Parents in (a) the Edinburgh West constituency, (b) the City of Edinburgh local authority area, (c) Scotland and (d) the UK. [194989]

Jane Kennedy: The available information is in the following table.

Number of people who have gained work through the New Deal for Lone Parents

	Number
Edinburgh West constituency	320
City of Edinburgh local authority	2,250
Scotland	30,620
Great Britain	276,690

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many people are participating in the New Deal for Lone Parents in (a) the Edinburgh West constituency, (b) the City of Edinburgh local authority area, (c) Scotland and (d) the UK. [194990]

Jane Kennedy: The available information is in the following table.

Number of people participating in the New Deal for Lone Parents at the end of June 2004

	Number
Edinburgh West constituency	120
City of Edinburgh local authority	930
Scotland	10,910
Great Britain	106,670

David Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many people in Telford have secured work through the New Deal for lone parents. [195426]

Jane Kennedy: 730 lone parents in Telford have gained work through the New Deal for lone parents since the start of the programme in October 1998.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Argentina

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) whether, under the terms of the Ottawa Convention on landmines, there is an obligation on the Argentine Government to provide funding for landmine clearance in the Falkland Islands; and what obligation for landmine clearance in the Falklands rests with the (a) United Kingdom Government and (b) Argentinean Government; [195588]

(2) what progress has been made under the Memorandum of Understanding between the United Kingdom and the Argentine Government on landmine clearance in the Falkland Islands; [195589]

(3) which Minister will represent the United Kingdom at the Ottawa Convention Review in Kenya in November; [195590]

(4) what funding the Government have made available for landmine clearance in the Falkland Islands since the Ottawa Convention came into force; [195591]

(5) how many landmines were lifted in the Falkland Islands during the periods (a) 1997 to 2001 and (b) 2001 to 2004; [195592]

(6) what progress has been made in clearing landmines in the Falkland Islands since the Ottawa Convention was signed in 1997. [195593]

Mr. Straw: Since 1999 and the entry into force of the Ottawa Convention no funds have been specifically dedicated to the clearing of landmines in the Falklands Islands. Given the unpredictability of the environment, landmine clearance in the Falklands is particularly hazardous. Since August 1982 the landmines have been clearly marked and have very little impact on the local community. When landmines do surface they are cleared by the Explosive Ordnance Disposal teams based on the islands as part of their duties. Between 1997–2001, 156 mines were discovered and destroyed in this way. Between 2001–04, 268 mines were discovered and destroyed.

Under the Ottawa Convention, the obligation to clear all the landmines by 2009 falls upon the United Kingdom. States Parties in a position to do so are obliged to provide assistance for mine clearance and related activities.

On a bilateral basis, the United Kingdom and the Argentine Government signed a Joint Statement in 1999 and under the heading of Confidence-Building it was noted that:

> "the two Governments will continue to work together to evaluate the feasibility and cost of clearing the land mines still present in the Falklands Islands."

Subsequently, an Exchange of Notes dated 11 October 2001, detailed how the UK and Argentina should proceed on the landmine issue. It included a provision for the establishment of a Joint Working Group, the first meeting of which took place in Buenos Aires on 3–4 December 2001. The second meeting was in London, on 26–27 October 2004.

At the 2004 meeting a list of action points was agreed, including the need for the preparation of a draft work programme and draft budget for a Feasibility Study, both of which are to be considered at the next Joint Working Group, due to be held in Buenos Aires during the second quarter of 2005.

The composition of the UK delegation to the Ottawa Convention Review Conference has not been decided. It is likely that it will be at senior official level.

Bermuda

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the EU savings directive will be implemented in Bermuda. [195480]

Mr. Rammell: At the European Council of Santa Maria de Feira in June 2000 it was agreed that before the savings directive could be adopted and implemented, reassurances were required from relevant dependent and associated territories (including the Channel Islands, the Isle of Man, and the Caribbean Overseas Territories) for the adoption of the same measures, and from key third countries (Switzerland, Andorra, Liechtenstein, Monaco and San Marino) for the adoption of equivalent measures.

In June 2004 the member states agreed that the directive would take effect from 1 July 2005, on the basis that assurances had been given by all of the relevant third countries and dependent and associated territories that they would be in a position to apply measures equivalent to (in the case of third countries), or the same as (in the case of territories), those provided for by the directive from 1 July 2005.

Bilateral agreements between the relevant dependent or associated territories and the member states have been prepared so as to apply to each of them the measures under the directive from 1 July 2005.

Bermuda is not included in the list of relevant dependent or associated territories agreed at the Feira European Council.

British Overseas Territories

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list for each British overseas territory the population and the number of elected representatives at the highest local level of responsible government. [195429]

Mr. Rammell: The details are as follows:

	Population	Elected representatives
Anguilla	[1]12,200	7
Bermuda	[2]62,059	36
British Virgin Islands	[1]21,333	13
Cayman Islands	[1]43,103	18

China

Mr. Dhanda: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Ambassador of the People's Republic of China in connection with arrests of Christians in Kaifeng City and Sujiazhuang on 6 August and what representations he has made to the Chinese Government about expanding religious freedom. [195545]

Mr. Rammell: We are aware of the arrests of Christians in Kaifeng City and Sujiazhuang and are monitoring events closely.

I raised human rights concerns with Assistant Foreign Minister Li Hui during my visit to China in October this year.

Foreign and Commonwealth Office officials raised concerns about religious freedom, including the mass arrests at Kaifeng City and the arrest of 23 members of the Baoding diocese, with Wang Zuo'an, Deputy Director General of the State Administration for Religious Affairs, during his visit to the UK in September.

We also raised religious freedom at the May round of the UK-China Human Rights Dialogue and made clear that the prohibition of some religious/spiritual groups and the legal restrictions on others are not acceptable.

Departmental Press Officers

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many press officers are employed in his Department; and how many were employed in each year since 1996–97. [195358]

Mr. Alexander [holding answer 1 November 2004]: There are currently 17 Press Officers working in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office's Press Office. For previous years, I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Mr. Rammell) to the hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Laws) on 25 March 2004, Official Report, column 1040W.

Iraq

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contingency plans his Department has in place in the event of the elections in Iraq not taking place in January 2005; what later date has been considered as a possible election date; and if he will make a statement on the forthcoming elections. [195153]

Mr. Straw: We fully support the Iraqi Interim Government's commitment to hold elections in January 2005. All the indications are that a large majority of Iraqis are eager to vote in a free election for the first time in their history. The Independent Electoral Commission of Iraq (IECI) supported by the UN are still working to the January timetable for elections. We are doing all we can to support the IECI and the UN to ensure that elections take place on time, as provided for in UNSCR 1556.

Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his reply of 26 October 2004, Official Report, column 1177W, if he will break down the development of Iraq's national economy, referred to in paragraph 3, page 3 of the ISG, Regime Finance and Procurement, by (a) industry, (b) banking and (c) services; what the value was of each category; and who the financial partners were of such activities. [195194]

Mr. Rammell: The report from the Iraq Survey Group points to the former Iraqi regime implementing strategies, policies and methods to try to terminate sanctions and generate illicit revenue, including under the Oil for Food Programme. We are unable to assess the value of illicit funds generated by each of the banking, industrial and service sectors. However, under the terms of Security Council resolution 1483 (22 May 2003), more than $1 billion of former Iraqi regime assets have so far been frozen internationally and transferred to the Development Fund for Iraq, for the benefit of the Iraqi people.

There have been widespread allegations that a number of individuals and entities around the world were complicit in corruption under the programme, for their own benefit and the benefit of the former regime. However, it would be premature to comment on the allegations and the financial outcome of any possible corruption until the independent inquiry appointed by the UN Secretary-General has reported its findings.

Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his reply of 26 October 2004, Official Report, column 1177W, if he will list those import items, prohibited under UN sanctions, referred to in paragraph 2, page 3 of the ISG Regime Finance and Procurement, by (a) type, (b) quantity and (c) value; and if he will list those trade intermediaries involved in these activities. [195195]

Mr. Rammell: Under the terms of United Nations Security Council resolutions implementing sanctions and the Oil for Food Programme, Iraq was only permitted to import items approved by the UN Security Council's Iraq Sanctions Committee. The report from the Iraq Survey Group points to the former Iraqi regime implementing strategies to procure illicit goods. We are unable to assess precisely the type, quantity and value of those goods.

There have been widespread allegations that a number of individuals and entities around the world were complicit in corruption under the programme and through smuggling, for their own benefit and the benefit of the former regime. However, it would be premature to comment on the allegations until the independent inquiry appointed by the UN Secretary-General has reported its findings.

Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) pursuant to his answer of 26 October 2004, Official Report, column 1177W, whether he was informed in July 2000 of claims by the Iraqi Ba'athist paper, Al Thawrah, of victory over UN sanctions; and when he urged the UN to take steps to restore sanctions; [195196]

(2) whether he was informed in August 2001 of the statement by Iraqi Foreign Minister Sabri that UN sanctions efforts had collapsed; and when he urged the UN to take steps to restore sanctions. [195199]

Mr. Rammell: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office was aware of a number of claims that sanctions were failing. The United Kingdom continually worked hard at the United Nations Security Council to limit Iraq's efforts to erode sanctions, and ensure the effective implementation of the Oil for Food Programme. As the Iraq Survey Group reported, sanctions were successful in curbing Iraq's ability to import weapons and technology. Sanctions were maintained against Iraq from 1990 until the adoption of resolution 1483 on 22 May 2003, when economic sanctions were lifted and the arms embargo was left in place.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps will be taken to protect polling stations in Iraq from suicide bombers. [195216]

Mr. Rammell: The Iraqi Ministry of the Interior is responsible for election security in Iraq. The Iraqi Police Service will provide appropriate security to polling stations, supported if necessary by the Iraqi National Guard. The Multinational Force will continue to support the Iraqi Interim Government in providing area security in order to assist the political process as mandated by UNSCR 1546.

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how the (a) elections and (b) political parties in Iraq will be organised to meet the constitutional requirement for 25 per cent. of seats to be held by women. [187618]

Mr. Rammell: The UK strongly supports the constitutional requirement for 25 per cent. of the seats in the Transitional National Assembly to be held by women. The Iraqi Electoral Law (CPA Order 96) stipulates (Section 4, Paragraph 3) that,

> "No fewer than one out of the first three candidates on the [electoral] list must be woman; no fewer than two out of the first six candidates on the list must be woman; and so forth until the end of the list".

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Compensation (Destroyed Animals)

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what estimate she has made of the percentage of compensation payments for animals destroyed because of (a) suspected foot and mouth and (b) bovine tuberculosis which may have been paid at above the level of average market values in each of the past five years. [192881]

Mr. Bradshaw: No estimate has been made of what percentage of the compensation payments for animals compulsorily slaughtered because of FMD in 2001 were above the level of average market values. The average value for each type of livestock increased during the epidemic, peaked in May 2001 and gradually declined. No compensation for FMD was paid in each of the other four years.

For bovine tuberculosis it is not possible to provide a meaningful assessment of the percentage of animals that might have received compensation over and above "average market values". However, there is evidence to show that the provision of above market value compensation has been a significant problem in England and Wales, particularly since the outbreaks of foot and mouth disease in 2001. This is one of the reasons why my Department will shortly be consulting stakeholders on a proposed new compensation system.

Composting/Recycling

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what estimate she has made of the number of households in (a) Lancashire and (b) Chorley which (i) composted and (ii) recycled in the last period for which figures are available. [194623]

Mr. Morley: Local authorities do not currently report on the number of households participating in recycling and composting schemes, or the numbers that carry out home composting. The 2002–03 Municipal Waste Management Survey established that 14.5 per cent. of household waste in England was recycled, about one third of which was centrally composted. Chorley borough council recycled and composted 16 per cent. of household waste, and Lancashire county council 20 per cent. The Government's Best Value Performance Indicators for local authorities show that in 2002–03, 86 per cent. of the population of Chorley were served by a kerbside collection scheme, or lived within 1 km of a recycling centre. The regional average for Lancashire was 80.3 per cent.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many UK households are recycling and composting; and whether the national target is being met. [194165]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 1 November 2004]: Waste is a devolved issue. In England, the Government have set national targets to recycle or compost 17 per cent. of household waste by 2003–04 and 25 per cent. by 2005–06. The latest (2001) Defra survey of public attitudes to quality of life and to the environment found that in England, paper was recycled on a regular basis by 53 per cent. of households, glass by 42 per cent. cans by 30 per cent., plastic by 23 per cent. and kitchen waste by 20 per cent. Local authorities do not report on the number of households participating in recycling schemes or on the numbers that carry out home composting, but the 2002–03 Municipal Waste Management Survey identified that 14.5 per cent. of household waste was recycled in England, about one third of which was centrally composted. Audited figures for 2003–04 are expected in December.

Cormorants

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many licences to shoot cormorants have been (a) applied for and (b) granted since her Department announced its change of policy on obtaining such licences on 14 September. [194341]

Mr. Bradshaw: The announcement of new measures to help alleviate cormorant predation problems at fisheries was made on 16 September 2004.

Up until 22 October, the Department has received 195 applications for a licence to kill cormorants to prevent serious damage to fisheries. Of these, we have granted 104.

Sir Paul Beresford: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs pursuant to the answer of 20 October 2004, Official Report, columns 695–96W, on cormorants, what non-lethal alternatives to culling she is considering to control the population of cormorants. [194810]

Mr. Bradshaw [holding answer 1 November 2004]: There are a number of non-lethal methods that can be used to control cormorants. These include the use of enclosures, scarers, roost management, stocking control and fish refuges. Further details may be found in a technical advice note:

www.defra.gov.uk/corporate/rds/publications/technical/TAN 14.pdf

Sir Paul Beresford: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs pursuant to the answer of 20 October 2004, Official Report, columns 695–96W, on cormorants, what advice her Department has received from the Moran Committee regarding deterrents to predation by cormorants of fish stocks. [194812]

Mr. Bradshaw [holding answer 1 November 2004]: The Moran Committee was set up in 1997 to provide a co-ordinated platform of organisations to address angling and fisheries issues. The Committee has recently forged links with other nature conservation groups such as the Environment Agency, English Nature and the RSPB in order to identify common ground on the bird predation issue and to ensure that a reasonable balance is struck between the need to conserve both fish and birds. The Group has also established a useful dialogue with Defra and CEFAS.

The Committee has provided advice through producing leaflets such as "Cormorants—The Facts" and "Protecting your Fisheries from Cormorants". Further information may be found on www.cormorants.info

Departmental Publications (Accessibility)

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many and what proportion of publications issued by her Department are available in (a) Braille, (b) autoprint, (c) large print and (d) easy read format. [194295]

Alun Michael: Defra's policy is to follow best practice on diversity and to ensure that publications meet guidelines on type size, font clarity and general ease of readability.

We make all publications available on demand in Braille, large print format and audio. During the past year, we have fulfilled 20 requests for Braille publications and one for audio.

Eastern Irish Sea Fishery

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) whether she plans to seek EU Commission approval for Fleetwood fishermen to use 110mm mesh in cod ends in the plaice fishery in the Eastern Irish Sea while retaining their full allocation of 22 days at sea per month; [192946]

(2) what representations she has received from Fleetwood fishermen on effects of the operation of the Cod Recovery Plan on the plaice fishery in the Eastern Irish Sea; and what action she has taken in response. [192953]

Mr. Bradshaw: I have met representatives of the Fleetwood fishing industry on several occasions this year. They expressed concerns that the EU days at sea scheme did not allow them sufficient days to use their preferred 100mm plus nets to target plaice and that they were therefore forced to use smaller mesh nets (which attracted a higher number of days) and thus increase their catches of undersized and juvenile fish. My officials explained that the scheme did, in fact, allow them to continue with their normal fishing patterns and offered to provide individual guidance, where required, to the fishermen concerned—which was subsequently taken up. Separately, we are discussing with the commission potential improvements to the operation of the scheme for the benefit of fishermen generally.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the (a) quota allocations and (b) landings for cod were for the Fleetwood over 10 m fishing fleet in the last five years. [192949]

Mr. Bradshaw: UK fish quotas are managed by the allocation of shares of the national quota to fishermen's producer organisations for them to manage through the year. The quota allocations made to the Fleetwood Producer Organisation and their actual landings of cod in the years requested are given as follows. These data include activity by all vessels based in Fleetwood of over 10m overall length.

EU Committees

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many times during the Greek presidency of the EU the Committee (a) on the conservation of natural habitats and of wild fauna and flora (Habitat) and (b) for the protection of species of wild fauna and flora by regulating trade met; when and where these meetings took place; which UK Government expert was present at each meeting; what (i) technical and (ii) financial issues were raised by the UK Government expert at each meeting; what recommendations the Committee produced during that period; what actions were (A) proposed and (B) taken by (1) the EU and (2) the UK Government as a result of the Committee's recommendations; and if she will make a statement. [193398]

Mr. Bradshaw: (a) The Committee on the Conservation of Natural Habitats and of Wild Fauna and Flora (the Habitats Committee) met once during the period of the Greek presidency, in Brussels on 10 March 2003.

UK representation consisted of two officials from my Department, one official from the Scottish Executive and a scientific expert from the Joint Nature Conservation Committee. The main agenda items considered were:

Establishment of the Natura 2000 network

Projects to Co-finance under Life Nature (opinion of the Committee)

Points of Information/Progress Update (including Marine Working Group, Article 12 Working Group, Monitoring, Large Carnivores, Enlargement, Financing, Communication Issues, Article 16 and 17 Reporting and Compensation)

At this meeting the UK representative provided technical information regarding progress on the submission of the UK list of Natura 2000 sites for the Atlantic region. In discussions concerning the Report on the Financing of Natura 2000 the UK representative highlighted the importance of marine areas for the cost estimates of the network and the uncertainties due to the outstanding designations. The UK representative also asked for clarification on the timing and format of member state's reactions to the Commission's Communication which will follow on from the Report on Financing Natura 2000.

The Commission proposed the following actions

Member states to submit sites for the Bio-geographic regions by the agreed deadlines

Member states to provide comments on the Monitoring Document presented by the Commission

Member states, who had not already done so, were asked to complete questionnaire on Large Carnivores

Member states were requested to provide comments on the draft common report for Article 16 and 17 reporting

As a consequence of discussions at the meeting, the Commission has adopted the Alpine List of Sites of Community Interest, published the list of successful projects for co-financing under LIFE Nature, published its Communication on Financing Natura 2000, and presented papers on Monitoring and Surveillance at the EU Nature Directors meeting on the 10 April 2003.

(b) The EC CITES Committee (The Committee on Trade in Wild Fauna and Flora) met once during the period of the Greek presidency, in Brussels on 13 March 2003.

UK representation normally comprises officials from my Department. At this meeting the UK representative raised a number of technical issues: introducing a discussion paper on Ivory; the use made of Article 8.2 of Council Regulation 338/97 in other member states; licensing of trade in vaccines, cell lines, etc.; the marking/identification of parts and derivatives; the role of the EU at the UN Food and Agriculture Organisation meetings and the release of meeting documents to NGOs. The UK representative also asked for the implementation of the mahogany listing to be added to the agenda for the next EC meeting. On financial issues the UK representative inquired over EU financial assistance to the CITES initiative—Monitoring the Illegal Killing of Elephants (MIKE) programme.

The Commission proposed the following actions: adding the species "oxymura jaimaicensis" and "Chrysemys picta" to Annex D of Council Regulation 338/97 and considering further the case for the addition of "Padda Fuscata" to Annex D. The Commission also proposed looking further at: a proposal for an Annex B listing for certain Italian endemic species; intra-EU certificates for transboundary movements pending implementation of new CITES appendices; and the UK proposals in relation to the licensing of trade in vaccines, cell lines, etc. No actions were proposed by the UK.

The Committee on Trade in Wild Fauna and Flora is chaired by the European Commission. It makes decisions, not recommendations, in relation to the implementation of Council Regulation 338/97. Copies of the Summary of Conclusions for the meeting which took place on 13 March 2003 have been made available in the House of Commons Library.

Fox Hunting

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what research has been undertaken to assess the effect of a ban on the hunting of foxes on the predation of ground nesting birds; and if she will make a statement. [195775]

Alun Michael: The Department is not aware of specific academic research into the predation of foxes on ground nesting birds. However, we recognise the damage that foxes can do to such birds. The Hunting Bill, introduced into the House of Lords, which would have introduced a general ban on hunting with dogs, included a specific exemption related to this issue. This is designed to ensure that gamekeepers or others can continue to use dogs to control pests that threaten ground nesting birds in their care.

Illegal Waste Dumping

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list the successful prosecutions for illegal dumping of waste in each of the past three years; and what the penalty issued in each case was. [194616]

Mr. Morley: The information is as follows:

	Prosecutions	Fines	Average fine (£)
2002	584	346	2,158
2001	468	286	1,723
2000	370	228	2,615

Notes:

1. Data are based on number of defendants proceeded against at magistrates courts under s33 Environmental Protection Act 1990.
2. Data from 2003 will not be available until the end of November when the 2003 criminal statistics have been published.

Ministerial Expenses

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much the Department spent on (a) maintenance, (b) renovation, (c) council tax and (d) running costs of residential properties used by Ministers and officials in each year since 1997. [191395]

Margaret Beckett: The amount spent on residential properties for Ministers and officials since the formation of Defra has been as follows:

	Maintenance	Renovation	Council tax	Running costs
2001-02	0	0	0	[1]177,565.46
2002-03	0	0	0	[1]276,398.01

	Maintenance	Renovation	Council tax	£ Running costs
2003–04	0	0	0	[1]204,153.01
2004–05[2]	0	0	0	195,500.00

[1] Actual

[2] As per forecast

The running costs are those paid by the Department to the Cabinet office in respect of the capital charge and the costs for utilities, the Whitehall District Heating System, security and facilities management.

Information about the costs of official residences used by Ministers for previous financial years is already in the public domain.

Organic Farming

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the impact of organic farming on biodiversity. [193293]

Mr. Bradshaw: Defra last year funded a major fully referenced study (OF0405). An Assessment of the Environmental Impacts of Organic Farming (May 2003). This can be seen on www.defra.gov.uk/farm/organic/research/env-impacts2.pdf

An additional item of research is the English Nature and Royal Society for the Protection of Birds report "Does Organic Farming Benefit Biodiversity?" This has been published electronically by the journal Biological Conservation (10 August 2004).It can be seen on http://www.sciencedirect.com/science searching for "organic farming".

Both of these reports point to a general increase in biodiversity resulting from organic farming methods.

Defra has also funded a five year research project (OF0165)—Factors influencing biodiversity within organic and conventional systems of arable farming—which has recently been completed (30 September 2004). The full report should be available in due course.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Solar Panels

10. Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the operation of schemes to promote solar panels. [195869]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The DTI provides support for two capital grant schemes that promote use of solar panels.

The Major Photovoltaics Demonstration Programme launched in 2002 has committed some £16.3 million to 148 large-scale projects and some £4.7 million to 700 small-scale projects.

The Clear Skies programme provides grants for a number of renewable technologies including solar thermal. The programme has offered some £1.9 million for solar in 3,887 households and £1,821,623 for solar in 138 community projects.

Energy Prices

11. Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the impact of rising energy prices on British manufacturing. [195870]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: DTI officials and Ministers meet regularly with industry groups and companies to discuss concerns on energy prices.

Recent increases are in the main a result of market forces and follow a period in which energy prices have generally been at historically low levels in real terms.

Business Link (Northampton)

12. Ms Keeble: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of Business Link Services in Northampton. [195871]

Nigel Griffiths: I am advised that Business Link Northamptonshire has performed well. During the 2003–04 financial year the Business Link operator had a market penetration rate of 34.5 per cent. compared to the England average of 33.8 per cent. This continued in 2004–05 where Northamptonshire's penetration rate remains higher than the England average at 34 per cent. as compared to 33.9 per cent.

Customer satisfaction with its services also remains strong. It exceeded the England average in both 2003–04 and 2004–05 of 89 per cent., by achieving a 91 per cent. satisfaction level.

Regulatory Impact

14. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the level and cost of regulation imposed on business by her Department since 1997. [195874]

Ms Hewitt: DTI has produced 1,080 statutory instruments since 1997. Regulatory impact assessments are produced for SIs, covering impacts on business and others. These are placed in the Libraries of the House.

Power Generation

15. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps she is taking to ensure that power generating companies are able to meet future energy demands. [195875]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: As set out in the Energy White Paper published in 2003, the Government have put in place a market-based framework for the energy industry in which price signals will show when new build is both needed and economically viable. The market is working well to deliver secure energy supplies. We expect it to continue to do so. National Grid are forecasting that the GB plant margin will rise over the next few years, reaching over 30 per cent. in 2007–08 and remaining around that level to the end of the decade.

Electricity Supply (Rural Areas)

16. Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the reliability of electricity supplies in rural areas. [195876]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: DTI inspectors monitor the performance of rural networks in response to storms and carry out more detailed investigations in extreme circumstances. This work follows on from the publication of a major investigation into the storm of 27 October 2002, which affected 2,000,000 customers. Inspectors have also been working with the electricity industry to explore opportunities to improve storm performance, and a report was published in December last year.

In addition, Ofgem, the industry regulator provides incentives to companies to improve the reliability of electricity supplies.

Premium Rate Calls

17. Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action she is taking to protect computer users from unsolicited premium rate calls being made from their machines. [195877]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Government have asked the Office of Communications (Ofcom), to carry out a review of premium rate services regulation in order to examine ways of improving consumer protection in the future. The review is expected to report in November.

Motor Sport/Performance Engineering Industries

18. Richard Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the importance of the (a) motor sport and (b) performance engineering industries to the UK's industrial base. [195878]

Jacqui Smith: These industries form an important and highly successful part of the UK's industrial base. They employ some 40,000 people and have a sales value of £5 billion, over half of which is export sales.

The Motorsport Competitiveness Panel, which was co-chaired by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, undertook a detailed assessment of the significance and future potential of the motor sport and performance engineering sectors. Its report was published on 11 July 2003 and is available in the Libraries of the House.

The panel also made a number of recommendations to secure the future of these industries. We have pledged £16 million in support of these actions, which include widening participation in motor sport and improving the provision of training and qualifications.

Call Centres

Angela Watkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps she is taking to minimise the movement of call centre jobs to eastern Europe and Asia. [195863]

Ms Hewitt: The Government share the concerns expressed about the impact of offshoring of services on individuals and communities in the UK. Nonetheless DTI's study into the competitiveness of UK call centres shows the UK call centre sector continuing to grow. The Government's focus must remain on enhancing UK competitiveness, and helping improving skills and on help to improve the skills of those who do lose their jobs to get back into work as quickly as possible.

Civil Partnerships

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry pursuant to her answer of 25 October, Official Report, column 996W, on civil partnerships, whether the estimated costs given refer only to those aged over 30 years who have been living for 12 years with a close family member; and whether they assume 100 per cent. take-up rate. [195191]

Ms Hewitt: The estimated costs refer only to those over 30 years and who have lived together for 12 years. However, the estimated costs do not assume 100 per cent. take-up.

Correspondence

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when she will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for the Isle of Wight to the Secretary of State for Constitutional Affairs dated 11 May, which was referred to her via the Home Secretary. [194153]

Ms Hewitt: When the Home Office inquired whether the hon. Member's constituent's concerns were the responsibility of my Department, my office responded on the same day explaining that the issues raised were not ones for this Department.

I understand that the Office of Fair Trading is now preparing a response.

Electricity Generation

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the development of airblown gasification combined cycle technology developed by British Coal for making electricity from coal. [193829]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: After British Coal ceased trading, the practical development of air blown gasification cycle technology was transferred to an industrial consortium termed the Clean Coal Power Generation Group headed by GEC-Alstom. With some financial support from the European Commission, GEC-Alstom together with Mitsui Babcock and Scottish Power undertook a design study examining the concept of installation of this technology at significant demonstration plant scale in the UK. The report associated with this study was completed but subsequent lack of financial interest has prevented the air blown gasification cycle technology proceeding further in the UK. Components and know how associated with this technology reside with various parties and UK bases who are able to exploit it.

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the Government will make available to other countries, proposing to construct coal-fired power stations, the airblown gasification combined cycle technology developed by British Coal. [193830]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The intellectual property rights of the components comprising the air blown gasification cycle technology reside with industrial parties, not the Government. These parties are at liberty to exploit such components in their own right and in association with other parties whether of UK or overseas origin.

Emissions Trading

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will pursue improvements to the EU Emissions Trading Scheme to ensure that combined heat and power projects benefit fully from the scheme; and if she will make a statement. [194489]

Mr. Morley: I have been asked to reply.

Combined Heat and Power (CHP) is an important element of the Government's new energy policy, as set out in the Energy White Paper. While developing the EU Emissions Trading Scheme (EU ETS), the Government undertook analysis to assess whether the proposed methodology would act as a disincentive to good quality CHP capacity. This analysis concluded that, on average, the baseline methodology used for the National Allocation Plan published earlier this year resulted in a baseline emissions level that was no lower for CHP plants than for installations in the power stations sector. It was therefore decided that the allocations to CHP should be calculated on the same basis as for other installations.

However, following consultation earlier in the year on whether various types of change to installations would be eligible to apply for a free allocation of allowances from the new entrant reserve, the Government have now decided to seek the Commission's agreement to extending eligibility to include, among other things, significant increases in the "good quality" capacity of CHP schemes. New combined heat and power (CHP) installations[1] which come online from 1 January 2004 onwards will also be eligible for allowances from the new entry reserve (NER).

This is intended to assist CHP, and help industry meet the CHP target of 10GW good quality CHP capacity by 2010 as outlined further in the Energy White Paper published in February 2003.

[1] Only CHP installations that meet the threshold in Schedule 1 of the Greenhouse Gas Emissions Trading Scheme 2003 will fall within the scope of the EU ETS.

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether universities will be able to benefit from emissions trading; and if she will make a statement. [194490]

Mr. Morley: I have been asked to reply.

Emissions trading is potentially an efficient and cost effective way to achieve emissions reductions. Installations covered by the EU Emissions Trading Scheme (including some universities) have the opportunity to benefit from trading by reducing their emissions below the number of allowances allocated by Government and selling these on the EU market.

Some universities are already benefiting from emissions trading. Through a carbon club, three universities participate in the UK Emissions Trading Scheme and have gained experience of trading through the UK market. These universities, along with other Direct Participants, have been granted temporary exclusion from the EU Emissions Trading Scheme until the UK scheme ends in 2006.

Energy Bills

Lembit Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the average percentage increase in domestic bills for (a) gas and (b) electricity has been since May 1997; and if she will make a statement. [194713]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Data for gas and electricity bills are published on an annual basis, based on a quarterly census of domestic suppliers.

The change in gas bills for domestic customers between 1997 and 2004, based on provisional 2004 bills are given in the table by payment method. In all cases, prices for 2004 are no higher in cash and real terms than in 1997.

Change in gas bills by payment method between 1997 and 2004

Payment method	Percentage change in real terms between 1997 and 2004	Percentage change in current terms between 1997 and 2004
Standard credit	15	No change

Prepayment	16	1

The change in electricity bills for domestic customers between 1997 and 2004, based on provisional 2004 bills are given below by payment method. In all cases, prices for 2004 are lower in cash and real terms than in 1997.

Change in electricity bills by payment method between 1997 and 2004

Note Data covering bills for 2004 are provisional, although the size of any revisions to these data should be relatively small.

EU Presidency (Greece)

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many times during the Greek presidency of the EU the Committee for the adaptation to technical progress of directives on the removal of technical barriers to trade in the sector of electric materials used in an explosive atmosphere met; when and where these meetings took place; which UK Government expert was present at each meeting; what (a) technical and (b) financial issues were raised by the UK Government expert at each meeting; what recommendations the Committee produced during that period; what actions were (i) proposed and (ii) taken by the (A) EU and (B) UK Government as a result of the Committee's recommendations; and if she will make a statement. [194884]

Mr. Alexander: During the Greek presidency, there were no meetings of the Committee for the adaptation of technical progress of directives on the removal of technical barriers to trade in the sector relating to electrical equipment intended for use in potentially explosive atmospheres.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many times during the Greek presidency of the EU the Committee for the adaptation to technical progress of directives on the removal of technical barriers to trade in the sector of protective equipment and systems for use in an explosive atmosphere met; when and where these meetings took place; which UK Government expert was present at each meeting; what (a) technical and (b) financial issues were raised by the UK Government expert at each meeting; what recommendations the Committee produced during that period; what actions were (i) proposed and (ii) taken by the (A) EU and (B) UK Government as a result of the Committee's recommendations; and if she will make a statement. [194885]

Mr. Alexander: It is my understanding this question relates to the Standing Committee set up to assist the European Commission under article 6.3 of the Equipment and Protective Systems for Use in Potentially Explosive Atmospheres Directive, (the "ATEX" Directive) 94/9 EC. There was one meeting of this Committee on 6–7 February 2003 in Brussels which was attended by two UK expert officials, one from the DTI and one from the Health and Safety Executive. They raised for discussion a number of issues.

The Committee produces non-binding guidance rather than more formal outputs. This guidance was adapted to include agreed solutions to the issues raised by the UK and others. It forms the basis for advice to industry on these matters.

The Committee does not address questions relating to financial issues.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many times during the Greek presidency of the EU the (a) Advisory Committee on standardisation in the field of information technology (Sogits) and (b) the Standing Committee for the harmonisation of national legislation relating to recreational craft met; when and where each meeting took place; which UK Government expert was present at each meeting; what (i) technical and (ii) financial issues were raised by the UK Government expert at each meeting; what recommendations the Committee produced during that period; what actions were (A) proposed and (B) taken by (1) the EU and (2) the UK Government as a result of the Committee's recommendations; and if she will make a statement. [194347]

Ms Hewitt: It is my understanding that the hon. Member is referring to the Standing Committee set up under Article 6 of the Directive 94/25/EC (as amended) on the approximation of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions of member states relating to recreational craft. The Standing Committee met in Brussels on 27 January 2003. Two officials from the Department of Trade and Industry represented the United Kingdom.

The UK contributed a number of points to the discussion of various terms of guidance for industry and other stakeholders. No financial issues were discussed. The UK also made technical contributions to a further informal meeting on the same day, attended by many of the same officials plus industry representatives.

The Committee did not make any formal recommendations but its proceedings influenced the work of the Commission and of member states.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations she has received from industry following her statement on the planned Export Credits Guarantee Department Trading Fund on 1 July. [194498]

Mr. Alexander: Representations about ECGD's future as a Trading Fund were made by industry and its trade bodies prior to my right. hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry's announcement of 1 July 2004, Official Report, column 22WS. None have been received since. We are committed to consulting on the outcome of the period of operating as a Pilot Trading Fund, which is due to begin next April.

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has for how the budget for improving efficiency and effectiveness of the Export Credits Guarantee Department will be spent over the next two years. [194499]

Mr. Alexander: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer I gave in the Official Report on 11 October, Column 119W. We are awaiting proposals from the Chief Executive of ECGD before taking decisions.

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what change she has specified to the current requirement of Export Credits Guarantee Department to obtain Treasury Consents annually, as the Export Credits Guarantee Department (a) moves into Pilot Trading Fund status in April 2005 and (b) becomes a fully capitalised Trading Fund in April 2007. [194506]

Mr. Alexander: Sections 1, 2 and 3 of the Export and Investment Guarantees Act 1991 ('the Act') confer various powers on the Secretary of State acting through the Export Credits Guarantee Department, subject to the consent of the Treasury as required by section 4(2) of the Act. The requirement for ECGD to obtain Treasury consent will therefore continue throughout the Pilot Trading Fund, and during its status as a fully capitalised Trading Fund.

Fallow Field Initiative

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many new (a) gas and (b) oil reserves have been identified from the fallow field initiative. [195066]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: My Department's fallow initiative seeks to put blocks and discoveries in the hands of who can explore and develop them. Activity prompted by the fallow initiative has already resulted in a number of discoveries, 12 of which have resulted in fields with active plans for development. Collectively these are likely to have reserves ranging between 200 and 250 million barrels of oil equivalent. I have provided an overall estimate because specific figures on oil and gas reserves for individual fields and accumulations are commercially sensitive and provided to my Department in confidence by the operating company.

Fair Trade

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make it her policy that, during the UK's presidency of (a) the EU and (b) the G8, all hospitality is sourced from fair trade producers. [192899]

Mr. Alexander: The Department of Trade and Industry works closely with other Government departments to promote fair trade, and the Government are committed to supporting fair trade through their own suppliers wherever possible within the boundaries set by the public procurement rules.

The Government will work to ensure that hospitality offered by their caters within Government departments, when hosting EU Presidency and G8 events, will be sourced from fair trade products. Furthermore, the Government will work to ensure that hospitality provided for UK hosted EU Presidency and G8 events by any outside caterers is sourced from fair trade products where available.

Gas

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much gas (a) was exported from the UK to Europe and (b) was imported from Europe to the UK in each year from 1999 to the latest year for which figures are available. [195805]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The amount of gas exported to and imported from Europe for the years 1999 to 2003 are shown in the table.

GWh

	Exports	Imports
1999	84,433	12,862
2000	146,342	26,032
2001	138,330	30,464
2002	150,731	60,493
2003	177,039	86,298

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on her (a) plans and (b) timetable for bringing gas interconnectors on-stream. [195049]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Government policy, as set out in the White Paper "Our energy future-creating a low carbon economy" published in February 2003, is to have a market-based approach to deliver energy supply. There are commercial plans to expand the capacity of the existing interconnector from Zeebrugge planned to be operational by Winter 2005 (first phase) and Winter 2006 (second phase). There are also commercial plans to build a new interconnector between the Netherlands and the UK, aiming to be operational 2006–07, and the Langeled pipeline is planned to join the Norwegian Continental Shelf to Britain in 2006–07. The Joint Energy Security of Supply Working Group (JESS) publishes a regular overview of security of supply indicators over the medium term to assist market participants investment decisions and the information collected includes details of forthcoming planned gas interconnector projects.

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the gas reserves in the UK Continental Shelf. [195114]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: My Department publishes an annual assessment of the oil and gas reserves on the UK continental shelf (UKCS). The latest assessment is on the web at http://www.og.dti.gov.uk/information/bb_updates/chapters/reserves_index.htm. As at the end of 2003, proven, probable and possible gas reserves were estimated to total 590, 315 and 336 billion cubic metres (bcm) respectively. In addition, there are estimated to be a further 74–276 bcm of gas in potential additional reserves, which are not currently technically or commercially producible, and undiscovered resources of between 279 and 1,259 bcm. Gas production from the UKCS to end 2003 was just over 1,800 bcm; production is currently around 100 bcm per annum.

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has for gas storage over the next decade. [195065]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: This is a commercial matter, however, I understand there are public plans to build five gas storage facilities at Aldbrough, Byley, Humbly Grove, Welton and Preesall. These facilities are at different stages of the planning and delivery process.

The Joint Energy Security of Supply Working Group (JESS) publishes a regular overview of security of supply indicators including the status of potential and planned gas storage.

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the implications for gas storage requirements to meet peak winter gas demand when the UK becomes a net importer of gas. [195068]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The market is best placed to assess business opportunities for gas storage based on a commercial evaluation. Storage is only one method of providing the flexibility of gas supply to meet peak winter demand. The Joint Energy Security of Supply Working Group (JESS) publishes a regular overview of security of supply indicators and provides information to the market on the need for peak supply capacity. In addition, DTI writes to local planning authorities, considering gas storage projects, to ensure that they are aware of the national need for additional supply-side flexibility, including storage capacity, as North Sea gas production declines.

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on her plans to ensure the security of supply of gas. [195116]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: As set out in the White Paper "Our energy future-creating a low carbon economy" published in February 2003, the Government believe that allowing the free operation of a competitive British market, within an appropriate regulatory framework, is the most efficient way to ensure security of supply of gas. Commercial operators have incentives to ensure a diversity of sources of gas, of supply routes and of entry points so as to reduce the risk of supply interruption through disruption of any one source or supply route. The Government are working towards liberalised and competitive markets both within the EU and beyond, and are using the EU's relations with Russia and other countries to support our energy objectives.

The Joint Energy Security of Supply Working Group (JESS) publishes a regular overview of security of supply indicators over the medium term to assist market participants investment decisions.

Inward Investment

Mr. David Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of investment between European Union countries other than investment by the UK came to the United Kingdom in each year since 2001. [192268]

Mr. Alexander [holding answer 18 October 2004]: The UK received 9.7 per cent. (9.1 per cent.) of all foreign direct investment (FDI) inflows between EU-15 member states in 2002 (figures for EU-25 members in brackets). The UK received the fourth largest share behind Luxembourg with 33.6 per cent. (31.5 per cent.), France with 12.7 per cent. (11.9 per cent.) and Germany with 10.1 per cent. (11.9 per cent.).

This data are only available in terms of financial flow figures rather than in terms of inward investment stocks (by which we measure our PSA targets).

The latest UNCTAD world investment report shows that in 2003 the UK had the largest inward FDI stocks within the EU from all countries, including those outside the EU, with 20 per cent. of the EU-15 total, followed by Germany (16 per cent.) France (13 per cent.), Netherlands (10 per cent.) and Luxembourg (10 per cent.).

Job Creation (Lancashire)

Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many jobs have been created as a result of the Luneside East development; how many jobs have been created to be taken up by residents of communities in need; and what the estimated cost per job created is. [192923]

Jacqui Smith: The scheme is expected to create 315 jobs and includes new and improved cycle and pedestrian links to improve access to job opportunities for local communities in need.

Lancaster City council will also work to maximise the take up of jobs locally through Employment Action Plans targeting these communities.

The net cost per job is £25,000, which is comparable to other projects of this type.

National Minimum Wage

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many full-time staff have been responsible for the enforcement of minimum wage legislation in each year since 1999. [195110]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The Inland Revenue carries out enforcement of the national minimum wage.

Details of Revenue staff responsible for the enforcement of minimum wage legislation

1999–2000	77
2000–01	93
2001–02	97
2002–03	117
2003–04	115
2004–05	120

In addition to the figures quoted above, there has been a small Revenue head office team of between four-six staff each year.

In addition the DTI has a small policy team dealing with national minimum wage issues currently numbering four people.

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many prosecutions there have been for offences in breach of minimum wage legislation in each year since 1999. [195111]

Mr. Sutcliffe: To date there have been no prosecution cases for offences in breach of minimum wage legislation. We monitor the effectiveness of enforcement action and will use prosecution should this become appropriate.

The National Minimum Wage Act 1998 contains a number of provisions empowering compliance officers to take civil action against non-paying employers. The majority (around 90 per cent.) of minimum wage cases are solved, at present, without the need for any formal enforcement action. In tackling the minority of more difficult cases, compliance officers may serve an enforcement notice which requires the employer to start paying the minimum wage and make good any arrears of pay. Where an employer ignores the enforcement notice, the officer may then serve a penalty notice. The penalty notice imposes a financial penalty on the employer of twice the adult rate of the minimum wage for each worker named in the enforcement notice from when it was issued.

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations she has received from (a) employers and (b) employees about the operation and enforcement of minimum wage legislation with respect to security guards. [195112]

Mr. Sutcliffe: In the last 12 months the Inland Revenue and the Low Pay Commission have received no representations from employers or employees about the operation and enforcement of minimum wage legislation with respect to security guards.

In the same period the DTI has received one letter from a security guard, but this was principally about the number of hours paid during holidays.

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on her plans to improve enforcement of minimum wage legislation. [195113]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The hon. Member may know that the Government introduced the National Minimum Wage (Enforcement Notices) Act 2003 last year to ensure that former workers were properly covered by the minimum wage legislation, and that we introduced a package of measures in the Employment Relations Act 2004 to improve enforcement of the minimum wage. We work closely with the Inland Revenue to ensure that enforcement continues to be effective.

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many 16 and 17 year olds are expected to benefit from the national minimum wage in (a) Glasgow, (b) Scotland and (c) the United Kingdom in the next financial year. [190565]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The information is as follows:

(a) and (b) it is not possible to comment on the number of beneficiaries in Glasgow and Scotland.

(c) The DTI estimates that over 25,000 16 to 17-year-old workers will benefit from the national minimum wage rage of £3.00 per hour in October 2004. This estimate was made in the DTI March 2004 National Minimum Wage Regulatory Impact Assessment.

Nuclear Plants (IT Systems)

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information she has received from the International Atomic Energy Agency in respect of its evaluation of the adequacy of computer systems installed at nuclear plants in support of safety and security requirements. [195388]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The International Atomic Energy Agency has not evaluated the adequacy of computer systems installed at nuclear plants in support of safety or security within the UK and has no remit to do so.

Sellafield

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the future of the reprocessing plant at Sellafield. [194671]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 1 November 2004]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 4 October 2004, Official Report, column 1859W to the hon. Member for Lewes (Norman Baker).

Shareholder Registers (Animal Rights Activists)

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what her assessment is of the security implications of the legal requirement for companies targeted by animal rights activists to provide copies of their shareholder registers; and what plans she has to restrict the right of access to companies' share registers in such cases. [193787]

Ms Hewitt: The UK has one of the strictest regulatory regimes in the world to control the use of animals for medical research and the Government have expressed their determination to stop the illegal and sometimes violent conduct of a small group of extremists who are attempting to intimidate individuals and companies going about their lawful business. I am concerned that these extremists can and do misuse information that is in the public domain to direct their attacks.

The Companies Act requires every company to provide a copy of its Register of Members to those who ask and to list the company's directors. It does not, however, require the company's members or shareholders to provide their home addresses. Directors' home addresses are currently held on the public record but those who are under a serious risk of violence or intimidation can apply for a confidentiality order to remove these addresses from public inspection. Our intention in the Companies Bill will be to implement the recommendation of the company law review that directors should only need to provide a service address for the public record, with home addresses being held on a register to which access is restricted.

Software Patents

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate she has made of the financial contribution of the licensing of software patents to the UK economy in each year from 1974 to 2003. [194755]

Ms Hewitt: Licensing is in essence a private business activity. The information requested could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

A-Level Results

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will list the average A-level points score for (a) school sixth forms, (b) sixth form colleges and (c) general further education colleges in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [193182]

Mr. Miliband: The average GCE/VCE A/AS point score per candidate aged 16 to 18 in 2002 to 2004 is shown in the following table:

	2001/02	2002/03	2003/04 (provisional)
All schools	280.9	282.8	286.1
Sixth form colleges	263.1	273.8	277.0
Other FE sector colleges	166.5	169.0	181.2
All schools and FE sector colleges	254.7	258.9	265.6

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will list the average A-level points score per pupil for 11 to 18 years schools with sixth forms containing (a) 50 or fewer, (b) 51 to 100, (c) 101 to 150, (d) 151 to 200, (e) 201 to 250 and (f) more than 250 pupils in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [193181]

Mr. Miliband: The average GCE/VCE A/AS point score per candidate aged 16 to 18 in school sixth forms in 2002 to 2004 is shown in the following table:

Number of students in sixth form	2001/02	2002/03	2003/04 (provisional)
Fewer than 50	227.1	224.1	242.6
51 to 100	239.3	244.4	250.0
101 to 150	258.6	253.1	259.2
151 to 200	278.4	278.3	278.3
201 to 250	291.0	293.1	292.0
More than 250	296.4	299.8	303.3
Total	280.9	282.8	286.1

Area Cost Adjustment

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills which local education authorities receive area cost adjustment in 2004–05. [195921]

Children in Care

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many children are in public care in the West Midlands. [195689]

Margaret Hodge: At 31 March 2003, 7,120 children were looked after by local authorities in the West Midlands. This figure excludes children looked after under an agreed series of short-term placements.

Foundation Schools

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills whether a school that a local education authority proposes to close can apply to become a foundation school. [196090]

Mr. Miliband: The governing body of a school which the LEA proposes to close, may seek to change its category to foundation but it must follow the proper statutory process. Publishing proposals for a change of category will not prevent or delay the consideration of any proposals already published for closure.

In deciding both proposals, a School Organisation Committee (SOC) or schools adjudicator must have regard to the Secretary of State's guidance. The guidance makes it clear that the SOC or adjudicator need not delay their consideration of the first proposals in such cases. They may consider the proposed closure first and then take account of that decision when considering the change of category proposals.

Under the new fast track arrangements we are proposing for community and voluntary controlled secondary schools to change category to foundation, the governing body would decide change of category proposals, LEAs will retain the right to publish proposals to close foundation schools and the SOC will continue to decide these.

Learning and Skills Council

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what discussions he has had with the Gloucestershire Learning and Skills Council about its support for (a) The Prince's Trust and (b) the Connexions programmes; and if he will make a statement. [194669]

Mr. Ivan Lewis [holding answer 1 November 2004]: The Secretary of State has had no discussions, but is aware that the Gloucestershire Learning and Skills Council (LSC) indirectly supports the Prince's Trust, which delivers Entry to Employment (E2E) programmes. E2E is an important part of the work to re-engage young people in learning.

Gloucestershire LSC works in partnership with the Connexions Service to ensure that quality advice and guidance is available to enable young people to benefit from appropriate learning opportunities.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make a statement on the funding he is providing to the Learning and Skills Council in this financial year. [194670]

Mr. Ivan Lewis [holding answer 1 November 2004]: The budget allocated to the Learning and Skills Council for the 2004–05 financial year was set out in the Grant Letter to the LSC on 4 December 2003. The budget figure in the letter is £8,674 million. This amount represents a record level of investment in the learning and skills sector.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills when he will reply to the question tabled by the hon. Member for Hertsmere on 18 October 2004, ref 192930, on benchmarks for university admissions. [196502]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: A reply was issued to the hon. Member on 3 November 2004, Official Report, columns 290–91W.

Post-16 Education

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what funding streams are available to support students in post-16 non-university based education. [194804]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: The Government are committed to encouraging more students to continue in education and training, and to raise attainment levels. Young People from lower income households who are aged 16 at the start of the 2004/05 academic year can apply to receive the Education Maintenance Allowance (EMA). We are phasing in the scheme nationally from September 2004 to successive 16 year old year groups. By 2006 all young people aged 16 to 19 who meet the eligibility requirements will be able to receive EMA.

Learner Support Funds (LSFs) are available for students aged 16 and over to help with costs associated with further education, including books and equipment, transport, childcare support funds and residential bursaries. LSF continues to be an effective safety net for disadvantaged students from lower income households wishing to remain in education.

Young people in unwaged work-based learning, including Entry to Employment, are entitled to at least £40 a week Minimum Training Allowance paid by the learning provider through the LSC. local LSCs can increase this allowance to meet local needs and can also provide discretionary funding to help with transport, equipment or similar costs. The intention is that from 2006 this arrangement will be replaced by the extension of EMA principles to this group of young people.

Announced as part of the Government's Skills Strategy, the new Adult Learning Grant offers an allowance of up to £30 per week to adults on lower incomes studying full-time for a first full level 2 qualification (equivalent to 5 GCSEs or a National Vocational Qualification at level 2) and young adults (aged 19+) on lower incomes studying full-time for a first full level 3 qualification (equivalent to two A levels or a National Vocational Qualification at level 3).

Career Development Loans, which are operated by the Department and three high street banks, are designed to help individuals pay for vocational education and training. Loans of between £300 and £8,000 are available to pay for all course-related costs on courses for up to two years. The loan can also cover living expenses if the course is full time. The Department pays the interest on the loen while the student is training and repayment starts only after the course has been completed.

Press Officers

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many press officers are employed in his Department; and how many were employed in each year since 1996–97. [195362]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 1 November 2004]: The information requested is set out in the following table.

	Number of press officers
1996/97	19
1997/98	20.5
1998/99	29.5
1999/00	28
2000/01	28
2001/02	28
2002/03	23.4
2003/04	18.5
2004/05	17

Schools (Bury)

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many teaching assistants were employed in schools in Bury in each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [195405]

Mr. Miliband: The following table gives the number of teaching assistants employed in maintained schools in Bury at January in each year. The latest information available is for 2004.

	Number
1995	210
1996	250
1997	270
1998	260
1999	280

The information requested from 1997 has also been published in table 20 of the Statistical First Release 34/2004 on 23 September 2004. The SFR can be accessed from the following URL:

Sex Education

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much money was granted by each local education authority in the Greater London area to be spent on sex education in (a) 1997 and (b) 2003-04. [196035]

Mr. Miliband: Information about individual local education authority expenditure on sex education is not collected by the Department.

Educating young people about sexual health and safer sex are key elements of the Government's sexual health strategy. The Teenage Pregnancy Strategy has a multi-faceted approach, which includes helping young people resist pressure to have early sex, improving sex and relationship education and access to effective contraception and sexual health services. All maintained secondary schools have a statutory requirement to teach sex and relationship education.

DEFENCE

Electoral Registration

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British service personnel are registered as service voters on the armed forces personnel registration scheme; and how many were registered in 2000. [195222]

Mr. Caplin [holding answer 1 November 2004]: The Representation of the People Act 2000 gave Service personnel the option of either registering to vote at their private or other qualifying address, or to register by means of a Service declaration. Both are administered by local authority Electoral Registration Officers and the Services no longer maintain an Armed Forces Register of Electors. The number choosing to register by means of the Service declaration is not held by the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reasons the armed forces personnel registration scheme moved to annual re-registration in 2000; and what assessment was made of the implications of the change for the number of servicemen registered to vote. [195223]

Mr. Caplin [holding answer 1 November 2004]: The move to annual re-registration brought the arrangements for armed forces personnel in line with those for other voters. The change was considered likely to encourage Service personnel to use their vote, and to register with the local authority Electoral Registration Officer for their up-to-date address.

Missile Defence

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to the written statement of 12 October 2004, Official Report, columns 9–10WS, on missile defence, when negotiations on the ballistic missile defence agreement began; and when agreement on the final text was reached. [195410]

Mr. Hoon: Negotiations for a new agreement to replace the 1985 Strategic Defence Initiative Memorandum of Understanding began in early 2003. A "Framework" Agreement, setting out general principles for co-operation on missile defence, was signed on 12 June 2003. Negotiations were conducted in parallel on two Annexes to this Agreement dealing with the upgrade of the Early Warning Radar at RAF Fylingdales, and with co-operation in Research, Development, Test and Evaluation of ballistic missile defence capabilities and systems. These were signed on 18 December 2003 and 12 October 2004 respectively.

Travel Costs

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the travel costs were of civil servants in (a) his Department and (b) its related agencies in each year since 1997. [183900]

Mr. Caplin: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at a disproportionate cost. I can confirm that all civilian travel is conducted in compliance with Civil Service Management Code, and in the most cost-effective manner.

Windows 2000 Combat Management System

Michael Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what systems have been put in place to cope with a failure in the planned Windows 2000 operating system in the Type 45 Destroyers; [191620]

(2) whether there has been an external review of the Windows 2000 Combat Management System Type 45 Destroyer Project; [191621]

(3) what the proposed cost was of implementing Unix as the operating system for the Combat Management System in the Type 45 Destroyers; [191622]

(4) what the cost is of implementing Windows 2000 as the operating system for the Combat Management System in the Type 45 Destroyers; [191623]

(5) what steps he has taken to ensure that the Windows 2000 Combat Management System in the new Type 45 Destroyers is reliable. [191643]

Mr. Ingram: The Type 45 prime contractor, BAE Systems, and their sub-contractor, are responsible for selecting an operating system that meets the requirements placed on them by the Defence Procurement Agency (DPA). Industry's decision to use Windows 2000 was in any case the subject of a review conducted by the Ministry of Defence which included specialist representatives from QinetiQ and the Defence Science and Technology Laboratory (DSTL). The review concluded that the choice of Windows 2000 represented the lowest risk choice of operating system. In particular, the review concluded that any residual risks associated with reliability were well understood by the contractor and that the normal process of regression and integration testing would quantify and reduce these risks before Type 45 is accepted into service.

The system design has built-in redundancy, with automatic, and transparent, switch-over to a back-up system if the primary system has a problem. This would provide continuity of operation and ensure that no data were lost. The system design also ensures that comprehensive hardware mechanisms will be in place to avoid any other safety or technical issues.

The cost of implementing an operating system for the Combat Management System in the Type 45 is a matter for the prime contractor, BAE Systems, and their sub-contractor. The Department does not have, or require, visibility of costs at that level of detail.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Analogue Switch-off

Brian White: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what estimate her Department has made of the number of television aerials that will need to be upgraded to allow analogue switch-off to proceed. [195605]

Estelle Morris: A small number of viewers are likely to be using a roof-top aerial which is in poor condition and delivering substandard analogue signals. They may have to replace their aerial in order to continue receiving the public service channels after digital switchover. However, we do not have a reliable figure of the number of households who may be affected in this way.

British Grand Prix

Mr. Dhanda: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will make a statement on the British Grand Prix; and whether she expects public money to be made available to secure the future of the British Grand Prix. [195610]

Mr. Caborn: We desire and support a British Grand Prix at Silverstone, but the current commercial negotiations between the British Racing Drivers Club (BRDC) and Formula One Management (FOM), to reach an agreement to secure the British Grand Prix on the 2005 Formula One Calendar, are a matter for them. However, where appropriate, Derek Mapp, Chair of the East Midlands Development Agency and I have done everything we can to help bring the parties together to broker a suitable outcome. There is no prospect of the Government entering into the current commercial negotiations as a direct financial participant.

Correspondence

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when she will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Woking, dated 14 October, concerning Skanska UK Plc. [194507]

Estelle Morris: The letter was received in the Department on the 18 October and I wrote to the hon. Member on 3 November.

We aim to reply to all departmental correspondence within 18 working days.

Departmental Policy (South Dorset)

Jim Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will set out, with statistical evidence relating as closely as possible to the South Dorset constituency, the effects of changes to departmental policy since 1997 on the South Dorset constituency. [194972]

Mr. Caborn: Since 1997 the Government have introduced a range of initiatives and increased the funding available to develop the cultural, sports and tourism sectors and improve access to cultural and sporting opportunities across the country. There is evidence that these policies are benefiting the South Dorset constituency.

A number of arts organisations in Dorset, which are active in the South Dorset constituency, are receiving significant increases in their public funding. For example, Artsreach and Dorset Dance Forum will each receive over £50,000 from Arts Council England in 2005–06, representing increases of 73 per cent. and 55 per cent. respectively compared with 2002–03. Ten feature films and television programmes have been filmed in and around South Dorset in the past two years and a number of film projects have received Lottery funding, including the Purbeck Film Festival. Museums in Dorset are receiving support from the South West Museums, Libraries and Archives Council under the Government's Renaissance in the Regions initiative.

This support is aimed at helping smaller museums develop their documentation and funding a second museum development officer post for the county. The Tank Museum has received over £350,000 since 1999 under the Government's Designation Scheme to recognise outstanding collections in non-national museums.

Tourism in Dorset has increased with the assistance of Government-funded marketing activity. The latest available data are for 2002, when expenditure by staying tourists in Dorset rose to £768 million from £664 million in 2001. In April 2003, the Government established VisitBritain with a new domestic marketing remit for England, and we gave strategic responsibility for tourism development to the Regional Development Agencies. Tourism in South Dorset benefits from these changes, as does the rest of England, and will benefit further if London's bid for the 2012 Olympic Games is successful as Weymouth and Portland have been chosen to host the sailing events.

Information from the Lottery distributors indicates that since 1997 South Dorset has benefited from over 300 awards totalling over £10 million. Of these 40 awards worth £2.3 million were made by the New Opportunities Fund which was established by the Government in 1999.

Departmental Recruitment

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many full-time equivalent staff her Department has employed in the (a) corporate services, (b) tourism, libraries and communities, (c) creative industries, broadcasting, gambling and the Lottery, (d) arts and culture, (e) sport, (f) strategy and communications and (g) legal advisors' directorate in each year from 1997; and if she will make a statement. [194659]

Mr. Caborn: The Department has undergone a number of reorganisations since 1997. We are currently organised into three Directorates General and one Directorate with full-time equivalent staff as follows:

	Number
Economic Impact	135
Children, Young People and Communities	207.5
Corporate Services and Modernisation	141.9
Strategic Communications	26

DCMS contracts out its legal service to the Treasury Solicitor's Department, who employ staff on our behalf. Information for previous structures for earlier years could be provided only at a disproportionate cost.

Export Bodies

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many employees the (a) Export Licensing Unit and (b) Advisory Council on the Export of Works of Art had in each year from 1997; what the cost to public funds of each body was in each year (i) in total, (ii) for staffing costs, (iii) for other administrative costs and (iv) for other costs; and if she will make a statement. [195062]

Estelle Morris: Details of the staffing levels of DCMS are not recorded in the kind of detail that would be required in order to provide information about the precise staffing levels of the Export Licensing Unit on a year by year basis since 1997. Accordingly, details of precise costs cannot be calculated. The current staffing of the Unit consists of approximately 20 per cent. of a Grade B, two Grade Cs and two Grade Ds. This has involved a slight increase since 1997 as staff numbers have been adjusted according to the number of licence applications needing to be processed.

The Advisory Council on the Export of Works of Art provides advice to both the Reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art and DCMS directly from time to time. The Council therefore involves no specific costs to DCMS as it is serviced as a small part of the work of the Reviewing Committee's secretariat.

Football Association

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps her Department has taken to review the Football Association; and if she will make a statement. [195400]

Mr. Caborn: While all sports national governing bodies are independent from Government, the Government's aim is for them to be fit for purpose. The FA is no exception. The FA has been discussing a review of the organisation, including its structure and governance, since the spring of 2004. The Board and Council are committed to a review headed by an independent person, who will want to take a view on when they will be able to report. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State wrote to the FA in August 2004, and I have been in regular contact with the FA during this time.

Gambling

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment has been made of the competition implications under EU rules of placing a cap or ceiling on the number of regional casinos. [194655]

Mr. Caborn: Any statutory limitation on the number of regional casinos would potentially raise issues of compliance with EU law which would need due consideration.

Lottery Terminals

David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions her Department has held with Camelot on the purchase and supply of National Lottery terminals to (a) newsagents and (b) shops in the UK. [195848]

Estelle Morris: Issues concerning National Lottery terminals are a matter for the National Lottery operator acting under its licence from the National Lottery Commission. I and my officials have regular meetings with both Camelot and the National Lottery Commission which discuss all areas of the National Lottery; but these have not involved any detailed discussion of terminal supply matters.

Olympic Athletes (Ireland)

Hugh Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many Olympic athletes who have received public funding from the UK have competed for the Republic of Ireland. [195178]

Mr. Caborn [holding answer 1 November 2004]: There were four competitors from Northern Ireland at Sydney 2000 and seven at Athens 2004 who received lottery funding from the Sports Council for Northern Ireland and who competed for the Republic of Ireland.

Temporary Staff

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many agency temporary staff have been working for the Department in each of the last five years, excluding those working for agencies for which no data are kept centrally. [196052]

Mr. Caborn: The Department employs temporary agency staff on the basis of a booking which can last from as little as one day to many months. The number of individual bookings in each of the last five years is shown in the following table:

	Number
2003–04	106
2002–03	86
2001–02	92
2000–01	143
1999–2000	[1]47

[1] Second half year figure only—first half year figure no longer available.

However, this does not represent the number of temporary agency staff working in the Department at any one time; or the average annual person years worked. There are 17 temporary agency staff currently working in the Department.

Tourism

Mr. Sanders: To the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much funding her Department plans to contribute for (a) marketing, (b) e-tourism, (c) improving the quality of tourism products and (d) skills and training towards achieving the £100 billion target value for tourism by 2010. [195226]

Mr. Caborn: This year we have made £48.4 million available to VisitBritain for marketing, e-tourism and quality. My Department expects to announce the new funding allocations for VisitBritain over the coming weeks. Funding for the improvement of skills and training in the tourism industry is provided by the Department for Education and Skills. This includes up to £4 million over three years for the Sector Skills Council/People 1st.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what ratio of funding between the Government and the private sector she expects in meeting the £100 billion target value for tourism by 2010. [195227]

Mr. Caborn: The Department has made £48.4 million of public investment available to VisitBritain this year, alongside our investment in the museums, galleries, heritage sites, arts and sports events and other attractions that encourage tourists to spend their holidays here. Other Government Departments, the Devolved Administrations, Regional Development Agencies and local authorities also make significant public investment which directly and indirectly benefits tourism. However, inbound and domestic tourism is worth almost £74 billion to the UK economy and clearly the vast majority of investment will be made by private firms, investing in their products and marketing their services to the public.

CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

Consultants

Pete Wishart: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how much expenditure his Department has incurred in each year since 2002 on employing external consultants to deal with the press and public relations of his Department; and if he will make a statement. [195459]

Mr. Lammy: From March 2002, my Department's expenditure with press and public relations consultants was as follows:

2002–03	12,000.00
2003–04	37,362.00
2004 to date	28,436.00

Departmental IT

Brian White: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what percentage of the Department's (a) implemented and (b) planned computer systems use open source software; and what plans are in place to raise this level. [195661]

Mr. Leslie: My Department's procurement of software solutions follows the 'level playing field' Government Open Source Software (OSS) Policy. The Government consider OSS solutions alongside proprietary ones in IT procurements and that contracts should be awarded on a value for money, case by case basis. The OSS policy can be viewed at www.govtalk.gov.uk

My Department works with its suppliers so that OSS is used, where appropriate, in the developments currently under way or under consideration. For example, my Department makes use of OSS in the hosting of its main websites.

Where OSS is used it is with a mixture of bespoke and proprietary software in a variety of environments, which makes it impossible meaningfully to estimate the percentages attributable to each type of software.

Departmental Publications (Access)

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how many and what proportion of publications issued by his Department are available in (a) Braille, (b) autoprint, (c) large print and (d) easy read format. [194297]

Mr. Lammy: It is my Department policy to make printed publications available in alternative formats on request.

In cases where a significant demand for such formats is anticipated, alternative formats are produced at the same time as the main publication. For example, the application form for lay magistrates is available in both large print and Braille. Easy to read versions have been produced of two of my Department's booklets: "Making Decisions: Helping people who have difficulty deciding for themselves" and the "Guide to the Human Rights Act".

My Department is obliged by the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 to make online publications accessible and to provide alternative user-friendly formats on request. It adheres to guidelines outlined by the Web Accessibility Initiative (WAI). Online publications are therefore accessible via screen readers and Braille displays, thus allowing users to adjust font sizes and change fore and background colour schemes.

10 per cent. of my Department's online content is available in Portable Document Format (PDF). Alternative user-friendly file formats are available on request.

Large print versions of Court Service leaflets are available on the Court Service website. The Court Service makes its printed publications available in alternative formats on request.

All Public Guardianship Office customer booklets are available in large print on the PGO website or in hardcopy. Their booklets are made available in easy-read format and in Braille on request.

Press Officers

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how many press officers the Department and its predecessors have employed in each of the past five years. [196046]

Mr. Lammy: The number of press officers and support staff employed by the Department for Constitutional Affairs headquarters and the Court Service and its predecessor are as follows:

	Press officers	Support staff
2004	[1]16	6
2003	[1]13	5
2002	10	5
2001	6	5
2000	4	5

[1] This includes the head of news who was appointed in September 2003.

These figures do not include the director and deputy of communications who do speak to the media but on a far more infrequent basis than press officers.

Special Advisers

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how many unpaid special advisers the Department has; what their names are; and which Government (a) bodies, (b) committees and (c) strategy groups each unpaid adviser (i) belongs to, (ii) advises and (iii) works alongside. [194053]

Mr. Lammy: For information relating to numbers and names of unpaid advisers I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 22 July 2004, Official Report, columns 466–70W.

Special advisers, whether paid or unpaid, are employed under the terms and conditions set out in the Model Contract for Special Advisers. Unpaid advisers are appointed in accordance with the requirements of paragraph 51 of the Ministerial Code.

Sustainable Energy (CHP Provisions) Order

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what measures his Department (a) has undertaken and (b) plans to undertake to comply with the Sustainable Energy (CHP Provisions) Order 2003. [194437]

Mr. Leslie: My Department is committed to working with the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (DEFRA) on Sustainable Development. We continue to progress action and respond positively to targets published by DEFRA against the strands of the Framework for Sustainable Development in the Government Estate. Good progress has been made on energy targets; we already source more than 10 per cent. of electricity from renewable sources and our programme of energy works has achieved significant reductions in consumption and emissions. Use of Combined Heat and Power schemes forms part of our overall strategy; we already participate in a scheme in Sheffield and are currently considering schemes proposed for Nottingham and Birmingham. Subject to financial viability, we will be considering other opportunities for CHP schemes as they arise.

CABINET OFFICE

Performance and Innovation Unit

Bob Spink: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what new projects are (a) planned and (b) under consideration for the Performance and Innovation Unit. [194917]

Mr. Milburn: The Performance and Innovation Unit no longer exists. In June 2002 it merged with the Forward Strategy Unit and the Policy Studies Directorate of the Centre for Management and Policy Studies to create the Strategy Unit. New Strategy Unit projects are announced on the Unit's website as Ministers approve them unless they are intended to give confidential advice to ministers.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Cameron: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how much his Office has spent on (a) mobile telephone costs, (b) hospitality and (c) taxi costs in (i) 1996–97 and (ii) the last year for which figures are available. [185240]

Ruth Kelly [holding answer 19 July 2004]: Financial information prior to the 1997–98 financial year was recorded on a previous accounting system and cannot be readily retrieved without incurring disproportionate cost.

Expenditure on mobile telephone is not separately identifiable on the Department's accounting system and therefore the information requested cannot be readily retrieved without incurring disproportionate cost.

The department spent £484,000 on entertainment expenses in 2003–04. This amount includes refreshments provided at meetings, working lunches and other forms of hospitality.

All expenditure on official entertainment and hospitality is made in accordance with published departmental guidance on financial procedures and propriety, based on the principles set out in "Government Accounting". The giving and receiving of hospitality is conducted fully in accordance with the guidance set out in the "Ministerial Code" and "Civil Service Code".

For information on taxi costs I refer the hon. Member to the response given to the hon. Member for Arundel and South Downs (Mr. Flight) on 13 November 2003, Official Report, column 397W.

Owing to changes in the Department's accounting system expenditure on taxis since 2002 is not separately identifiable and the information requested could only be provided at disproportionate costs.

Mobile Phones

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many mobile phones were used by (a) Ministers and special advisers and (b) officials in her Department in each year since 1997; how many were (i) lost and (ii) stolen; and what their cost was. [191441]

Ruth Kelly: Information relating to mobile telephones and their cost is not held centrally and is not separately identifiable on the Department's accounting system. It cannot therefore be readily retrieved without incurring disproportionate cost.

HEALTH

Drug Rehabilitation Places

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many residential drug rehabilitation places there are, broken down by (a) police authority and (b) government office region. [190932]

Miss Melanie Johnson: We do not have information on the number of residential drug rehabilitation places broken down by police authority.

Residential drug treatment services are registered voluntarily in the residential drug treatment services directory. Based on those who have an entry in the directory, the numbers of residential drug rehabilitation places within each Government region are shown in the table.

Region	Number of places
East Midlands	80
Eastern	150
London	437
North East	110
North West	292
South East	538
South West	593
West Midlands	57
Northern and Yorkshire	125

Source:
National Treatment Agency residential directory.

It should be noted that drug action teams commonly commission residential drug rehabilitation places outside their own locality or region.

School Fruit Scheme

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health from which holding locations fruit is supplied to schools under the National School Fruit Scheme; and by what methods it is transported. [194271]

Miss Melanie Johnson: There are 17 distributors to the school fruit and vegetable scheme operating out of 23 distribution centres around the country. These are shown in the following table.

Distributor	Location of distribution centres
Pioneer Foods	Cumbria
NCB	Liverpool
CATS	Preston
Wilson Catering	Manchester
G W Price	North Yorkshire
Country Fresh	South Yorkshire
F W Gedney	Norfolk/Suffolk
Arthur Brett	West Midlands
Minor Weir and Willis	East Midlands, London, South East
Peachey's	Essex
Croydon Fruiterers	London
H B Hawkes	London
Prescott Thomas	London
A G Axton	Berkshire
West Country Foods	Cornwall
George Cossey	Somerset
Redbridge	Hereford, Stoke-on-Trent, Gateshead, Southampton, Bristol

The distributors primarily use diesel powered long wheelbase transit-type vans. Distributors are located strategically around the country to attempt to minimise the journey time to schools.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many schools are participating in the National School Fruit Scheme; and how many deliveries are made per week to these schools. [194272]

Miss Melanie Johnson: As at 27 October 2004, 13,354 schools were participating nationally in the school fruit and vegetable scheme. The total number of eligible schools is 16,796.

The national roll-out of the school fruit and vegetable scheme is currently in progress. This means that the number of participating schools is expected to increase over the following month, as schools in the South West, South East, East of England and Yorkshire and Humber regions join the scheme. By the end of the year, we anticipate that roughly 16,500 schools will be participating in the scheme.

The number of deliveries varies from school to school. Each school receives at least five deliveries over a two week cycle, but more commonly each school will receive three deliveries per week.

Agency Nurses

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the use of agency nurses within NHS hospitals within the Greater London area. [195792]

Dr. Ladyman: Information on the number of agency nurses within national health service hospitals within the Greater London area is not available centrally.

The NHS does not separately record the cost of employing agency staff. Data are collected on the total expenditure by NHS bodies on nursing, midwifery and health visiting staff who are not directly employed by NHS bodies. Data for 2003–04 are provisional, but shows, within the five London strategic health authority areas, a decrease in expenditure from £220,780,586 in 2002–03 to £186,428,833 in 2003–04.

NHS Professionals and the London agency project, a procurement process for the NHS in London to arrange the supply of temporary nursing, midwifery, health visitor and healthcare assistant staff, are working to reduce agency costs in London.

Alcohol-related Deaths

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how his Department records and collates alcohol-related deaths that fall outside the scope of the World Health Organisation ICD 10 codings for death directly attributable to alcohol; [195781]

(2) how many alcohol-related deaths were recorded in England and Wales in each of the last five years. [195782]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Numbers of deaths in England and Wales, regarded as being directly alcohol-related according to a definition used by the Office for National Statistics based on the International Classification of Diseases, are shown in the table. This presents the number of deaths certified as due to alcohol abuse, dependence and poisoning, and diseases directly related to alcohol use from 1999 to 2003, the latest year for which figures are currently available. Information on the part that alcohol may have played in deaths from other causes, including other accidents, suicides and violence, is not available from death certificates.

A number of health and lifestyle factors can also contribute to diseases such as cancer, stroke and coronary heart disease, and it can be difficult to isolate alcohol consumption as the most important of these factors.

In the Strategy Unit Alcohol Harm Reduction Project: Interim Analytical Report[1] it was estimated that in 2000 there were between 15,000 and 22,000 alcohol-related deaths in England and Wales.

[1] Prime Minister's Strategy Unit Alcohol Harm Reduction Project. Interim Analytical Report, 2003, p44, available at www.number10.gov.uk/files/pdf/SU interim report2.pdf.

Alcohol-related deaths registered in each calendar year, England and Wales, 1999 to 2003

	Number of deaths
1999	5,473
2000	5,543
2001	6,020
2002	6,100
2003	6,511

Notes:

For the years 1999–2000 the cause of death was defined using the International Classification of Diseases, Ninth Revision (ICD-9). The codes used by the Office for National Statistics to define alcohol-related deaths are listed as follows:

291: Alcoholic psychoses
303: Alcohol dependence syndrome
305.0: Non-dependent abuse of alcohol
425.5: Alcoholic cardiomyopathy
571: Chronic liver disease and cirrhosis
E860: Accidental poisoning by alcohol

For the years 2001–2003 the International Classification of Diseases, Tenth Revision (ICD-10) was used. To maintain comparability with earlier years the following codes were used:

F10: Mental and behavioural disorders due to use of alcohol
142.6: Alcoholic cardiomyopathy
K70: Alcoholic liver disease
K73: Chronic hepatitis, not elsewhere classified
K74: Fibrosis and cirrhosis of liver
X45: Accidental poisoning by and exposure to alcohol

The selection of codes to define alcohol-related deaths is described in:

Baker A and Rooney C (2003). Recent trends in alcohol-related mortality, and the impact of ICD-10 on the monitoring of these deaths in England and Wales. Health Statistics Quarterly 17, pp 5–14.

St. George's Hospital, Tooting

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients are waiting for (a) hearing aids and (b) other audiology treatment at St. George's Hospital, Tooting. [195790]

Dr. Ladyman: There are no patients waiting at St. George's Healthcare National Health Service Trust for the specialty audiological medicine.

Information is collected at specialty level but not specifically on waits for hearing aids or other specific treatments within this specialty.

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many women have been treated with IVF treatment at St. George's hospital, Tooting in each of the last three years. [195791]

Dr. Ladyman: Figures for in vitro fertilisation (IVF) treatment at St. George's hospital, Tooting are shown in the table.

	Number of patients
2001–02	313
2002–03	148

Source:
The Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority.

The assisted conception service at the St. George's Healthcare National Health Service Trust closed in 2002 and the last recorded IVF treatment at the hospital was in September 2002.

B144 Blood Testing Strips

Derek Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the withdrawal of B144 blood testing strips from NHS prescription supply. [195521]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Roche Diagnostics say that they have manufactured the BM-Test 1–44 blood testing strip for a number of years. However, as blood glucose monitoring technology has developed over the years, with faster test times and less blood required, the demand for this product has steadily declined among people with diabetes. It is within this context that Roche Diagnostics has withdrawn the product from the market.

Derek Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the cost of providing blood-testing meters to those qualifying for financial assistance with NHS prescriptions in each of the last five years. [195522]

Ms Rosie Winterton: We have made no such estimate. Blood glucose testing meters are available to patients on loan from the national health service.

Cancelled Operations

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many operations were cancelled at the last minute in the NHS in each year since 1980. [192807]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is shown in the tables. The specific definition used is operations cancelled on or after the day of admission. The information was first collected in 1994 and the table shows the figures for each quarter since then.

Operations cancelled on or after the day of admission for non clinical reasons

	Number of cancelled operations

Data Protection

Michael Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what procedures are in place (a) to check the criminal records of civil servants in his Department and agencies responsible to his Department who have access to computer databases containing confidential information on the public and (b) to ensure that there can be no improper use of computer databases containing confidential information on the public; and if he will make a statement. [194602]

Ms Rosie Winterton: All departmental staff are subject to, at least, the basic security check, which includes criminal records. There is clear personnel guidance requiring staff to inform their line manager and human resources (HR) team if civil action is being taken against them or if they are arrested on any charge or served with a summons on a criminal charge. Staff who are subsequently convicted must also report this to their line manager and HR team.

Staff are also advised that a prosecution action taken against them, whether successful or not, may affect their employment with the Department.

The departmental security unit (DHSU) provides guidance to all staff on information technology (IT) and general security. This includes the need to protect all official information and the IT Misuse Policy. Security policy, principles and guidance are based upon the Manual of Protective Security, published by Cabinet Office.

Staff are reminded that they are all responsible for security and that the compromise of information, either deliberately or through carelessness, is treated very seriously and may result in disciplinary action.

Physical and IT controls prevent staff having unauthorised access to confidential information. DHSU take regular action to raise staff awareness of security issues, including information security.

Departmental Administration Costs

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much his Department has budgeted for departmental administration costs in (a) 2004–05, (b) 2005–06, (c) 2007–08, (d) 2008–09 and (e) 2009–10. [194264]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Department's provisional net administration budgets from 2004–05 are shown in the table.

£ million

	Amount
2004–05	278
2005–06	245
2006–07	238
2007–08	225

These figures will be finalised in the light of the Department's restructuring programme and the review of arm's length bodies.

Figures for 2008–09 and 2009–10 have not yet been agreed.

E111 Forms

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures the Government have taken to alert British citizens to the 31 December deadline after which E111 forms issued before August will be invalid; how much has been spent on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising, (d) leaflets and (e) other campaigns; and if he will make a statement. [194665]

Mr. Hutton: The Department is carrying out a number of measures to publicise the arrangements for the new E111. The Department is working closely with a number of other Government Departments and agencies including the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Passport Agency, using channels of communication which already exist with the travelling public. We are working through organisations in the travel industry, such as the Association of British Insurers, the Association of British Travel Agencies and the Federation of Tour Operators to ensure the message is sent to their membership companies and to the travelling public. We have produced leaflets and posters which have been distributed to travel agents and other outlets, including Thomas Cook, MyTravel, Boots the Chemists and British Airways travel shops. We have also worked with the Post Office, who process the E111, to ensure the new form is publicised in their outlets. Finally we have placed press advertising in the travel supplements of national newspapers across the United Kingdom and in travel trade magazines. Final costs are not yet available as this publicity is on-going but about £170,000 has been spent to date.

Health Service Ombudsman

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many complaints were received by the Health Service Ombudsman in each year since 1997; and if he will make a statement. [196195]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Health Service Ombudsman publishes information about the handling of cases in her annual report, copies of which are available in the Library and on the Ombudsman's website at: www.ombudsman.org.uk

Health Spending (Chesterfield)

Paul Holmes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the health expenditure per head of the population in Chesterfield constituency has been in each year since 1997. [195577]

Dr. Ladyman: The information is not available in the format requested.

Expenditure per weighted head of population in the Trent Strategic Health Authority (SHA) area, which includes the Chesterfield constituency, has increased from £610.10 in 1997–98 to £862.03 in 2002–03. However, this does not represent the total expenditure per head, as an element of health expenditure cannot be identified by SHA area.

Hearing Aids

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will ensure that guidelines on priorities for fitting digital hearing aids (a) take into account situations where a patient has mental health problems as well as hearing loss and (b) ensure that trusts carry out a holistic assessment of patients waiting for digital hearing aids. [196066]

Dr. Ladyman: Audiology services should develop their own priorities and guidelines for fitting digital hearing aids in consultation with primary care trusts and commissioners. Best practice would suggest that all clinical teams in the national health service should be undertaking holistic assessments of their clients, including consideration of any mental health problems, but this is a matter for trusts to determine and implement.

HIV

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people living in the West Midlands area are HIV positive. [195690]

Dr. Ladyman: There were 1,695 patients seen for statutory medical HIV-related care in the West Midlands in 2003, including 24 children born to infected mothers whose HIV infection status had not been confirmed.

Hospital Infections

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of MRSA were recorded in each year since 1997; and how many resulted in death (a) in and (b) not in hospital. [193550]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 25 October 2004]: Available data on methicillin resistant Staphylococcus aureus (MRSA) blood stream infections from the voluntary and mandatory surveillance systems are shown in the tables. One of the reasons that the Government introduced mandatory surveillance in April 2001 was that the previous voluntary system produced incomplete data. Neither of these systems provides information on patient outcomes, including death, but an in-depth study of deaths possibly related to health care acquired infections (including MRSA) is being commissioned by the Chief Medical Officer.

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which strains of MRSA primary care trusts are required to report; and if he will make a statement. [194233]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Primary care trusts are not required to report methicillin resistant Staphylococcus aureus (MRSA). The mandatory reporting of MRSA blood stream infections applies to acute trusts.

Hysterectomy

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information is provided by the NHS to women on treatment options for (a) menorrhagia and (b) uterine fibroids; and what alternatives to hysterectomy are available through the NHS for the treatment of each condition. [195029]

Dr. Ladyman: The National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) guidance is provided in formats written for patients, carers and the public. NICE issued guidance on endometrial ablation for menorrhagia on 28 April 2004. It has issued guidelines on alternative surgical treatments for menorrhagia, including balloon thermal endometrial ablation (August 2003), uterine artery embolisation for fibroids (August 2003), free and fluid thermal endometrial ablation March 2003.

NICE is developing a clinical guideline on hysterectomy, which is likely to include guidance on menorrhagia, as part of its eighth wave work programme. The anticipated publication date of this guideline is February 2006.

The Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists (RCOG) also produces information for patients, developed from guidelines. The RCOG leaflet on hysterectomy advises that alternative treatments may be appropriate for patients and that their doctors will be able to fully advise on these. The national electronic library for health programme is working with national health service libraries to develop a digital library for NHS staff, patients and the public and has recently developed a specialist library covering women's health.

Iraq

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements are available for Iraqi nationals who are victims of violence in the war and who cannot be treated in Iraq due to medical deficiencies to be treated in hospitals in England; and if he will make a statement. [194014]

Mr. Hutton: Iraqi nationals are treated in civilian health care facilities in Iraq wherever possible. Some requiring care may be treated by military field hospitals and, exceptionally for specialist care, may be brought back to United Kingdom hospitals where additional capacity has been made available.

IT Systems

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to the answer of 14 June 2004, Official Report, column 685W to the hon. Member for Westbury (Dr. Murrison) on IT systems, if he will break down the estimated costs by (a) procurement, (b) implementation and (c) running cost; and on what assumptions the estimates were based. [194363]

Mr. Hutton: The procurement phase of the national programme for information technology (NPfIT) is now complete and contracts awarded are shown in the following table.

	£ million
Local service providers	4,988
National health service care records service/spine	620
New national network (N3)	530
E-booking	65
Total	6,203

These figures relate to contractual commitments. They cover ongoing funding of core deliverables and the connection of existing systems to national applications from central budgets.

The £2.3 billion, earmarked in the 2002 spending review to fund the IT development and NPfIT central programme costs over the three years 2003–04 to 2005–06, was based on individual project business case assumptions about the speed and scope of deployment in the period concerned. This figure does not include the cost of training NHS staff or local change management costs.

Funding for the local NHS service implementation and running costs of NPfIT will come from normal NHS allocations, which are being increased year on year and will reach £90 billion by 2008. This will involve prioritising normal expenditure, including training budgets to include NPfIT in local training programmes.

Future funding to the NHS determined by the SR2004 expenditure settlement will enable trusts to achieve the target of 4 per cent. for total NHS spending on IT, set by the 2002 Wanless Report, "Securing our Future Health". This total includes spending on IT provision outside the NPfIT remit, such as human resources and finance IT systems.

Junior Doctors

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of unemployment levels among non-UK trained junior doctors living in England. [195580]

Mr. Hutton: In September 2003, the national health service employed almost 36,000 doctors who had obtained their medical qualification outside of the United Kingdom. The Department does not collect information about the unemployment levels of junior doctors.

Junior doctors who have trained outside of the UK have to pass the Professional and Linguistic Assessment Board (PLAB) examination before being accepted onto the General Medical Council (GMC) register. The GMC has surveyed doctors who have taken the PLAB examination in the last year to find out how quickly they obtain posts. The survey has shown that 93 per cent. have obtained a post within a year.

Mental Health

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure that the patient choice agenda extends to mental health patients. [195783]

Ms Rosie Winterton: A mental health choice steering group has been established under the auspices of the National Institute for Mental Health England (NIMHE). The group aims to inform the development of choice policy in mental health and has produced a discussion document which will be presented to the mental health taskforce in December.

In 2002–03, NIMHE's Access, Booking and Choice in Mental Health programme was rolled out across each of its eight development centres in order to provide stakeholders from across local mental health communities with proven tools and techniques of service redesign. Detailed outcomes of this NIMHE programme are described in "Improving Access and Choice: Service Improvement Guide, 2003" which is available on the NIMHE website at http://www.nimhe.org.uk/downloads/ABC%20ImproGuide%20Corr%27d%207 03.pdf

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure that patients with severe mental health problems have access to (a) useful information and (b) the highest quality treatments. [195784]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The national service framework for mental health (1999) set national standards and identified key interventions for working age adults with mental health problems.

Clinical guidelines published by the National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) provide guidance on the appropriate treatment and care of people with specific mental health problems within the national health service.

Technology appraisals published by NICE provide guidance on the use of new and existing medicines and treatments within the NHS.

NICE runs a web-based online environment, the knowledge community (http://kc.nimhe.org.uk/), to help improve the delivery of mental health services. The knowledge community represents the diversity of approaches and perspectives that exist within the mental health field, and provides a practical means by which these can be brought together to improve services.

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the proposed five-yearly review of the national service framework for mental health will examine issues relating to patient choice, with particular reference to (a) the availability of cognitive behaviour therapy and (b) implementation of guidance from the National Institute for Clinical Excellence for atypical antipsychotics where choice is central to that guidance. [195787]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The national director for mental health's review of the national service framework for mental health (1999) looks at the implementation of its seven standards and the supporting programmes. The review will also take a forward look outlining future priorities for mental health including how these will align with broader national health service initiatives such as choice.

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what objectives he has set the National Director for Mental Health in relation to patient choice. [195788]

Ms Rosie Winterton: No specific objectives in relation to patient choice have been set for the national director for mental health. However, he is actively involved in the mental health choice steering group, which has been established under the auspices of the National Institute for Mental Health England to inform the development of choice policy in mental heath.

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment he has made of the implementation of current guidance from the National Institute for Clinical Excellence in relation to atypical antipsychotics; [195785]

(2) what monitoring he undertakes of the extent to which patients with newly diagnosed schizophrenia are being offered a clear choice of treatment, in line with guidance from the National Institute for Clinical Excellence; and what assessment he has made of the barriers to implement that guidance. [195786]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Responsibility to implement guidance published by National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) is devolved within the National Health Services to local trusts, supported and performance managed by strategic health authorities. The Department has made no assessments of the kind outlined by my hon. Friend.

However, the Department routinely monitors prescribing trends of all antipsychotics. For the year ending June 2004, atypical antipsychotics accounted for 60 per cent. of all prescription items of antipsychotics dispensed in the community in England, compared to 48 per cent. of all antipsychotics for the year ending June 2002, when the relevant NICE appraisal guidance was published.

Since January 2002, the National Health Service has had three months from the date of publication of each technology appraisal guidance to provide funding so that clinical decisions made by doctors involving NICE recommended treatments or drugs can be funded.

Leighton Hospital

Sir Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on the future of the mother and baby unit in the mental health unit at Leighton hospital; [194367]

(2) what representations he has received about the proposed closure of the mother and baby unit in the mental health unit at Leighton hospital; [194368]

(3) for what reasons the mother and baby unit in the mental health unit at Leighton hospital will be closed; [194369]

(4) what assessment he has made of the effect on (a) patients and (b) patients' families of the closure of the mother and baby unit in the mental health unit at Leighton hospital; [194371]

(5) what provisions there is for mentally ill mothers with babies in the (a) Cheshire, (b) Wirral, (c) Merseyside, (d) North Wales, (e) Shropshire and (f) North Staffordshire areas; and if he will make a statement. [194372]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The provision of services for people locally is the responsibility of primary care trusts (PCTs), in partnership with their local communities to ensure that adequate arrangements are in place which will meet the needs of client groups. Strategic health authorities are responsible for performance managing their local PCTs to ensure that appropriate services are commissioned for the communities they serve.

The future of the mother and baby unit at Leighton hospital is a matter for the Cheshire and Wirral Partnership NHS Trust, in partnership with its local PCTs. The trust has put forward proposals regarding the mother and baby unit, which are considered to be consistent with current developments in perinatal mental health.

According to departmental records, one letter and six questions from hon. and right hon. Members have been received on this issue.

Sir Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will calculate the cost of running the mother and baby unit in the mental health unit at Leighton hospital in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [194370]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested is not collected centrally.

MRI/CT Scanners

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) MRI and (b) CT scanners each NHS trust has; and what the age of each machine is. [194266]

Miss Melanie Johnson: There are currently 230 magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) scanners and 335 computed tomography (CT) scanners installed in the national health service in England. The complete list, detailing the location and age of each scanner, has been placed in the Library.

To date, new and replacement equipment provided through central programmes includes: 66 new MRI scanners, 83 linear accelerators, 166 CT scanners and over 700 items of breast screening equipment; all delivered since April 2000.

This means that, in total, approximately 50 per cent. of MRI scanners, 67 per cent. of CT scanners and 56 per cent. of linear accelerators now in use in the NHS are new since January 2000.

NHS Consultants/Doctors

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many full-time NHS (a) consultants and (b) other hospital doctors there were in each speciality in hospitals in (i) Scunthorpe and (ii) Grimsby in each year since 1994. [194186]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

NHS Live 2004

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the budget is for NHS Live 2004 in the area covered by Kent and Medway Strategic Health Authority. [193910]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The NHS Live budget is not broken down by specific strategic health authority area.

NHS Logistics Authority

Jon Trickett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what recent discussions he has had with trade unions in relation to the proposed abolition of the NHS Logistics Authority; [195027]

(2) if he will make a statement on the future of the NHS Logistics Authority. [195028]

Ms Rosie Winterton: "Reconfiguring the Department of Health's Arm's Length Bodies" (July 2004) included the proposal that the work of the National Health Service Logistics Authority would be market-tested. This involved the publication of a contract notice in the Official Journal of the European Union (OJEU), which notified potential bidders in member states of the European Union of the Department's intention to market test the proposed outsourcing of the supply chain and procurement services for the NHS. This was published on 19 August 2004.

Organisations interested in bidding for the contract had to apply to the Department in order to participate in the competition. These interested parties have had to complete and submit a pre-qualification questionnaire (PQQ). This will ensure that only suitably qualified candidates will be short-listed to submit bids. The PQQ closed on 8 October and the Department is currently in the process of evaluating the responses.

At this stage, no decision has been taken about contracting out. Only when the market testing has been completed will a final decision be made. However, consultation with the unions has begun. Representatives from the NHS Logistics Authority, NHS Purchasing and Supply Agency (PASA) and the commercial directorate were invited to Unison's initiative day on 13 September. A representative from the Public and Commercial Services union was also present. This was the start of the formal consultation process.

For the purposes of consultation, Unison has established a group comprising a representative from each distribution centre within the NHS Logistics Authority. This team meets monthly with the NHS Logistics Authority, NHS PASA and the commercial directorate.

Ritalin

Alistair Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children aged (a) up to five, (b) five to 10 and (c) 10 to 14 years are currently being treated with ritalin within (a) North East Bedfordshire, (b) Bedford Primary Care Trust area and (c) Bedfordshire Heartlands Primary Care Trust; what percentage of children within each cohort these figures represent; and if he will make a statement. [195766]

Dr. Ladyman: Information is not available in the form requested. The Department does not hold data on the number of people who receive a particular medication. However, the figures in the table show the total number of prescription items of methylphenidate hydrochloride dispensed in the community for a 12 month period up to June 2004. Ritalin is one brand of the drug methylphenidate.

Total items dispensed

	(Thousand)
England	263.7
Bedfordshire and Hertfordshire Strategic Health Authority	8.5
Bedford Primary Care Trust (PCT)	0.6
Bedfordshire Heartlands PCT	1.9

Source:

Prescription cost analysis data from the Prescription Pricing Authority.

In 2003, it is estimated that around 90 per cent., of all prescription items of methylphenidate were dispensed in the community to children.

Smear Tests

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients in Hull and the East Riding had smear tests in (a) 2003 and (b) 2004. [195136]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information is shown in the table.

Cervical screening programme: number of tests and coverage of target age group (25–64) by primary care organisation, 2002–03 and 2003–04

Pharmacists

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the cost will be of the new community pharmacy contract to pharmacists looking to expand their practices. [195474]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The new funding arrangements for community pharmacy have been informed by a cost of service inquiry for existing provision and detailed modelling of the costs of new services. The cost to community pharmacies of expanding services to include those detailed in the new contractual framework will vary. Cost will be dependant on the size of the pharmacy, how easily premises can be adapted to offer additional services, staffing levels and which services are to be provided.

Processed Food (Salt)

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he will take to ensure that supermarkets and food manufacturers reduce the salt content of processed food products. [191130]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Department and the Food Standards Agency are working together with all parts of the food industry, including retailers and manufacturers, to reduce the salt levels of processed foods. The aim is to reduce average intakes of salt to six grams per person per day by 2010.

Waiting Times

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people in Hull and the East Riding waited 13 weeks or more for an out-patient appointment in (a) 2003 and (b) 2004. [194957]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information is shown in the table.

Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what changes there have been to NHS waiting list times for residents of South West Surrey in the past seven years; [195087]

(2) how many in-patients in the primary health trust covering South West Surrey had to wait more than (a) three, (b) six, (c) nine and (d) 12 months for treatment in each year since 1997; and what the percentage change was in each case. [195100]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The numbers of people waiting more than three, six, nine and 12 months for treatment in each year since 1997 and the comparisons for the last seven years are shown in the tables.

Willerby Call Centre

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what call statistics have been collated for the East Riding NHS Direct call centre in Willerby for the last 12 months. [194977]

Miss Melanie Johnson: This information is not held centrally.

Yellow Card Scheme

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether he plans to make the Yellow Card scheme a compulsory component of clinical training of medical students; [190500]

(2) what plans he has to increase awareness of the Yellow Card scheme among (a) health professionals and (b) patients; [190501]

(3) what measures he has taken in response to the findings of the Report of an Independent Review of Access to the Yellow Card scheme; [190502]

(4) what plans he has to allow patients to send yellow card reports to the Medical and Healthcare Products Regulatory Agency. [190701]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The report of an independent review of access to yellow card scheme was published in May 2004 and my noble Friend, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health, Lord Warner, immediately accepted the recommendation to introduce a system of direct patient reporting of suspected adverse drug reactions (ADRs) to the Medicines and Healthcare products Regulatory Agency (MHRA). An expert working group of the Committee on the Safety of Medicines (CSM) has been established to advise on how best to develop effective patient reporting nationally, including aspects of communication and evaluation. The expert working group is chaired by Dr. Patricia Wilkie, a lay-member of the CSM; is multidisciplinary, has broad representation and has met twice to date. Work has commenced on the development of pilot patient reporting schemes.

In advance of the first formal pilot, the MHRA has already begun work on a pre-pilot survey of patients who have experienced suspected adverse drug reactions during the last year, so the patient perspective can be built into the development of pilot schemes from the outset. Invitations to patients to be involved in this survey, which will help to shape the future design of direct patient reporting systems are going out this week, to coincide with "Ask About Medicines" week.

The independent review of access to the yellow card scheme also includes recommendations to strengthen the scheme by raising public awareness of the important role the scheme has in protecting public health. The report recommends that a communications strategy should be developed to improve professional and public education and provision of information about the yellow card scheme and that the scheme should receive greater emphasis during the clinical training of all health professionals, whether they prescribe or not. These specific recommendations are being considered in conjunction with the other recommendations in the report.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Consultancy Services

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development pursuant to his answer of 19 October 2004, Official Report, columns 562–64W, on consultancy services, (1) if he will list the contracts awarded to Options Consultancy Services Ltd. in 1999–2000, listing (a) the type of work conducted under the contract, (b) the value of the contract and (c) the country in which the work was conducted; [195739]

(2) if he will list the contracts awarded to Deloitte & Touche South Africa in 2002–03, listing (a) the type of work conducted under the contract and (b) the country in which the work was conducted; [195745]

(3) if he will list the contracts awarded to Adam Smith International Ltd. in each year from 1999–2000 to 2002–03, listing (a) the type of work conducted under the contract, (b) the value of the contract and (c) the country in which the work was conducted; [195756]

(4) if he will list the contracts awarded to The Crown Agents for Overseas Governments and Administrations Ltd. in each year from 1999–2000 to 2002–03, listing (a) the type of work conducted under the contract, (b) the value of the contract and (c) the country in which the work was conducted; [195757]

(5) if he will list the contracts awarded to Arcadis BMB in 2001–02 listing (a) the type of work conducted under the contract, (b) the value of the contract and (c) the country in which the work was conducted; [195740]

(6) if he will list the contracts awarded to Maxwell Stamp plc in 2002–03, listing (a) the type of work conducted under the contract and (b) the country in which the work was conducted; [195749]

(7) if he will list the contracts awarded to WSP International Ltd. in each year from 1999–2000 to 2001–02, listing (a) the type of work conducted under the contract and (b) the country in which the work was conducted; [195750]

(8) if he will list the contracts awarded to ATOS KPMG Consulting Ltd. in (a) 2000–01 and (b) 2002–03; what was conducted under the contract; what the value of the contracts was; and in which country the work was conducted; [195741]

(9) if he will list the new contracts awarded to each consultancy during 2003–04; what work was conducted under each contract; and in which country; [195742]

(10) if he will list the contracts awarded to Futures Group Europe Ltd., listing (a) the type of work conducted under the contract and (b) the country in which the work was conducted; [195751]

(11) if he will list the contracts awarded to IHSD Ltd./HLSP in each year from 1999–2000 to 2002–03, listing (a) the type of work conducted under the contract, (b) the value of the contract and (c) the country in which the work was conducted; [195752]

(12) if he will list the contracts awarded to Oxford Policy management Ltd. in each year from 2000–01 to 2002–03, listing (a) the type of work conducted under the contract, (b) the value of the contract and (c) the country in which the work was conducted; [195743]

(13) if he will list the contracts awarded to the British Council in each year from 1999–2000 to 2002–03, listing (a) the type of work conducted under the contract and (b) the country in which the work was conducted; [195744]

(14) if he will list the contracts awarded to GRM International Ltd., listing (a) the type of work conducted under the contract, (b) the value of the contract and (c) the country in which the work was conducted; [195753]

(15) if he will list the contracts awarded to Roughton International, listing the type of work conducted under the contract, the value of the contract and the country in which the work was conducted; [195754]

(16) if he will list the contracts awarded to Enterprise plc, listing the type of work conducted under the contract, the value of the contract and the country in which the work was conducted; [195755]

(17) if he will list the contracts awarded to PricewaterhouseCoopers in 1999–2000, listing (a) the type of work conducted under the contract, (b) the value of the contract and (c) the country in which the work was conducted. [195758]

Hilary Benn: The information requested will be placed in the Libraries of the House shortly, in a document entitled "Top 20 Consultancy Firms 1999 to 2004—Contracts Awarded"

Departmental Estate

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will list the properties occupied by (a) his Department and (b) its agencies in (i) 1997 and (ii) 2004; and what the (A) area and (B) annual rental value (1) in aggregate and (2) in each case was in each year. [196071]

Hilary Benn: The properties occupied by DFID in the UK in 1997 and in 2004, their area, and annual rental value, are as set out in the table. There are no agencies for which DFID is responsible. The rent at 20 Victoria Street increased following a rent review in 2002 and because DFID took over full occupancy of the building

	Area (sq m)	Rental value (£ million)
1997
94 Victoria St. London	13,093	4,659,300
20 Victoria St. London	1,055	250,000
Abercrombie House, East Kilbride	8,755	575,500
Total	23,026	5,484,800
2004
1 Palace St. London	15,910	4,693,450
20 Victoria St. London	1,178	462,820
Abercrombie House, East Kilbride (including extension)	9,755	669,100
Total	26,843	5,825,370

Departmental IT

Brian White: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what percentage of the Department's (a) implemented and (b) planned computer systems use open source software; and what plans are in place to raise this level. [195653]

Hilary Benn: Less than 5 per cent. of DFID's current computer systems use Open Source Software (OSS) components. It is expected that by 2007, up to 70 per cent. of DFID's computer systems will include some OSS components, using the definition adopted by the Open Source Initiative. DFID's policies for software procurement follow the Office of Government Commerce's "level playing field" policy in relation to OSS. This does not require the raising of levels of OSS usage in Government, rather that Government considers OSS solutions alongside proprietary ones in IT procurements and that contracts should be awarded on a value for money, case by case basis. The policy can be viewed at www.govtalk.gov.uk

Ghana

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when the IPPD2 Ghana payroll system project started; what the initial contract value of the project was; what the projected total contract value is; what the (a) original and (b) current estimated completion date is; and what assessment has been made of the value for money represented by the project. [194942]

Hilary Benn: A project for the replacement of the Government of Ghana's Integrated Personnel and Payroll Database (IPPD2) was agreed between Britain and Ghana in May 1999. The total commitment was £3.5 million, of which £1.5 million was designated for contracts for goods and services and £2 million was designated for financial aid to the Government of Ghana. The projected completion date was October 2000. When that date was reached, expenditure amounted to £2.3 million, of which £1.2 million had been spent on contracts for goods and services and £1.1 million had been spent on financial aid. However, DFID decided that there were serious obstacles to the achievement of the project's objectives, and informed the Government of Ghana that the funding commitment would not be extended.

Since then there have been extensive discussions with the Government of Ghana over restarting the project. A further grant of £3.9 million was agreed in principle, in October 2002, but lapsed in March 2004. £129,000 was spent under the grant for an audit of the previous work and advice on options. However, there is presently no agreed project receiving DFID support, and no date for completion of the IPPD replacement.

The project has previously been reported to the House as "only partly achieving [its] purpose and output during 2003"—Official Report, 20 May 2004, columns 1122–23W. A subsequent analysis of the project's implementation status found that the project had not met its objectives.

Temporary Staff

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many agency temporary staff have been working for the Department in each of the last five years, excluding those working for agencies for which no data is kept centrally. [196062]

Hilary Benn: DFID currently has no central record of agency workers, and therefore this information could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Civil Servants

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the average length of continuous service for civil servants within the Department is. [194398]

Mr. Alexander: In 2003 (the latest date for which figures are available) civil servants then employed by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office had been in continuous employment for an average of just over 13 years.

Consultants

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much expenditure his Department has incurred in each year since 2002 on employing external consultants to deal with the press and public relations of his Department; and if he will make a statement. [195461]

Mr. Rammell: As set out in my reply to the right hon. and learned Member for Devizes (Mr. Ancram) on 20 July 2004, Official Report, column 171W, in FY 2002–03—the most recent year for which audited figures are available—the Foreign and Commonwealth Office's (FCO) central expenditure on public relations external consultancy totalled £291,971. Of this, £268,862 was paid to a single agency for work on the consular awareness-raising campaign "Know Before You Go".

The FCO's overseas posts and its non-departmental public bodies occasionally employ public relations external consultants, but details are not recorded centrally. Information about the costs incurred by these activities could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The FCO is unaware of any central expenditure on press-related external consultancy.

Departmental Disciplinary Procedures

Mr. Mark Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the total cost in each of the last three financial years was of his Department's internal disciplinary procedures; and how much was spent on (a) external lawyers and (b) commissioning independent experts and adjudications. [195794]

Mr. Alexander: We do not have precise figures readily available for the costs incurred as a result of Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO) internal disciplinary procedures over the last three years. The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost. In the majority of cases legal advice is provided by FCO legal advisers. We would commission specialist external advice only if there were a need to consult on a detailed question of employment law.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many agency temporary staff have been working for the Department in each of the last five years, excluding those working for agencies for which no data are kept centrally. [196063]

Mr. Alexander: We do not have a central record of the numbers of staff employed under contract from agencies; to obtain these figures would incur disproportionate costs. We do, however, have the costs, which are:

2000–01	1,255,817
2001–02	1,933,841
2002–03	1,850,779
2003–04	1,630,613

Entry Clearance

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many entry clearance refusals he has overturned in 2004. [194446]

Mr. Mullin: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has not overturned any refusals in 2004 but I, as the Minister responsible for entry clearance matters overseas, have overturned 13 refusals in 2004 to date.

EU Savings Directive

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment his Department has made of the impact of the EU Savings Directive on the (a) British Virgin Islands, (b) Cayman Islands and (c) other dependent territories. [195828]

Mr. Rammell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Paymaster General to the hon. Member for Eddisbury (Mr. O'Brien) on 25 October 2004, Official Report, column 1057W.

Gabon

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has for the establishment of a British (a) consulate and (b) embassy in Gabon; and if he will make a statement. [195439]

Mr. Mullin: We have no plans to open either a consulate or an embassy in Gabon. The British high commissioner to Cameroon, who is resident in Yaoundé, is accredited as ambassador to Gabon. We have also appointed a British honorary consul who is resident in Libreville.

Gibraltar

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Government of Gibraltar; and which issues were discussed. [195587]

Mr. MacShane: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary met with the Chief Minister of Gibraltar on 20 October. They were also in contact on 27 October to discuss the content of the joint statement made by the Foreign Secretary and his Spanish counterpart, Senor Moratinos. The Chief Minister confirmed that he was entirely content with the joint statement.

Iraq

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his US counterparts concerning measures to protect (a) Christian communities and (b) Christian churches from terrorist attacks in Iraq. [195064]

Mr. Rammell: We are in regular contact with our US counterparts at all levels on security issues in Iraq. UK and US officials in Iraq regularly meet with members of the Christian communities. And we have raised their concerns with the Iraqi authorities. Our missions in Iraq are monitoring the situation closely.

Hugh Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what role the Government plan for the UN in ensuring independent monitoring of the forthcoming elections in Iraq. [195180]

Mr. Rammell [holding answer 1 November 2004]: The UN is supporting elections in Iraq as mandated in UNSCR 1546 through providing advice and training to the Independent Electoral Commission of Iraq (IECI), the lead body responsible for preparing elections. Among its many tasks, the IECI with the help of the UN is training independent Iraqi election monitors.

Sudan

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the extent of access for humanitarian and human rights organisations to all parts of Sudan. [194460]

Hilary Benn: I have been asked to reply.

The issue of access is key to the precarious humanitarian situation in Darfur and the rest of Sudan. Humanitarian access has been improving. In the initial stages of the crisis the humanitarian community faced many obstacles in responding to the situation. Significant pressure was placed on the Government of Sudan by the UK and others to help ensure the entry and movement of humanitarian staff, commodities, and equipment into Darfur. As a result, the Government of Sudan have made positive steps in enhancing access and DFID is monitoring the situation. This progress is reflected in the rise in the number humanitarian staff operating in Darfur. This has increased from 2,043 staff of which 322 were international on 1 July 2004 to a figure of 6,154 staff on 1 October, of which 779 were international.

Access by the UN to people involved has gradually improved. In the UN's most recent Humanitarian Needs Profile (1 October), it reported that it had reached 88 per cent. of the 2 million people affected by the conflict. The level of access differs from 98 per cent. of the affected population in West Darfur to 89 per cent. in North Darfur, and 73 per cent. in South Darfur.

Humanitarian access in Darfur mainly depends on two factors: the degree of insecurity on the ground and road and weather conditions. Although the UN has agreed operating procedures with the Sudan Liberation Movement, access to Sudan Liberation Army-held areas remains problematic due to recent restrictions imposed by the rebel groups as well as several security incidents. Across the rest of the country, the picture is mixed. It is still difficult for some agencies to access areas such as Southern Blue Nile and parts of Kassla State (Hamesh Koreb). Elsewhere, access is better, although the security situation can change at short notice.

The British Government take the problems in Sudan extremely seriously. In the last two months, the Prime Minister, the Foreign Secretary, the Minister for Africa and myself, visited Sudan and urged the Government of Sudan to meet the commitments they gave to the UN regarding humanitarian access and security. The Foreign Secretary secured the Government of Sudan's agreement to access to Darfur for human rights agencies previously denied visas. In Khartoum, the ambassador has taken the lead in establishing regular meetings with the Government of Sudan, NGO's and donors to discuss among other things, the question of access in Sudan, highlighting specific instances of ongoing bureaucratic difficulties.

The UN and the UK Government along with others, continue to press both the Government of Sudan and the rebels to allowed unfettered access throughout Darfur. We are also pressing all parties to sign and deliver on the Abuja humanitarian protocol.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Sudan about the need to ensure that all parties to the peace process grant the International Committee of the Red Cross the assistance it needs to carry out its protection mandate. [194486]

Hilary Benn: I have been asked to reply.

The UK is actively trying to ensure access for all humanitarian agencies, including the International Red Cross Committee (ICRC). DFID works with colleagues from the UN, and other Development Ministers, to press both the Government of Sudan and the rebels to allowed unfettered access throughout Darfur. DFID is pressing all parties to sign and deliver on the Abuja humanitarian protocol.

In the last two months, the Prime Minister, the Foreign Secretary, the Minister for Africa and myself have all visited Sudan to urge the Government of Sudan to meet the commitments it gave to the UN regarding humanitarian access and security.

DFID regularly raises the importance of protection of civilians in our discussions with the Government of Sudan.

Through direct aid, the UK continues to support the humanitarian community and is now the second biggest bilateral donor in Sudan, allocating since March this year £55.5 million for Darfur and £35 million for Sudan as a whole. Of this, DFID has committed £4.5million to the ICRC for the whole of Sudan.

Uzbekistan

Sir Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the withdrawal of Mr. Craig Murray, former Ambassador to Uzbekistan. [195508]

Mr. Straw: Operational staffing decisions are taken by senior Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO) officials, in accordance with long-standing convention. My officials decided to withdraw Mr. Murray from his post as he was no longer able to perform effectively the full range of duties required in the conduct of our relations with Uzbekistan. Mr. Murray has since been suspended on full pay pending investigation into his conduct in relation to a number of statements which have been made about the FCO.

Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set up an inquiry into the leaking of a confidential report from former British Ambassador to Uzbekistan, Craig Murray, to The Financial Times. [195938]

Mr. Alexander: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office launched an investigation on 14 October into the leak of a confidential document to the Financial Times, in accordance with Cabinet Office guidelines.

Zimbabwe

Sir Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will estimate the number of British war (a) veterans and (b) widows living in Zimbabwe; and if he will make a statement. [195044]

Mr. Mullin: There are currently 13,000 British nationals resident in Zimbabwe but the records do not specify how many of them are war veterans and widows.

Sir Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the (a) financial and (b) physical wellbeing of British war (i) veterans and (ii) widows living in Zimbabwe; and if he will make a statement. [195045]

Mr. Mullin: We do not make assessments of financial or physical wellbeing of British nationals living overseas, whether war veterans or not. If a British national is in need of consular assistance, we will help as much as we properly can.

Sir Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans Her Majesty's Government have to organise the emergency repatriation of British war (a) veterans and (b) widows living in Zimbabwe who express a wish to return to the UK; and if he will make a statement. [195047]

Mr. Mullin: Although we have emergency evacuation plans for British nationals in the event of certain scenarios, for example civil disorder or natural disaster, we do not have any specific plans to repatriate those British war veterans and widows who express a wish to return to the UK.

If British war veterans or widows express a wish to return to the UK, we will offer all appropriate advice and assistance we can, eg contacting relatives or friends in the UK for financial or other assistance. We may also be able to help with travel documents. We can also provide information on such things as state benefits, health and education services, citizenship and employment, to inform returning UK nationals about the options available to them on return to the UK.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Closed-circuit Television

Mr. Gregory Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of change in criminal activity in Northern Ireland since the introduction of CCTV in a number of urban centres. [194786]

Mr. Spellar: There are currently 19 publicly funded town centre CCTV systems installed across Northern Ireland for the purposes of tackling crime and antisocial behaviour.

The former Police Authority for Northern Ireland who handled the allocation of funding for most of the town centre schemes in Northern Ireland, required each individual scheme to arrange an evaluation of their performance in the two years after the CCTV system became operational. All evaluations received to date indicate that in the areas where CCTV was in operation, crime was reduced or, the rate of increase was slower than other areas and the level of detection of crime increased. In some areas the level of reported crime increased as the cameras witnessed crimes not normally reported, thought this was usually combined with an increase in detection.

It is also important to point out that levels of recorded crime have fallen across Northern Ireland over the past two years. This is due to a number of factors, including improved police performance. However, I have little doubt that CCTV has also played a part in this reduction.

Explorers Programme

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what criteria he has used to assess the value for money of the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment's Explorers Programme; what assessment he has made of that programme's performance; and if he will make a statement. [195543]

Mr. Spellar: The Explorers Programme was externally assessed by KPMG in December 2001. This assessment confirmed that the programme offered value for money and made a positive contribution to the Northern Ireland economy.

A wide range of criteria were used to assess the achievement of both tangible outputs reflected in growth in exports by participating companies and intangible outputs such as addressing psychological barriers to exporting.

The programme continues to be assessed internally using the broad portfolio of measures identified and applied by KPMG and is currently meeting its targets and objectives.

The programme contributes to addressing commitments and targets contained in the Programme for Government published by the former Northern Ireland Executive, which are in turn reflected in the objectives of the Invest NI Corporate Plan 2002–05.

Health Service

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much of the money raised by the introduction of water charges is planned to be spent on the Health Service. [195218]

Mr. Spellar: The self-financing arrangements for water and sewerage services to be introduced from 2006–07, or as soon as practicable thereafter, will require all customers, domestic and non-domestic, to contribute directly towards the cost of the services they receive. The charges will be used solely for the purposes of water and sewerage services. The introduction of self-financing arrangements will therefore free resources within the Northern Ireland Departmental expenditure limit for allocation to other public spending priorities, as determined within the annual public expenditure planning process.

Library Board Suspensions

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the recent suspension of officials from the (a) Belfast education and library board and (b) South Eastern education and library board following the discovery of budget deficits. [195915]

Mr. Gardiner: I have been informed by the Belfast education and library board that both its chief executive and its deputy chief finance officer are currently under precautionary suspension. I understand that the South Eastern board has suspended its chief finance officer, again as a precautionary measure.

As these suspensions are precautionary measures, it would be inappropriate for me to comment further on the specifics of each case.

Prisons

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether slopping-out is still required in any prisons in Northern Ireland. [195541]

Mr. Pearson: Generally, daily slopping-out of cells is no longer required in any prisons in Northern Ireland. Maghaberry has in-cell sanitation and both Hydebank Wood and Magilligan operate an electronic unlock to facilitate access to toilets. Both of the latter establishments do provide plastic chamber pots, if requested, but these are for emergencies only and are seldom asked for or used.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the (a) baseline certified normal accommodation, (b) in-use certified normal accommodation, (c) operational capacity, (d) useable operational capacity and (e) current population is of each prison and young offenders institution in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [195542]

Mr. Pearson: The information is as follows:

	Cells	Inmates
(a) Baseline certified normal accommodation	1449	—
(b) In-use certified normal accommodation	1283	—
(c) Operational capacity	1303	—
(d) Useable operational capacity	1303	—
(e) Current population:
HMP Maghaberry Prison	—	723
HMP Magilligan Prison	—	348
Hydebank Wood Young Offenders Centre	—	263

Note:

The number of cells at (a) and (b) exclude Healthcare Centres and Special Supervision Units. Due to insufficient staff resources, 146 cells are currently out of use, including 58 in Mourne House, Maghaberry, which is being held as contingency accommodation. The figures shown at (e) include prisoners on temporary release

Schools (Maintenance Work)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the backlog was of (a) high priority and (b) other maintenance work in the schools estate in Northern Ireland at (i) 31 March 2001, (ii) 31 March 2002, (iii) 31 March 2003, (iv) 31 March 2004; what the backlog is now; and if he will make a statement. [195436]

Mr. Gardiner: The information is as follows.

(a) Estimates of maintenance work are identified through ongoing condition surveys of the schools' estate. High priority maintenance is defined as work required on buildings in either a poor or very poor condition. The estimated cost of addressing the high priority maintenance backlog in the school estate at the dates requested is as follows:

Backlog at 31 March	£000
(i) 2001	[1]139,400
(ii) 2002	131,980
(iii) 2003	126,200
(iv) 2004	123,800
(v) Estimated figures at 31 October 2004	125,704

[1] The first set of condition surveys was not fully completed by 31 March 2001. The total estimate for 2001 is based on an estimate of £114.4 million as calculated at the time plus £25 million subsequently identified once the surveys were completed.

(b) Other maintenance—no information is currently held on the estimated costs of "other maintenance".

Over the period April 2001 to March 2004 some £41.5 million was spent on addressing high priority maintenance work.

Temporary Classrooms

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many temporary classrooms there are in schools in Northern Ireland; how many there were at the end of each financial year since 2000–01; and if he will make a statement. [195435]

Mr. Gardiner: The Department of Education has recently carried out a survey to ascertain the number of temporary classrooms currently in use. The outcome of the survey indicated that at 31 March 2004 there were 2,964 temporary classrooms in the school's estate.

Similar surveys were not undertaken in previous years so it is not possible to provide comparative figures for those years. The number of temporary classrooms in use changes in line with the resources available and schools' needs. Over the three year period from April 2001 to March 2004 a total of 369 temporary classrooms were removed from the schools' estate, and 69 classrooms were added. There are plans to remove 165 temporary classrooms in 2004–05 and 746 in subsequent years based on investment already planned for the schools' estate.

Tsar Appointments

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many tsars have been appointed with responsibilities which cover part of the work of his Department; and if he will make a statement. [191924]

Mr. Spellar: None.

TREASURY

Equity Release Schemes

Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to the answer of 28 October 2004, Official Report, column 1381W, on equity release schemes, what plans he has to change the inheritance tax rules which impact on equity release schemes. [195726]

John Healey: We have no such plans.

Income Tax (Pensioners)

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many pensioners paid (a) no income tax, (b) 10 per cent. income tax, (c) basic rate income tax and (d) higher rate income tax, in England, in (i) 1997 and (ii) the latest year for which figures are available. [194688]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Havant (Mr. Willetts) on 2 July 2002, Official Report, column 288W.

The numbers of pensioner taxpayers over state retirement age in the UK for the year 2001–02 are given in the table.

2001–02	Number (Thousand)
(a) No tax[1]	6,070
(b) Starting rate tax	1,000
Savers rate	550
(c) Basic rate	3,020
(d) Higher rate	210

ONS mid-year population estimates and GAD population projections

The estimates are based upon the Survey of Personal Incomes.

Working Tax Credit

Mr. Denham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the number of cases in which errors in the calculation of working tax credit were caused by mistakes by staff in the last period for which figures are available. [195917]

John Healey: I refer my right hon. Friend to the reply my right hon. Friend the Paymaster General gave to the hon. Member for North Norfolk (Norman Lamb) on 22 March 2004, Official Report, column 666W.

WORK AND PENSIONS

70-plus Payment

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will estimate how many people will need to make a claim for the one-off 70-plus Payment; how many claims have been received; and whether there is a deadline before which a claim needs to be submitted to ensure payment before 25 December. [194696]

Malcolm Wicks: It is impossible to estimate with confidence how many people will have to claim the one-off 70-plus payment but we think very few indeed of the approximate 6.4 million pensioners who are entitled will have to claim. One person has claimed so far but this pensioner would have been paid automatically. The deadline for claiming is 30 March 2005. Any who claim will be paid as soon as possible.

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the cost was in 2003–04 of benefits payable because the beneficiary had a medical condition or disability; and how much of that sum constituted payments for which the beneficiary qualified because of chronic pain. [194983]

Maria Eagle: In 2003–04, total Disability Living Allowance and Attendance Allowance payments amounted to some £11 billion and of this sum an estimated £4.1 billion was paid to people for whom their recorded main disabling condition was one usually associated with chronic pain.

Benefit Payments (Pensioners)

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will estimate the value of expenditure (a) in cash terms, (b) at current prices and (c) as a share of gross domestic product on (i) retirement pensions, (ii) winter fuel payments, (iii) means-tested benefits for pensioners, (iv) all other benefits for pensioners and (v) free television licences in each year from 1992–93 to the end of the public expenditure planning period. [193664]

Notes:

1. Information is not available at UK level and can be provided only at GB level.
2. No information about the percentage of people claiming the child tax credit is yet available. As at July 2004, about 4.37 million in-work families in the United Kingdom were receiving the child tax credit.
3. Council tax benefit totals exclude any Second Adult Rebate cases.
4. Housing benefit figures exclude any Extended Payment cases.
5. Incapacity benefit totals include credit-only cases.
6. People up to age 65 can claim disability living allowance(DLA), although no new claims are allowed once a person reaches the age of 65. People who reach 65 can continue receiving DLA if it is already in payment.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions pursuant to the oral evidence of the right hon. Member for Oxford East (Mr. Smith) of 11 February to the Work and Pensions Select Committee, on the Child Support Agency reforms, when the recovery programme to enable old CSA cases to be transferred to the new system began; how many cases have so far been transferred; how many cases are still to be transferred; what upgrades to the telephony and computer system have been made; and if he will make a statement. [193719]

Mr. Pond: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mr. Doug Smith. He will write to the hon. Member with the information requested.

Letter from Doug Smith to Mr. Steve Webb dated 4 November 2004:

In reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the Child Support Agency the Secretary of State promised a substantive reply from the Chief Executive.

You asked the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, pursuant to the Right honourable Member for Oxford East's oral statement of 11th February to the Work and Pensions Select Committee, on the Child Support Agency reforms, when the recovery programme to enable old CSA cases to be transferred to the new system began; how many cases have so far been transferred; how many cases are still to be transferred; what upgrades to the telephony and computer system have been made; and if he will make a statement.

EDS commenced their remediation work on their computer system last November following an external review commissioned by them. Its intention is to remove defects within that system. They will then provide the software necessary to migrate existing cases to their new system. Meanwhile, the only cases moving from the existing IT system to the new system are those linked in some way to a new application. At the end of 30 June 2004 around 409,000 cases had been migrated. At the same date around 893,000 cases remained on the 'old system'.

Since November EDS have made the following upgrades to their computer and telephony service:

> Four CS2 computer system upgrades in January, March, May and July. These upgrades addressed system defects, principally the rectification of issues with stuck cases. They also delivered a number of functional and performance improvements in the areas of system throughput, system stability and response times.
> Two telephony system upgrades in January and March which addressed synchronisation problems between the CS2 system and the telephony system, leading to service improvements in the number of calls answered, and improved system stability.
> Three Management Information System releases delivering improvements in the range and quality of operational, management and statutory reports.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what assistance the Child Support Agency is able to give applicants for child support in investigating the financial circumstances of the parent responsible for paying child support. [193837]

Mr. Pond: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mr. Doug Smith. He will write to my hon. Friend with the information requested.

Letter from Doug Smith to Mr. David Kidney dated 4 November 2004:

In reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the Child Support Agency the Secretary of State promised a substantive reply from the Chief Executive.

You asked the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, what assistance the Child Support Agency is able to give applicants for child support in investigating the financial circumstances of the parent responsible for paying child support.

The Child Support Agency does not directly assist applicants to investigate the financial circumstances of the parent responsible for paying child support. If the applicant has concerns regarding the circumstances of a non-resident parent in receipt of benefit, it will normally refer the case to Jobcentre Plus to investigate. If the non-resident parent is an employee the Agency can verify the financial circumstances through the employer or through liaison with the Inland Revenue. If the non-resident parent is self employed then liaison with the Inland Revenue can also be used or we can seek to inspect the relevant business records.

Since January 2001 it has been a criminal offence, for anyone involved in an application for child support, to provide false information[1].

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions for how many children, broken down by age, Child Support Agency payments have been calculated in each year since the Agency's inception. [193907]

Mr. Pond: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mr. Doug Smith. He will write to my right hon. Friend with the information requested.

Letter from Doug Smith to Mr Frank Field dated 4 November 2004:

In reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the Child Support Agency the Secretary of State promised a substantive reply from the Chief Executive.

You asked the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, for how many children broken down by age Child Support Agency payments have been calculated in each year since the Agency's inception.

I am not able to provide the information you seek in this format. I can however indicate the number of qualifying children linked to the Agency's caseload in each year.

Period (As at March)	Number
New System:
2003	12,900
2004	328,500
Old System:
1999	1,273,900
2000	1,420,500
2001	1,459,300
2002	1,488,500
2003	1,373,700
2004	1,064,100

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many parents with care applied for Child Support Agency (CSA) maintenance after 1 March 2003 and have been prevented from applying on the new scheme because the absent parent is judged by the CSA as having to pay maintenance for children from a previous partner under the old scheme. [194275]

Mr. Pond: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mr. Doug Smith. He will write to my right hon. Friend with the information requested.

Letter from Doug Smith to Mr. Frank Field, dated 4 November 2004:

In reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the Child Support Agency the Secretary of State promised a substantive reply from the Chief Executive.

You asked the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, how many parents with care applied for Child Support Agency (CSA) maintenance after 1st March 2003 and have been prevented from applying on the new scheme because the absent parent is judged by the CSA as having to pay maintenance for children from a previous partner under the old scheme.

No parents with care have been prevented from applying on the new scheme because the non-resident parent is judged by the CSA as having to pay maintenance for children from a previous partner under the old scheme.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will place in the Library a copy of the EDS contract for the Child Support Agency's new IT system. [194277]

Mr. Pond: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mr. Doug Smith. He will write to my right hon. Friend with the information requested.

Letter from Mike Isaac to Mr. Frank Field, dated 4 November 2004:

In reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the Child Support Agency the Secretary of State promised a substantive reply from the Chief Executive. As he is currently on leave I am replying on his behalf.

You asked the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, if he will place in the Library a copy of the EDS contract for the Child Support Agency's new IT system.

The EDS contract is commercially sensitive and is accordingly regarded as confidential to the parties involved in it. This is in line with Paragraph 13, Part 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the (a) shortest, (b) average and (c) longest time taken to process a Child Support Agency case from when the application is made to closure or the payment of maintenance to the parent with care was in the last period for which figures are available. [194278]

Mr. Pond: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mr. Doug Smith. He will write to my right hon. Friend with the information requested.

Letter from Doug Smith to Mr. Frank Field, dated 4 November 2004:

In reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the Child Support Agency the Secretary of State promised a substantive reply from the Chief Executive.

You asked the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, what the (a) shortest (b) average and (c) longest time taken to process a Child Support Agency case from when the application is made to closure or the payment of maintenance to the parent with care was in the last period for which figures are available.

I am unable to provide the information that you have requested because we do not collect or hold it in this way

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the total cost of the new computer system for the Child Support Agency is to date. [194627]

---

[1] Child Support, Pensions and Social Security Act 2000, Section 13*(b)*, inserted this Section 14 offence into the Child Support Act 1991, on the 31/01/01.

Mr. Pond: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mr. Doug Smith. He will write to the hon. Member with the information requested.

Letter from Doug Smith to Mr. Nigel Dodds, dated 4 November 2004:

In reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the Child Support Agency the Secretary of State promised a substantive reply from the Chief Executive.

You asked the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, what the total cost of the new computer system for the Child Support Agency is to date?

Between 3rd March 2003 and 19th September 2004, EDS were paid £62.08 million. In that period the Agency retained £12.1 million because of performance problems.

Child Support Scheme

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will place the latest New Child Support Scheme Progress Report in the Library. [193666]

Mr. Pond: I refer the hon. Member to the written statement from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 28 October 2004, Official Report, columns 55–57WS.

Citibank

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) whether there is an agreed maximum time that Citibank may take to process (a) State Pension payments and (b) other benefit payments; on how many occasions the agreed time has been breached; and if he will make a statement; [192016]

(2) how many outstanding (a) state pension payments and (b) other benefits are awaiting processing by Citibank; [192017]

(3) how long on average Citibank are taking to process (a) pension payments and (b) other benefits; and what the average length of time taken was in the five years prior to the awarding of the contract for payments to Citibank. [192021]

Mr. Pond: The Department of Work and Pensions has a contract with Post Office Ltd. (POL) for the provision of the Post Office card account at post offices. POL in turn has a contract with Electronic Data Services (EDS) and Citibank for the provision of the banking element to these services. In line with all other major banks, Citibank receive payment data on the second day of an overall three day BACS cycle and have the payment information credited to Post Office card accounts by 9.00 am on day three of the cycle. There have been no occasions identified when Citibank have breached this timescale. The only State Pension payments and other benefits awaiting processing by Citibank are those within the BACS cycle. The three-day BACS timescale for Citibank to process payments has been in operation in the five years prior to the awarding of the contract for the Post Office card account.

We are unable to make any comment on accounts run by Citibank other than the Post Office card account.

Correspondence

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when the Chief Executive of the Pension Service expects to reply to the letters to him of 18 May and 3 August from the hon. Member for Basingstoke on behalf of his constituent, Mrs. F. Hughes. [193080]

Malcolm Wicks: A reply was sent to the hon. Member on 27 October 2004.

Council Tax Benefit

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many and what percentage of pensioners (a) were in receipt of council tax benefit in 1997 and (b) are in receipt of council tax benefit. [190616]

Mr. Pond: The information is in the table.

Council tax benefit (CTB) beneficiaries aged 60 and over, Great Britain: May 1997 and 2003

	CTB beneficiaries aged 60 and over (Thousand)	CTB Beneficiaries aged 60 and over as percentage of relevant population
1997	3,229	27.5

Notes:

1. Caseload figures are based on a 1 per cent. sample and subject to a degree of sampling variation.
2. Percentages are rounded to one decimal place and caseloads to the nearest thousand.
3. Council tax benefit totals exclude any Second Adult Rebate cases.
4. "Beneficiaries" are all claimants and partners aged 60 or over.
5. No figures on the number of recipients of council tax benefit have been produced since the introduction of pension credit.

Jobcentres (North Wales)

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many clients attended each Jobcentre not due for closure in North Wales in each of the last 10 years. [196207]

Jane Kennedy: The administration of Jobcentre Plus is a matter for the Chief Executive of Jobcentre Plus, David Anderson. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from David Anderson to Mr. Chris Ruane, dated 4 November 2004:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question concerning how many clients attended each Jobcentre not due for closure in North Wales in each of the last ten years. This is something that falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of Jobcentre Plus.

I am unable to state the exact number of callers to each of the Jobcentres staying open covering the last ten years. Information showing the monthly average number of clients registering for Jobseeker's Allowance in each of the last ten years ending in August is shown in the table attached. Separate records are not available for some of the very small sites, and their figures are included in their parent office within the same chain of management. Each of these customers is expected to attend the Jobcentre every fortnight for an interview about their job search activity and they represent most of the traffic into the offices.

Work is currently in progress to develop options for Flexible Service Delivery in the locations where offices will close. This work will, of course, be undertaken in partnership with MPs, Assembly Members and other relevant stakeholders to tailor these options to meet the needs of the local community.

I hope this is helpful.

Pension Credit

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what estimate he has made of how much money available for pension credit has not been claimed because of non-take up by pensioners. [195813]

Malcolm Wicks: The information is not available. The most recent available estimates of the amount of money unclaimed by pensioners entitled to the main income-related benefits relate to the financial year 2001–2002 and cover the Minimum Income Guarantee (which Pension Credit replaced in 2003), Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit. These estimates are published in the Department's report: "Income Related Benefits: Estimates of Take-up in 2001–2002", a copy of which is in the Library.

Pensioners

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what proportion of pensioners receive an income from their own investments or savings. [195252]

Malcolm Wicks: The latest available information shows that, in 2002–03, 86 per cent. of pensioner units in Great Britain were in receipt of some private income on top of state benefits (92 per cent. of pensioner couples and 82 per cent. of single pensioners.)

66 per cent. of all pensioner units had some private pension (occupational and/or personal pension) income, of which, 61 per cent. of all pensioner units received an occupational pension income and 9 per cent. some income from a personal pension.

72 per cent. of all pensioner units had income from private investments. However, half of all pensioner units receiving investment income receive less than £4 per week, and only a small number of pensioners receive large amounts of income from investments (roughly 5 per cent. have investment income of over £150 per week).

Notes:

1. The FRS, and hence the Pensioners' Incomes Series 2002–03, does not reflect the situation of roughly 280,000 pensioners in care homes.

2. Pensioner units are either:

a. Single pensioners, i.e. people over state pension age; or

b. Pensioner couples i.e. married or cohabiting pensioners where the man is over state pension age.

Jon Cruddas: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many households in the London borough of Barking and Dagenham received (a) winter fuel payments and (b) free television licences in 2003. [194418]

Malcolm Wicks: In winter 2003–04 there were 20,500 households in the London borough of Barking and Dagenham which received the winter fuel payment.

The number of households with at least one resident aged 75 or over in the London borough of Barking and Dagenham is 9,165. Each of these households would therefore be eligible for a free TV licence.

Notes:

1. Number is rounded to the nearest five.

2. Any residence found to have four or more occupants is not included in these figures as it is assumed to be a residential care or nursing home.

3. Local authorities are assigned by matching postcodes against the relevant ONS postcode directory.

Jon Cruddas: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many (a) men and (b) women living in the London borough of Barking and Dagenham are in receipt of the state retirement pension; what percentage of the borough's population these figures represent; and how many pensioners living in the borough are in receipt of the additional payments made to pensioners over the age of 80 years. [194419]

Malcolm Wicks: The number of men and women living in the London borough of Barking and Dagenham who were in receipt of state pension as at 31 March 2004 and the percentage of the borough's population these figures represent is in the table:

	Recipients of state pension in the London borough of Barking and Dagenham	Percentage of the London borough of Barking and Dagenham population
Men	8,500	10.6
Women	15,600	18.1
All	24,100	14.5

Notes:

1. State pension recipient figures relate to people getting any state pension (basic or additional) or graduated retirement benefit who reside in the London borough of Barking and Dagenham.
2. Population figures are taken from mid-2003.
3. The population data source is the Office for National Statistics.
4. Figures for state pension recipients and age addition are from a 5 per cent. sample and are rounded to the nearest hundred.
5. The additional winter fuel payment figure represents a 100 per cent. sample rounded to the nearest five.
6. Figures for state pension recipients and age addition payments are obtained from a 5 per cent. sample of cases and are therefore subject to a high degree of sampling variation.
7. Local authorities are assigned by matching postcodes against the relevant Office for National Statistics postcode directory.

Source:

1. IAD information centre, 5 per cent. sample for state pension and age addition figures.
2. IAD information centre, 100 per cent. sample for winter fuel payment figure.

As at 31 March 2004, there were 6,800 state pension recipients in the London borough of Barking and Dagenham over the age of 80 in receipt of the age addition to state pension.

In winter 2003–04, the total number of pensioners in the London borough of Barking and Dagenham who received the additional winter fuel payment for those aged 80 or over was 5,965.

Pensions

Lembit Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the percentage increase in the State Pension has been since May 1997; and if he will make a statement. [194714]

Malcolm Wicks: The information requested is in the following table:

	Percentage increase on previous year	Retail Prices Index percentage
1997–98	2.1	2.1
1998–99	3.6	3.6
1999–2000	3.2	3.2
2000–01	1.1	1.1
2001–02	7.4	3.3
2002–03	4.1	1.7
2003–04	2.6	1.7
2004–05	2.8	2.8

State Pension is increased each year to ensure that, as a minimum, it retains its value in relation to prices. For the future lifetime of this Parliament we are committed to increasing the basic State Pension by the higher of 2.5 per cent, or the Retail Prices Index. For the years 2001–02 to 2003–04, the basic State Pension only was increased by more than the Retail Prices Index.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many (a) self-employed people, (b) people earning less than the lower earnings limit, (c) unemployed people and (d) other non-contributing people did not have second-tier pension arrangements in each year since 2002. [194835]

Malcolm Wicks: We estimate that there are around 7 million people who are not accruing State Second Pension rights nor making private pension provision.

These seven million consist of:

(a) 1.5 million self-employed

(b) 1.2 million employees earning less than the lower earnings limit

(c) 1.1 million unemployed

(d) 3.2 million other non-contributors.

Note:

1. These figures have been estimated using the Family Resources Survey, 2002–03.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what his latest estimate is of the number of people who are contracted out of the State Second Pension. [194847]

Malcolm Wicks: At the end of the 2000–01 tax year—the latest year for which information is available—it is estimated that there were around 14.3 million people contracted out of the State Earnings Related Pension Scheme. We expect to be able to publish estimates of the number of people contracted out of the State Second Pension in the 2001–02 and 2002–03 tax years by the end of this year.

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many people are in receipt of the state pension in the City of Edinburgh local authority area. [195156]

Malcolm Wicks: As at 31 March 2004, the number of people in receipt of State Pension in the city of Edinburgh Local Authority was 74,000. Of these 26,300 were male and 47,800 were female.

Source:

IAD information Centre, 5 per cent. sample.

Notes:

1. State Pension recipient figures relate to people getting any State Pension (basic or additional) or Graduated Retirement Benefit who reside in the city of Edinburgh Local Authority.

2. Figures are taken from a 5 per cent. sample and are subject to a high degree of sampling variation.

3. Figures are rounded to the nearest hundred and totals may not sum due to rounding.

4. Local Authorities are assigned by matching postcodes against the relevant Office for National Statistics, postcode directory.

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many pensioners living in the UK are in receipt of supplementary benefits. [194157]

Malcolm Wicks: The information requested is not available.

As at May 2003, the latest date for which this information is available, the total number of beneficiaries, aged 60 and over, receiving income-related benefits in Great Britain was 3.28 million. Income-related benefits include income support, housing benefit and council tax benefit and job seekers allowance (income based).

Pension credit replaced income support for people aged 60 and over from 6 October 2003. As at 31 August 2004 there were 2.61 million households, equivalent to 3.17 million individuals, receiving pension credit.

Notes:

1. The figures are based on 1 per cent. and 5 per cent. samples and are therefore subject to a degree of sampling variation.

2. The income-related benefits, figure excludes all overlaps between benefit recipients and refers to those in receipt of at least one of the following benefits: HB/CTB/IS/JSA(IB).

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what percentage of average earnings the state pension was in each year since 1997. [194149]

Malcolm Wicks: The information as is available is set out in the table.

	Percentage
1997–98	21
1998–99	20
1999–2000	20
2000–01	19
2001–02	20
2002–03	20
2003–04	20

Notes:

1. State pension figures are derived from a five per cent. sample of Department for Work and Pensions administrative data taken at March in each year.

2. Average earnings is represented by the average earnings of all adult full-time employees taken from the Annual Abstract of Statistics 2003 published by the Department for Work and Pensions.

3. State pension is calculated as the maximum rate of basic state pension plus the average amount of additional state pension in payment for recently retired men aged 65 and women aged 60.

4. The figures have been rounded to the nearest percentage point.

Press Officers

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many press officers the Department has employed in each of the past five years. [196060]

Maria Eagle: The Department for Work and Pensions was formed on 8 June 2001 from parts of the former Department of Social Security, the former Department for Education and Employment and the Employment Service. Information on costs prior to 2001 is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

SERPS

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions pursuant to the answer of 19 October 2004, Official Report, column 639W, on SERPS, what rating was applied to the (a) basic state pension and (b) additional state pension in each of the past 10 years. [195934]

Malcolm Wicks: The information requested is in the table.

Uprating date	Basic state pension percentage increase on previous year	Additional state pension percentage increase on previous year

Sure Start

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many mothers in Cleethorpes constituency have received Sure Start maternity grants in each year since 1997. [195211]

Mr. Pond: Sure Start maternity Grants were introduced in 2000–01 to replace maternity grants. The change was phased in from 27 March 2000, with Sure Start maternity grants being available to claimants whose babies were expected, born, adopted or the subject of a parental order on or after 11 June 2000.

Data are not available by Parliamentary Constituency, only by District.

The available information is in the tables.

Note: Cleethorpes Parliamentary Constituency has formed part of the Grimsby site since before 1997. This site has been involved in a large number of boundary changes since 1997:

1997-98	Cleethorpes Parliamentary Constituency was part of the Grimsby site within South Humberside Social Fund District
Apr 1998	Grimsby site (which includes Cleethorpes) moved into Wash Coast Social Fund District and the new district renamed Mercia Operations East Eastern Division Social Fund District
Apr 2001	Mercia Operations East Eastern Division Social Fund District enlarged by the addition of Scunthorpe site.
Nov 2002	Mercia Operations East Eastern Division Social Fund District reduced by the export of Skegness, Louth and Boston.
Dec 2002	Mercia Operations East Eastern Division Social Fund District further reduced by the export of Kings Lynn, and renamed South Humberside Interim District
Jun 2003	South Humberside Interim District enlarged by the addition of Isle of Axholme and renamed South Humberside Jobcentre Plus District.

The 6 tables above therefore refer to six different areas, so the data in different tables are not comparable.

TV Licence Fees

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many pensioner households in the London borough of Wandsworth are in receipt of a free television licence. [195374]

Malcolm Wicks: The number of households with at least one resident aged 75 or over in the London borough of Wandsworth is 10,370. Each of these households would therefore be eligible for a free TV licence.

Notes:

1. Number is rounded to the nearest five.

2. Any residence found to have four or more occupants is not included in these figures as it is assumed to be a Residential Care or Nursing Home.

3. Local Authorities have been allocated using the relevant ONS postcode directory.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Responsibilities

Mr. Key: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners if he will list the responsibilities for which he answers to the House. [195957]

Sir Stuart Bell: The Second Church Estates Commissioner answers in relation to the Church Commissioners' trustee responsibilities, namely the management of their investment portfolio; their funding commitments for clergy pensions, the work of bishops and cathedrals and the support of parish ministry in areas of need; and the administration of the legal framework for pastoral reorganisation and settling the future of redundant churches. These responsibilities are closely interwoven with the full range of the Church of England's activity—its nation-wide ministry and the upkeep of its built heritage—and the Second Commissioner will speak more broadly to those areas when the matter raised by hon. Members requires it.

TRANSPORT

Air Pollution (Heathrow)

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment his Department has made of the effects on air pollution of widening the M4 around Heathrow. [195098]

Mr. Jamieson: An air quality assessment was made of the effects on air pollution of proposals to widen the M4 between Junctions 3-4b in connection with Heathrow Terminal 5. It was included in the Environmental Statement published in May 1996 with the Draft Highway Orders. The assessment covered a range of pollutants including nitrogen dioxide, fine particles, carbon monoxide and benzene. The air quality assessment was further developed in connection with the Planning Inquiry for Heathrow Terminal 5.

Buses

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the proportion of the national bus fleet which is subject to annual random inspections by the Traffic Commissioners. [196092]

Charlotte Atkins: The Vehicle and Operator Services Agency (VOSA) carries out targeted roadworthiness inspections of coaches and buses through spot and fleet checks as part of its work to support the Traffic Commissioners. During 2003-04 some 25,000 vehicles were inspected as a result of these checks representing an annual proportion of approximately 29 per cent. of the national bus and coach fleet.

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many buses were inspected by Vehicle and Operator Services Agency officials in each of the last five years; and how many were subject to (a) immediate prohibition notices and (b) delayed prohibition notices. [196093]

Charlotte Atkins: Data held on the number of public service vehicles (PSVs) inspected by Vehicle and Operator Services Agency (VOSA) includes all buses and coaches licensed to carry nine or more fare paying passengers. Details of roadworthiness inspections carried out on these vehicles are shown in the following table:

	Roadworthiness spot and fleet checks[1]					Exhaust emissions checks
		Prohibition rates at roadworthiness spot checks (Percentage)		Prohibition rates at fleet roadworthiness Checks (Percentage)			Number of prohibitions issued
	Number of vehicles examined	Immediate	Delayed	Immediate	Delayed	Number of vehicles examined	Immediate	Delayed
2003-04	25,112	7.3	8.0	6.6	7.5	5,402	4	12
2002-03	24,669	6.3	8.2	6.6	7.9	5,447	3	24
2001-02	23,086	6.8	8.7	5.6	7.6	6,733	3	37
2000-01	26,357	6.10	8.4	5.4	6.6	6,919	0	36
1999-2000	28,814	5.9	7.5	4.9	6.0	8,827	2	43

[1] These figures exclude vehicles checked as part of the annual PSV baseline survey. Only one prohibition notice is issued per vehicle although it may list several defects/offences

In addition to roadworthiness items VOSA examiners also check for drivers hours, tachograph and records offences as well as overloading. Serious infringements can result in drivers and/or vehicles being prohibited. Details of prohibitions issued for these infringements during the last five years are shown in the table:

	Number of vehicles examined (including the number weighed)	Prohibited for drivers hours, tachograph and records[1]	Prohibited for overloading
2003-04	13,450	364	14
2002-03	13,265	226	11
2001-02	10,768	96	8
2000-01	15,003	—	7
1999-2000	17,161	—	5

[1] Prohibitions for drivers hours offences for UK vehicles were only introduced in 2001-02

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many Vehicle and Operator Services Agency officials in each of the English regions are responsible for (a) checking the safety of bus vehicles and (b) surveying the reliability and punctuality of bus services. [196094]

Charlotte Atkins: The Vehicle and Operator Services Agency (VOSA) deploys some 1,100 frontline staff responsible among other duties for checking the safety of public service vehicles (PSVs) throughout England, Scotland and Wales.

Nine Bus Compliance Officers (BCOs) responsible for surveying the reliability and punctuality of bus services are deployed in the five English regions of the Traffic Area Network. They are distributed on the following basis:

Traffic area	Number of BCOs
North Eastern/North Western	3
West Midlands	1
Western	2
South Eastern and Metropolitan	2
Eastern	1

Departmental Estate

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the properties occupied by (a) his Department and (b) its agencies in (i) 1997 and (ii) 2004; and what the (A) area and (B) annual rental value (1) in aggregate and (2) in each case was in each year. [196072]

Charlotte Atkins: The Department for Transport was formed in May 2002 and as a result the information provided relates to the period from then. As a result information is available only for 2003–04.

The information requested relating to the year 2003–04 covers over a thousand properties and has been placed in the Libraries of the House. Some information requested relating to smaller properties is not kept on record centrally, but by the Agency in question. To obtain this information would result in a disproportionate cost.

Press Officers

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many press officers the Department has employed in each of the past five years. [195273]

Charlotte Atkins [holding answer 1 November 2004]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State (Mr. McNulty) to the hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Laws) on 25 March 2004 Official Report, columns 983–84W.

ITC Consultants

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much the Department spent on outside information technology and communication specialist consultants and engineers in the 2003–04 financial year. [191910]

Charlotte Atkins: The value of orders raised in 2003/04 for information technology and communications specialist consultants and engineers by the Department for Transport was £5,541,670.25.

Ministers' Private Offices

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the running costs of Ministers' private offices in his Department have been in each year since 1997. [191379]

Charlotte Atkins: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East (Mr. McNulty) gave to the hon. Member for Arundel and South Downs (Mr. Flight) on 15 July 2003, Official Report, column 170W. The final outturn for the running costs of Ministers' private offices in 2003–04 is £1.4 million.

Motor Traders

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what security measures have been taken to protect the public from terrorist use of vehicles passed between motor traders. [195777]

Charlotte Atkins [holding answer 3 November 2004]: Motor traders are not currently required to be recorded as vehicle keepers on the DVLA records. They generally sell vehicles on quickly and do not want to devalue them by adding additional keepers to the record.

One of the recommendations of the Home Office-led Vehicle Crime Reduction Action Team (VCRAT) report was that the movement of vehicles between motor traders, as well as in and out of the trade, should be recorded. An electronic system for this purpose will be introduced by DVLA in 2005. This will ensure that DVLA will have details of where such vehicles are at any time, and which traders are involved. The new system will make vehicles in the hands of the motor trade less attractive to criminals and terrorists.

Sustainable Energy (CHP Provisions) Order

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures his Department (a) has undertaken and (b) plans to undertake to comply with the Sustainable Energy (CHP Provisions) Order 2003. [194429]

Charlotte Atkins: The only combined heat and power plant on the DfT estate is operated by the DVLA at their Morriston site in Swansea and has been operational since June. It generates about 50 per cent. of the electricity needed at the large site accommodating some 4,500 staff and as a consequence is likely to make a major contribution to the Department achieving the framework target of obtaining 15 per cent. of electricity form CHP by 2010. DVLA was awarded the Energy Management/Environmental Award from the Energy Industries Council Utilities Awards 2004 for the organisation that has invested in energy management initiatives to take into account their impact on the environment.

Elsewhere in the Department we will be looking to OGC buying solutions to assist in sourcing and procuring energy from CHP generators in the energy market using their expertise and significant buying power.

Temporary Staff

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many agency temporary staff have been working for the Department or its predecessors in each of the last five years, excluding those working for agencies for which no data is kept centrally. [196057]

Charlotte Atkins: The Department for Transport was formed on 29 May 2002. Due to machinery of Government changes, information on temporary agency staff who have worked or who are currently working for DfT (C) is only available from December 2002, broken down as follows:

	Number
December 2002	35
January 2003 to December 2003	93
January 2004 to date	80

Train Fares

Mr. Laxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will investigate the level of unregulated train fares; and what measures are in place to control such fares; [195035]

(2) by how much (a) regulated and (b) unregulated rail fares have changed in each year since 1997, (i) in total and (ii) broken down by train operating company. [195036]

Mr. McNulty: Unregulated fares are a commercial matter for the train operating companies.

The average price changes in regulated and unregulated fares since 1995 are set out in the Rail Fares Index in the Strategic Rail Authority's Document "National Rail Trends Yearbook 2003–04". Copies of this publication are available in the House Library. Information on fare changes by individual train operating companies is not available.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Commercial Property Leases (Consultation)

Matthew Green: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many responses the Government received to the recent Office of the Deputy Prime Minister consultation paper, "Commercial Property Leases: Options for Deterring or Outlawing the Use of Upward Only Rent Review Clauses"; and if he will break down the number of responses by (a) representative organisations, (b) landlords and (c) property occupiers. [195433]

Keith Hill: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has received 87 responses to its consultation on options for deterring or outlawing the use of upward only rent review clauses in commercial property leases. We are currently analysing the responses and a breakdown of respondents by category will be available when the results of consultation are published next year.

Departmental Publications (Accessibility)

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many and what proportion of publications issued by his Department are available in (a) Braille, (b) autoprint, (c) large print and (d) easy read format. [194294]

Phil Hope: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister complies with the requirements of the Disability Discrimination Act, 1995. All current publications in (a) Braille, (b) print-on-demand, (c) large print and (d) easy read formats are available on request and contracts are in place to ensure that such requests can be satisfied within a short time period.

Within the last 12 months the following specific requests have been made:

3,422 copies in Braille;
seven copies in print-on-demand;
30,032 copies in large print
one audio and
0 copies in easy read formats.

Employment (Greater London)

Tom Cox: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what recent discussions he has had on the use of European structural funds to create employment in the Greater London area. [195375]

Phil Hope: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister has held no recent discussions on the use of European structural funds in London, but Ministers receive regular reports on progress with the delivery of European structural funds programmes in London and elsewhere.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is just over midway through the 2000–06 Objective 2, Objective 3 and Urban II structural funds programmes in London. These provide over £600 million to support economic development and tackle barriers to labour market participation. Targets over the lifetime of the three programmes include the creation of over 23,000 jobs.

Land Reclassification

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many hectares of land were reclassified from (a) agricultural and (b) industrial-commercial use to land for residential use in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [195134]

Keith Hill: Proportions of land changing to residential use by previous use in England between 1999 and 2003 are tabled as follows.

Agriculture accounted for 40 per cent. of land changing to residential use in 1999, but this has decreased to 30 per cent. in 2003. The proportion of land changing to residential use from industrial and commercial land has remained at about 12 per cent. throughout the period. A further 29 per cent. of land changing to residential use in 2003 was from vacant and derelict land and much of this will at one time have been industrial and commercial land.

Estimates for absolute amounts changing in any one year are not reliable. Over the last few years the average amount of land changing to residential has been about 5,500 to 6,000 hectares a year.

Park and Ride Schemes

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what his Department's latest guidance to local authorities is on the development of park and ride schemes. [195709]

Keith Hill: Policy on park and ride schemes is set out in Planning Policy Guidance note (PPG) 13 (2001) on Transport. The key elements are that schemes need to be developed as an integral part of the planning and transport strategy for the area, schemes need to be subject to robust assessment, including the consideration of alternative sites, the impact on local amenities and travel. PPG 13 Annex E amends PPG 2 on park and ride schemes in the green belt.

Phone Masts

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister in what circumstances it is acceptable for a mobile communications mast to be operated without a valid ICNIRP certificate being available for public inspection. [194692]

Keith Hill: The Stewart Group recommended that, as a precautionary approach, the ICNIRP guidelines for public exposure be adopted for use in the UK rather than the NRPB guidelines (paragraph 1.27 of the report) but were not convinced of the need to incorporate the ICNIRP guidelines in statutes. (1.28)

The Government agreed that in line with the recommended precautionary approach, that the emissions from mobile phones and base stations should meet the ICNIRP guidelines for public exposure as expressed in the EU Council Recommendation of 12 July 1999 on the limitation of exposure of the general public to electromagnetic fields (0 Hz to 300GHz). The Government further agreed that the guidelines did not need to be incorporated into statutes.

Planning Policy Guidance Note 8 on Telecommunications states that

> "All new mobile phone base stations are expected meet the ICNIRP guidelines. However, all applicants should include with their applications, a statement that self-certifies to the effect that the mobile phone base stations when operational will meet the guidelines. In line with the Group's recommendations the mobile network operator should also provide to the local authority a statement for each site indicating its location, the height of the antenna, the frequency and modulation characteristics and details of power output. Where a mobile phone base station is added to an existing mast or site, the operator should confirm that the cumulative exposure will not exceed the ICNIRP guidelines."

John Cryer: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what powers are available to local authorities to prevent the erection of mobile telecommunications masts when permission has been refused. [194729]

Keith Hill: Development that has gone ahead without the required permission can be considered by the local planning authority to be a breach of planning control and the local planning authority can take remedial enforcement action. They have a wide range of discretionary powers. The local planning authority must decide the most appropriate action in each case in the light of local circumstances.

Under powers in the 1990 Town and Country Planning Act, as amended by the 1991 Planning and Compensation Act, local-planning authorities have:

> the power to serve a "planning contravention notice". This may be used where it appears that there may have been a breach of planning control and the local planning authority require information about the activities on the land or to find out more about the nature of the recipient's interest in the land.
> the power to issue an 'enforcement notice', requiring steps to be taken to remedy the breach within a given period. There is a right of appeal to the Secretary of State against an enforcement notice. If the notice is upheld, failure to comply is an offence with a maximum penalty on conviction of £20,000.
> the power to serve a "stop notice". This has the effect of immediately stopping any activity which contravenes planning control guidelines and where there are special reasons which justify doing this. If contravened the resulting offence can be prosecuted in the magistrates court with a maximum penalty on conviction of £20,000.
> the power to serve a "breach of condition notice" where there is a failure to comply with any condition or limitation imposed on a grant of planning permission.
> the ability to seek an "injunction" in the High Court or county court to restrain any > actual or expected breach of planning control.
> powers of entry on to land for authorised officers of the local planning authority for them to obtain information required for enforcement purposes.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what discussions about mast sharing he has held with (a) telecommunication companies and (b) local authorities as an alternative to the development of new mast sites. [194940]

Keith Hill: Ministers in the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister meet regularly with the Mobile Operators Association to discuss a range of issues including the operators' progress in meeting their 10 commitments which includes a commitment on site sharing. The Association also sends statistics relating to site sharing to the Planning Minister every quarter. Ministers have not discussed this issue with representatives of local planning authorities.

PPG8

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans his Department has to revise Planning Policy Guidance Note 8. [195253]

Keith Hill: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has no plans to change Planning Policy Guidance Note 8 (revised) at present.

Regeneration Funding

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans he has to incorporate the information contained in the 2004 Index of Multiple Deprivation into future allocations of regeneration funding; and if he will make a statement. [193689]

Phil Hope: It will be up to individual Government Departments how to use the revised Indices of Deprivation 2004 (ID04) to allocate their funds. For funds distributed by the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister, such as the Neighbourhood Renewal Fund (NRF), no decision has yet been taken on how ID04 might be used to help determine future allocations.

Spending Review 2004 (SR04) made available just over £1 billion of new NRF resources (£525 million in 2006–07 and £525 million for 2007–08). No decisions have yet been made on how these resources are to be allocated. Ministers are considering options for allocating the NRF for these years in the light of all available evidence, including the ID04. A decision on the final allocations is expected in the new year.

The allocation of NRF resources has already been determined for 2004–05 and 2005–06. For these years the resources will continue to go to the 88 existing NRF areas.

Housing Development

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what interim guidance his Department will give to district local authorities on housing numbers up to 2016 if county structure plans are withdrawn before regional spatial strategies are adopted; and if he will make a statement. [195257]

Keith Hill: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister issued policy guidance in September, entitled "Planning Policy Statement 12: Local Development Frameworks", explaining what local planning authorities need to take into account when preparing their frameworks. It advises how authorities can deal with issues such as housing numbers during the transition from the old system of local plans to local development frameworks. In order to ensure there is strategic policy in place for developing local development frameworks, PPS12 provides for structure plan policies to be saved for a period of three years from commencement of Parts 1 and 2 of the Planning and Compulsory Purchase Act 2004 or adoption of the structure plan, whichever is the later. Structure plans can also be saved for a longer period to avoid a policy void provided that there is sufficient justification.

Officials in the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister are currently undertaking a series of regional events with key stakeholders, including local planning authorities, to explain the Government's approach towards local development frameworks and address issues such as this, which, by their nature, will vary according to local circumstances. Following these events, we will consider the need for interim guidance or whether such issues are still best addressed at the individual level.

Sustainable Communities Plan

Brian White: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what steps (a) his Office and (b) its agencies are taking to ensure the Sustainable Communities plan meets or exceeds the Government's energy objectives of achieving a low carbon economy. [195182]

Phil Hope: The Sustainable Communities plan will encourage an energy-efficient built environment through changes to building regulations—including better boiler standards—and our Decent Homes programme. We are also supporting exemplary development schemes and research in the Growth Areas, and will pilot the new Code for Sustainable Buildings in the Thames Gateway and elsewhere. In addition, English Partnerships requires residential building on its land to reach the BREEAM EcoHomes "very good" standard, which includes an assessment of energy efficiency and transport CO_2 impacts. From 2005–06, the Housing Corporation will require funded affordable housing schemes to reach the EcoHomes "good" standard.

Sustainable Energy (CHP Provisions) Order

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what measures his Department (a) has undertaken and (b) plans to undertake to comply with the Sustainable Energy (CHP Provisions) Order 2003. [194428]

Phil Hope: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister presently has Combined Heat and Power (CHP) installations operating in two if its London HQ buildings. These units have a capacity of 960 kWh of electrical energy, the "waste" heat from the CHP units is used to supplement building heating in winter and cooling in summer.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister and its agencies have adopted the target to source at least 15 per cent. of electricity from Good Quality Combined Heat and Power by 2010 and continues to explore viable schemes for embedded electrical generation. Until such time as suitable systems can be incorporated, the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister will be working with the Office of Government Commerce to obtain sufficient energy from accredited suppliers to meet the targets required by the Sustainable Energy (CHP Provisions) Order 2003 and detailed in specific terms in the Framework for Sustainable Development on the Government Estate (Chapter E4).

Temporary Staff

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many agency temporary staff have been working for the Department in each of the last five years, excluding those working for agencies for which no data is kept centrally. [196051]

Phil Hope: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister was formed on 29 May 2002. Records are not kept centrally of the recruitment and termination of temporary staff within the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister. However at any one time the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister employs approximately 120 temporary staff through the employment agencies with whom we have contracts.

PRIME MINISTER

Arctic Medal

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Prime Minister if he will create an Arctic Medal for those who sailed in the Russian convoys. [196209]

The Prime Minister: The sacrifice of those who sailed in the Russian convoys is of course undisputed. Those who took part in the wartime convoys to Russia were honoured at the time with the award of the Atlantic Star. Indeed, the Command Paper that set out the criteria for the Atlantic Star explicitly included the convoys to North Russia, as recognition of their importance. This remains the position, though these matters are kept under review.

ADVOCATE-GENERAL

Devolution

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Advocate-General what devolution issues she has considered since 25 October. [194533]

The Advocate-General for Scotland: Since 25 October, 23 devolution issues have been intimated to me. 19 of these issues were in the civil sphere and concerned personal injury actions in respect of prison conditions. The remaining four devolution issues related to criminal matters, including pre-trial delay, self-incrimination under section 172 of the Road Traffic Act 1988, the use of lay justices to determine criminal proceedings in the district courts and one case which raises issues about both the lack of an appeal to the House of Lords in extradition proceedings in Scotland under the Extradition Act 2003, and a challenge to Ministers of the Scottish Executive in relation to extradition proceedings.

MINISTER FOR WOMEN

Pregnant Workers

22. Ms Drown: To ask the Minister for Women what steps she is taking to ensure that (a) employers and (b) employees are informed of women's rights at work when pregnant. [195883]

Jacqui Smith: Government provide a range of guidance for employers and employees. Additionally, free confidential advice is available from the Acas national telephone helpline.

Women's Pensions

23. Ms Keeble: To ask the Minister for Women what assessment she has made of proposals in the Turner Report relating to women's pensions. [195884]

Ms Hewitt: The Government welcome the Pensions Commission report, and are well aware that women make up 64 per cent. of the pensioner population. Tackling specific problems that women face in retirement is therefore high on our agenda.

Pension Inequalities

25. Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Minister for Women what assessment she has made of the findings of the First Report of the Pensions Commission in relation to pension inequalities between men and women. [195886]

Ms Hewitt: For today's female pensioners we have introduced pension credit, two thirds of those entitled to pension credit are women. And for future women pensioners, state second pension extends second-tier pension right for the first time to people without earnings who are caring for young children or a disabled adult.

However, we have acknowledged there is more to be done and will be looking at options in advance of the Pension Commission's final report in autumn 2005.

Non-traditional Work

Julie Morgan: To ask the Minister for Women what plans she has to encourage women to go into non-traditional areas of work. [195882]

Ms Hewitt: I was delighted to participate with my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the Equal Opportunities Commission's Gender and Productivity Summit last week, where I launched a cross Government plan to encourage women (and men) into non-traditional areas of work.

This plan will be taken forward in the context of the Women and Work Commission announced by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 24 July.

Women Priests

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Minister for Women what discussions she has had on encouraging the appointment of women priests to the highest offices in the Church. [195885]

Jacqui Smith: I fully endorse the views expressed on an earlier occasion by my hon. Friend the Minister for Women. This is a matter for the Church of England, but I am in principle against any kind of glass ceiling—stained glass or otherwise.

SCOTLAND

Correspondence

Sir Gerald Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to reply to the letter to him dated 23 August from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mrs. J. A. Higham. [193574]

Mr. Darling: I replied to my right hon. Friend on 3 November.

Temporary Staff

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many agency temporary staff have been working for the Department in each of the last five years, excluding those working for agencies for which no data is kept centrally. [196055]

Mrs. McGuire: The Scotland Office was established on 1 July 1999. Since that date the Office has had a number of individuals under contract from companies that provide staff on a temporary basis. They were engaged to fill vacancies in the complement of the Office and were not additional to the staff numbers reported in the Departmental and Annual Reports of the Office. Many individuals were employed for a short period only; some posts were filled by a succession of individuals. The figures in the table represent the total number of individuals employed:

	Number of individual temporary staff
1999–2000	13
2000–01	16
2001–02	19
2002–03	15
2003–04	20

Press Officers

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many press officers the Department has employed in each of the past five years. [196059]

Mrs. McGuire: The Scotland Office was established on 1 July 1999. Details of the number of press officers employed are given in the following table:

	Number of press officers
1999–2000	4
2000–01	4
2001–02	4
2002–03	4
2003–04	[1]3

WALES

Renewable Energy (Planning Guidance)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last discussed the implementation of TAN8 with his colleagues in the National Assembly for Wales. [195729]

Mr. Hain: The implementation of TAN 8 is a matter for the National Assembly for Wales. I understand that they are currently considering responses to the consultation exercise, which closed on 5 November.

Temporary Staff

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many agency temporary staff have been working for the Department in each of the last five years, excluding those working for agencies for which no data is kept centrally. [196064]

Mr. Hain: Information is not readily available for the whole period. However, the Wales Office has employed agency temporary staff to cover four posts in 2002, seven in 2003 and nine in 2004.

HOME DEPARTMENT

GM Food

Alistair Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many convictions there have been against restaurants for failing to display their policy on GM foods in each year since August 1999; [195716]

(2) how many prosecutions have been brought against restaurants for failing to display their policy on GM foods in each year since August 1999. [195717]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I have been asked to reply.

There is no legal obligation for restaurants to display their policy on genetically modified (GM) foods. However, a requirement was introduced in 1999 for caterers to identify any GM ingredients in the foods that they sell. I am not aware of any prosecutions brought against restaurants under the relevant regulations, which came into force in September 1999.

Police (West Midlands)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many ethnic minority police officers there are in the West Midlands region. [195688]

Ms Blears: The Home Office Statistical Bulletin published on 29 September 2004 showed that, on 31 March 2004, West Midlands police had 499 ethnic minority officers out of a total officer strength of 8,008 (6.2 per cent).

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Common Land (SSSIs)

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what areas of common land classified as sites of special scientific interest in England are in unfavourable condition; and what assessment she has made of the need for changes to regulations to ensure favourable condition of such common land is achieved. [196287]

Mr. Bradshaw: In July 2002, our Common Land Policy Statement set out proposals for addressing the main barriers to the sustainable management of common land. One of our key aims is to enable commoners to manage their own activities more effectively. This in turn will help contribute to the achievement of a number of biodiversity objectives, including the SSSI PSA target.

Following further public consultation in 2003, we have been working up more detailed legislative proposals. We remain committed to introducing legislation as soon as parliamentary time allows.

The areas of common land SSSIs in favourable or unfavourable condition are given in the table and broken down according to English Nature area team.

Data Protection

Michael Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what procedures are in place (a) to check the criminal records of civil servants in her Department and agencies responsible to her Department who have access to computer databases containing confidential information on the public and (b) to ensure that there can be no improper use of computer databases containing confidential information on the public; and if she will make a statement. [194603]

Alun Michael: A basic character check is carried out on all staff before they are allowed unsupervised access to Defra's IT systems. It is also a departmental requirement that staff must declare criminal convictions. Criminal records checks are carried out in cases where staff dealing with particularly sensitive material require formal vetting in line with central Government guidelines. Defra's IT security policy is designed (a) to protect the confidentiality, integrity and availability of computer systems and information to a level that meets business needs and (b) to ensure that accounting and audit processes exist. This is achieved by: ensuring all processes and actions are authorised; all authorised users can be identified and monitored; and all systems and associated personnel perform in a consistent manner. The security policy is available to all staff on our internal intranet and regular reminders are issued.

Extensification Payment Scheme

Paddy Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much has been paid out under the Extensification Payment Scheme in each county in England in 2003–04; and if she will make a statement. [195510]

Alun Michael: The amount paid out under the Extensification Premium Scheme in each county in England for the 2003 scheme year (1 January 2003–31 December 2003) and paid between 1 April 2004 and 31 October 2004 are set out in the following table. Heathrow

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what work her Department has undertaken to update the 1982 Social Survey on the impact of night flights around Heathrow; [195093]

(2) what plans her Department has to conduct a social survey of the impact of night flights around Heathrow. [195094]

Charlotte Atkins: I have been asked to reply.

In December 2000, a report funded by the then DETR was published on Perceptions of Aircraft Noise, Sleep and Health (Diamond et al, http://www.socstats.soton.ac.uk/research/noisereport.doc). This study included surveys in the vicinity of Heathrow, Gatwick, Manchester, East Midlands, and Coventry airports. A broader study of Attitudes to Noise from Aircraft Sources in England, which covers both night and daytime noise, is currently being undertaken on the Department's behalf, the lead contractor being The MVA Consultancy.

Findings from further social research as well as objective studies of sleep disturbance were summarised in the NATS/DORA (now CAA/ERCD) R and D Report 9964, Adverse effects of night-time aircraft noise, published in March 2000.

In addition to these social survey studies, the Department has consulted regularly on the night restrictions at Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted. The Stage 1 consultation on restrictions from 30 October 2005 was published in July and the consultation period closed on 29 October.

Noise

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what action has been taken by the Government to achieve the targets recommended by the WHO Guidelines for Community Noise; and in which year she expects to attain the targets recommended in the Guidelines. [195095]

Charlotte Atkins: I have been asked to reply as the WHO guidelines bear predominantly on transport noise sources. The Government is a signatory to the WHO Charter on Transport, the Environment and Health, and is thereby committed to take account of the WHO Guidelines.

The noise levels cited in the WHO Guidelines mark the approximate onset of various annoyance and disturbance effects. As such, they are not limits but information to which the Government will have regard when developing policy and seeking to strike the balance between the three pillars of sustainable development. It is not feasible, and will not become practicable in the foreseeable future, to eliminate all such effects, either in the UK or in other signatory States.

The relevance of the guidelines in the context of night noise from aircraft was discussed further in the Department's recent Stage 1 consultation on the night restrictions at Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted, paragraphs 3.8–3.13.

Off-road Motor Cycles

Huw Irranca-Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what examples of best practice are available to (a) local authorities and (b) police authorities on (i) making provision for off-road motorcycles and (ii) tackling irresponsible off-road motorcycling. [195779]

Alun Michael: The departmental publication, "Making the Best of Byways", provides advice and practical examples to local authorities on managing mechanically propelled vehicles on byways and includes guidance on identifying suitable off-road sites. The Department is currently working on a comprehensive revision to the document.

We are preparing new enforcement guidance for both police authorities and local authorities to help them deal with inappropriate and illegal use of motor vehicles off road. The guidance will set out the extensive statutory powers already available to deal with misuse and will draw on existing best practice examples of police and local authorities working in successful partnerships.

Copies of "Making the Best of Byways" have been placed in the House Library. The revised document and new enforcement guidance will be available next year.

Sea Fishing (Licences)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what her policy is on whether anglers should be required to hold licences for the right to fish at sea. [196949]

Mr. Bradshaw: The Review of Marine Fisheries and Environmental Enforcement, which was published in July, recommends that, in return for improvements which would benefit sea anglers, a licensing scheme for them be considered. The consultation period on the review ended on 29 September. My officials are now evaluating the replies, and I have not yet made any decisions.

Sharpness Dock Basin

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the condition of Sharpness Dock Basin, with particular reference to the views expressed by the Gloucester Harbour Trustees. [194282]

Alun Michael: As statutory harbour authority, British Waterways is fully aware of the Gloucester Harbour Trustees' concern about the condition of Sharpness Docks. It has identified improvement works for the docks of some £4–5 million over the next four to five years. It is considering the phasing of this work as part of its asset management programme.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

Parliamentary Security Co-ordinator

Dame Marion Roe: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission pursuant to his Answer of 19 October 2004, Official Report, column 566W, if he will make a further statement on the appointment of a Parliamentary Security Co-ordinator. [197193]

Sir Archy Kirkwood: I can confirm that the House of Lords authorities have agreed to the establishment of a Parliamentary Security Co-ordinator. An appointment will be made as soon as practicable, initially on secondment. The Parliamentary Security Co-ordinator would be expected, among other responsibilities, to oversee the project of implementing new security measures arising from the joint review, to improve co-ordination of security matters between the two Houses and advise on issues which need to be dealt with across the Estate as a whole, and to provide a focus for liaison with the Metropolitan police and security service. The Parliamentary Security Co-ordinator would be accountable for his/her performance to Mr. Speaker in the Commons and the Lord Chairman of Committees in the Lords, and would come under the Chief Executives of the two Houses for day-to-day management purposes, working with Black Rod and the Serjeant at Arms, who would continue to hold executive responsibility, to ensure the security of their respective Houses.

LEADER OF THE HOUSE

Written Questions

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Leader of the House if he will bring forward proposals to allow the tabling of written questions during periods when the House is in recess for answer on a named day during the recess. [196392]

Mr. Hain: I have no plans to do so.

PRIME MINISTER

Carbon Emissions

Norman Baker: To ask the Prime Minister what role he played in the decision announced by the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs that the UK should apply to the EU for an increase in permissible carbon emissions under the EU Emissions Trading Schemes. [196847]

The Prime Minister: This was a collective decision in accordance with the Ministerial Code.

Congressional Gold Medal

Derek Conway: To ask the Prime Minister when he intends to collect his congressional gold medal; and if he will make a statement. [197205]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker) on 18 May 2004, Official Report, column 878W.

Iraq

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Prime Minister to what proportion of next of kin of armed forces personnel killed in Iraq he has written condolence letters. [195892]

The Prime Minister: During the Iraq conflict, the policy on official governmental letters of condolence was reviewed in consultation with single Service Chiefs of Staff. I announced my intention to write to the next of kin of all those Service personnel who were killed in action on operations.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions he held with President Bush on the timing of war with Iraq during his visit to the US commencing on 7 September 2002. [195893]

The Prime Minister: I regularly have discussions on a wide range of issues with President Bush including on Iraq. As with previous Administrations, it is not the practice of this Government to make public details of discussions with foreign governments.

Keith Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister when he last held discussions with the UN Secretary-General regarding Iraq. [196001]

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Faversham and Mid Kent (Hugh Robertson) and my hon. Friend the Member for Blaenau Gwent (Llew Smith) on 25 October 2004, Official Report, column 1025W.

Glenda Jackson: To ask the Prime Minister pursuant to the answer of 27 October 2004, Official Report, column 1257W, on Iraq, when he was first informed by British military commanders of the request they had received from the US military for the re-deployment of British troops. [196038]

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence (Mr. Hoon) on 18 October 2004, Official Report, column 625–26.

Glenda Jackson: To ask the Prime Minister when he last discussed with Coalition allies ways of minimising civilian casualties in the course of military operations in Iraq. [196292]

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the answers I gave the hon. Member for Newry and Armagh (Mr. Mallon) and my hon. Friend the Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon) at Prime Minister's Questions on 3 November 2004, Official Report, columns 301 and 305–06.

President Bush

Keith Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister when he last held discussions with President Bush. [196000]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to my statement of 3 November 2004 which is available on the No. 10 website.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Barker Review

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans he has to revise chapter 9 of the regional planning guidance in light of the Barker review; and if he will make a statement. [195165]

Keith Hill: The Secretary of State, my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister, has only recently published in July this year a revised Chapter 9 of Regional Planning Guidance for the South-East (RPG9). The South East England Regional Assembly is currently in the process of reviewing the spatial strategy set out in RPG9 with a view to submitting a draft Regional Spatial Strategy (RSS) for the South-East to the Secretary of State, my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister, in the summer of 2005. The Government have already highlighted to the Assembly the expectation that in their review the Assembly takes into account key messages emerging from the Barker review.

Casinos

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will place in the Library a copy of the responses to the consultation on a separate use class order for casinos from each of the planning authorities in Tyne and Wear. [196362]

Keith Hill: After the second report of the Joint Scrutiny Committee, my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister undertook to review the possibility of a change to the classification of casinos and invited comments by the end of October. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister did not receive any comments from planning authorities in Tyne and Wear.

Civil Servants

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the average length of continuous service for civil servants within the Department is. [194397]

Phil Hope: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton West (Ruth Kelly) on 3 November 2004, Official Report, column 268W. The only part of the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister which are not MANDATE reliant are the Fire Service College where the average length of service is 6.5 years and the Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre where it is 5.38 years.

Decent Homes Standard

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans he has to review the funding under the decent homes standard for local authorities whose tenants choose to remain owned and managed by the local authority. [195705]

Keith Hill: The Government is not looking at any other options for delivering additional resources beyond the existing three options. The existing options of Arms Length Management Organisations (ALMO), Private Finance Initiatives (PFI) and transfer are proving highly successful and there is no need to create alternative options. There is not and will not be a 'fourth option' for additional funds, and the Deputy Prime Minister has recently written to all leaders of councils of stock owning local authorities to make this clear.

However, the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is always looking at ways of improving how housing finance works, for example, this year has seen greater freedoms introduced by prudential borrowing and increased Management and Maintenance allowances above inflation.

Departmental IT

Brian White: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what percentage of the Department's (a) implemented and (b) planned computer systems use open source software; and what plans are in place to raise this level. [195667]

Phil Hope: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister does not have statistics on the use of open source software, but to date it is very limited. We follow established Government policy, which is to consider open source software options alongside proprietary ones in IT procurements on a level playing field basis, and award contracts on a value for money, case-by-case basis. The policy can be viewed at www.govtalk.gov.uk.

Fire Control Centre (South-West)

Ms Atherton: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what decisions he has taken in relation to a regional fire control centre for the South West. [195268]

Mr. Raynsford: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is currently running a competitive procurement for fire and rescue regional control centres under the EU Restricted Services Directive, (OJEU Notice 2004/S 78–066658). Submitted sites have been evaluated against criteria such as accessibility (to both people and services), demographics, vulnerability to threats such as flooding, and suitability for development. A shortlist of three bidders has been selected for the South West region and tenders invited from them. The final decisions on locations are expected early next year.

During the procurement process we are unable to release any information on the tenderers and their proposals to anyone who is not directly involved in the process.

Government Offices for the Regions

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what pieces of primary legislation Government Offices for the regions are able to use to implement their work. [194336]

Phil Hope: The Government Offices for the Regions (GOs) carry out activities on behalf of 10 Government Departments. A list of all the primary legislation relied upon by those Departments in carrying out their functions through the GOs is not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the responsibilities of the Government Offices for the Regions (a) were in 1997 and (b) are now. [194337]

Phil Hope: In 1997 the responsibilities of the Government Offices for the Regions (GOs) included work for four Government Departments: Department of Trade and Industry, Department of Education and Employment, Department of the Environment, and Department of Transport.

Since 1997, the GOs have been given more responsibilities and they now carry out work on behalf of 10 Government Departments. Their current responsibilities are set out in the Regional Co-ordination Unit and Government Office Network Corporate Plan 2004–05. A copy of this has been available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what additional regulatory powers Government Offices for the Regions have gained since 1997. [194439]

Phil Hope: The Government Offices for the Regions (GOs) are part of the central Government Departments for whom they carry out activities but are based in the regions. A regulatory impact assessment is required for powers which impact on business, charities or the voluntary sector (and from April 2004 a public sector impact test), and on which Departments rely in carrying out their functions through the GOs. A list of those powers is not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

HMOs

Jon Trickett: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what estimate the 1996 English House Condition Survey made of the (a) number and (b) proportion of houses in multiple occupations that have three or more storeys. [196986]

Keith Hill: None. A detailed analysis of the 1996 survey data could be provided only at a disproportionate cost.

Jon Trickett: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans he has to publish an analysis of houses in multiple occupation in the private rented sector from the information contained in the 2001 English House Condition Survey. [196990]

Keith Hill: The most robust figures that can be provided are published in Table 2.2 on page 33 of the English House Condition Survey 2001 main report, a copy of which is tabled as follows. The size of the survey sample of houses in multiple occupation precludes any detailed breakdown by tenure.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister expects that the majority of bedsits and shared houses will be in the private rented sector, and households with lodgers will be owner-occupied. The survey indicates that in the order of 45 per cent. of self-contained converted flats are private rented.

Table 2.2: Dwellings, buildings, accommodation units, households and people in main HMO categories, 2001

	Shared house/flat		Household with lodger		Bedsits		Converted flat		All main HMOs

Planning

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) what the average cost to a planning department of processing a planning application was in each of the last three years; and what the average costs were for applications processed by Birmingham city council; [196222]

(2) how many planning applications were resubmitted (a) to planning departments in England and (b) to Birmingham city council planning department in each of the last three years; [196223]

(3) what the average number of hours needed by planning officers to process a planning application was (a) in England and (b) in Birmingham city council in each of the last three years; [196224]

(4) what percentage of planning applications that were resubmitted were from (a) private individuals and (b) property developers in each of the last three years; [196226]

(5) what the average fee charged by planning departments to process a planning application was to (a) private individuals and (b) property developers in each of the last three years. [196227]

Keith Hill: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the average fee charged for submitting a planning application was (a) in England and (b) in Birmingham city council in each of the last three years. [196225]

Keith Hill: The information requested is tabled as follows.

	Fees[1] (£ million)	Applications[2] (thousand)	Average[3] (£)
England
2001–02	142	582	240
2002–03	171	635	270
2003–04	185	675	270
Birmingham
2001–02	1.8	6.2	280
2002–03	2.3	6.8	340
2003–04	2.4	7.9	310

[1] Reported receipts grossed for non-reporting councils; excluding fees for 'county matters' applications. Neither listed building consents nor conservation area consents attract fees.

[2] Applications for planning permission, grossed for non-reporting councils. Statistics on total applications received are only collected, so consequently include listed building consents and conservation area consents.

[3] Fees per application.

Note:

'County matters' applications and fees, covering mainly waste disposal and mineral extraction, have been excluded. These number only around 2,000 decisions annually for England as a whole.

Post Office

Clive Efford: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the impact of the closure of sub-post offices on regeneration strategies in neighbourhood renewal areas. [194443]

Phil Hope: The June 2000 Performance and Innovation Unit report on modernising the Post Office network proposed a special fund be established to help sustain and improve post offices in deprived urban areas, in recognition of their important contribution to their communities. The £15 million Deprived Urban Post Office Fund was subsequently set up to support post offices at risk of closure in the most deprived areas.

Clive Efford: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what discussions his Department has had with the Department of Trade and Industry on the impact of closure of sub-post offices in neighbourhood renewal areas. [194444]

Phil Hope: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has worked closely involved with the Department of Trade and Industry in setting up the £15 million Deprived Urban Post Office Fund which supports sub-post offices at risk of closure in the most deprived areas.

Regional Assemblies

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the implementation of the recommendations contained in the Barker report on housing supply. [195162]

Keith Hill: Kate Barker's proposals build on the approach adopted in the Communities Plan, launched by the Deputy Prime Minister in February 2003. Her analysis has reinforced the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's case and strategy for more growth. In particular, in their initial response to her report, my right hon. Friends the Deputy Prime Minister and the Chancellor of the Exchequer accepted Kate Barker's central recommendation that there should be a step change in housing supply. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister intends to set a national market affordability goal as part of a package of measures to achieve this, by the end of 2005.

In addressing the specific suggestions in her report the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister will adopt the same principles as set out in the Communities Plan. We want to create sustainable communities; thriving and vibrant places where people want to live and work, and which will stand the test of time. We retain a firm commitment to preserving the Green Belt and using higher densities to minimise the land take from new development. In the recent Spending Review, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer allocated funds which, with additional Private Finance Initiative (PFI) funding, aim to provide an extra 10,000 new homes for social let annually. The Spending Review also provides the resources that will help deliver the 200,000 new homes identified in the Sustainable Communities Plan in Thames Gateway and the other growth areas by 2016 and go further by responding to new proposals for growth.

New housing must be supported by public services (schools, hospitals, transport, water and power supply) as they grow. Departments are working together to ensure this. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has made a start through the spending review in creating a Community Infrastructure Fund. An extra £50 million in 2006–07 and £150 million in 2007–08 will be available to finance transport projects needed to sustain housing growth.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is currently consulting on proposals to strengthen regional integration by bringing together regional planning bodies and regional housing boards. This will help to ensure that regional housing strategies are better integrated with Regional Spatial Strategies in line with other regional strategies such as the regional economic strategy. This consultation also covers the arrangements to be put in place to provide the new regional bodies with independent advice on housing need and market assessments and on how to interpret the Government's affordability goal at regional level.

The Barker Review also made a number of recommendations for changes to the way in which land is allocated and released for housing development. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister will consult widely with key interests on specific proposals made by Barker and intend to produce a draft consultation on revisions to Planning Policy Guidance 3—Housing, during 2005.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is also committed to considering the Barker Review's proposals for the introduction of a Planning Gain

Supplement to capture increase in land values arising from development for the provision of infrastructure, and to come to a decision by the end of 2005.

Government alone will not be able to deliver the growth required. House builders and developers must respond. Kate Barker laid down specific challenges to the house building industry to improve productivity, design and customer satisfaction. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister looks forward to working with the industry to address these issues and achieve the extra growth required.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the likely impact of net immigration on housing demand in England over the next 20 years. [195163]

Keith Hill: The Government estimates that net immigration contributes only a minority of household growth. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has prepared interim estimates of household growth over the period to 2031, using the 2002 Government Actuary's Department figures. These predict that household growth will average 189,000 between 2001 and 2021. We estimate that around one third—or around 60,000—households per year will be directly due to net immigration between 2001 and 2021. Fully updated 2003-based household projections will be published next year. The Government takes the impact of migration on our housing stock seriously and has recently amended social housing allocations policy following the enlargement of the European Union.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will estimate the number of houses to be demolished in each of the Pathfinder areas of England. [195166]

Keith Hill: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice) on 28 October 2004, Official Report, columns 1321–22W.

Students

Mr. Best: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what recent discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for Education and Skills on the problems associated with the (a) geographical concentration and (b) accommodation of higher education students. [196859]

Keith Hill: Earlier this year I discussed these issues at a meeting with my right. hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (Alan Johnson) at which universities UK (UUK) and the local government association (LGA) were present. As a result the Department for Education and Skills agreed to help fund a joint project between UUK and the LGA to establish some good practice in the provision of student accommodation in the community.

The study will look at existing schemes with the aim of identifying best practice in managing student accommodation. A specification for the project has now been agreed and UUK are currently in the process of seeking suitable parties to undertake the research. The aim is to have completed the research and to have produced a good practice guide by Spring 2005.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

BHG Group

Mr. Alan Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps her Department has taken to investigate the activities of Better Health Global Ltd. and the BHG group of companies; and if she will make a statement. [195678]

Mr. Sutcliffe [holding answer 2 November 2004]: Winding-up orders have been made against three companies, part of the BHG group of companies; Betterhealth Global Ltd., Betterhealth International Ltd. and Self-Pay (International) Ltd. The winding-up orders were obtained on 23 June 2004 on the petition of companies' bankers.

The official receivers' investigation into the failure of the companies in liquidation is on-going.

With respect to other companies in the Betterhealth Global group, my Department does not comment on the affairs of live companies that are not the subject to insolvency proceedings.

Mr. Alan Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate her Department has made of the total losses incurred by investors and creditors as a result of the liquidation of Better Health Global Ltd. (BHG); what estimate has been made of the cost to the Department of grants to companies used to fund BHG; and if she will make a statement. [195679]

Mr. Sutcliffe [holding answer 2 November 2004]: The estimated deficiency of assets over liabilities in the liquidation of Betterhealth Global Ltd. is £346,840.

The official receiver's investigation into the failure of the company is on-going and will include the question of how the company was funded.

Mr. Alan Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when her Department was first informed of alleged malpractice by the directors of Better Health Global Ltd., and the BHG group of companies; and if she will make a statement. [195680]

Mr. Sutcliffe [holding answer 2 November 2004]: The official receiver was appointed liquidator of Betterhealth Global Ltd., Betterhealth International Ltd. and Self-Pay (International) Ltd. on the making of the winding-up orders on 23 June 2004, and the investigations into the causes of failure of each company are on-going.

With respect to other companies in the Betterhealth Global group, my Department does not comment on the affairs of live companies that are not the subject of insolvency proceedings.

Mr. Alan Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps the official receiver (a) has taken and (b) is planning to take to investigate the circumstances surrounding the liquidation of Better Health Global Ltd.; and if she will make a statement. [195681]

Mr. Sutcliffe [holding answer 2 November 2004]: The official receiver has interviewed the principle UK based director of Betterhealth Global Ltd.; the investigations into the causes of failure of the company are on-going.

Mr. Alan Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations she has received about alleged malpractice by the directors of Better Health Global Ltd. and the BHG group of companies; and if she will make a statement. [195682]

Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 2 November 2004]: It would be inappropriate for me to comment on the affairs of BHG until the official receiver's investigations into the company's causes of failure have been completed.

With respect to other companies in the Betterhealth Global group, my Department does not comment on the affairs of live companies that are not the subject of insolvency proceedings.

EU Presidency (Greece)

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many times during the Greek presidency of the EU (a) the Committee on implementation of the multiannual programme for enterprise and entrepreneurship, in particular for small and medium-sized enterprises and (b) the Committee on the specific programme for research, technological development and demonstration on promotion of innovation and participation of small and medium-sized enterprises met; when and where these meetings took place; which UK Government expert was present at each meeting; what (i) technical and (ii) financial issues were raised by the UK Government expert at each meeting; what recommendations each committee produced during that period; what actions were (A) proposed and (B) taken by (1) the EU and (2) the UK Government as a result of each committee's recommendations; and if she will make a statement. [194352]

Nigel Griffiths: The Enterprise Programme Management Committee met once during the Greek presidency, at the European Commission in Brussels on 13 March 2003. Two members of the Small Business Service represented the UK. Article 14 of the Rules of Procedure states that the committee's discussions shall be kept confidential.

The Horizontal Configuration of the Programme Committee of the FP6 Specific Programme, "Integrating and Strengthening the European Research Area", which considers SME issues, met twice during the Greek presidency, at the Commission on 4 March and 21 May. A DTI official from the Office of Science and Technology represented the UK. Article 14 of the Rules of Procedure states that the committee's discussions shall be kept confidential.

Gas

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of prospective changes to the wholesale price of gas in the UK in the course of (a) 2005 and (b) 2006. [196025]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: UK wholesale prices are linked indirectly to movements in oil prices. Markets in continental Europe are not fully competitive and gas prices are contractually linked to oil prices. The UK therefore imports the gas-oil link through the Bacton-Zeebrugge Interconnector. Expectations are that, in the short run, oil prices will remain relatively high.

Wholesale prices are also in part driven by uncertainty about potential tightness of supply as the UK makes the transition to becoming a net gas importer. There is, however, strong evidence that there are a number of infrastructure projects due to come on stream that will increase gas supply. These include the doubling of the import capacity of the Interconnector and three major LNG import terminals. The DTI and Ofgem Joint Energy Security of Supply Group monitors the situation and provides information to ensure the market is aware of developments.

Nuclear Decommissioning

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what proportion of the revenues accrued to the Nuclear Decommissioning Authority in its first operational year are earmarked to come from income generated from (a) Thorp and (b) the Sellafield Mox Plant; [196421]

(2) pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Portsmouth South (Mr. Hancock) of 14 September 2004, Official Report, columns 1536–37W, on Mox Plant (Sellafield), for what reasons the details of (a) the Sellafield Mox Plant annual revenues and (b) SMP profits are classified as commercially confidential. [196459]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Details of the Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant (THORP) and the Sellafield MOX Plant (SMP) annual revenues and profits are classified as commercially confidential, as they relate to future income which if divulged could lead to improper gain or advantage by BNFL's competitors and customers.

The Government recognise that, while THORP and SMP are operational, there will be interest in how the plants perform. The Nuclear Decommissioning Authority's (NDA) annual report and accounts will therefore include information, consistent with the requirements of commercial confidentiality, on the financial and operational performances.

Post Office Closures

Michael Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what steps she will take to provide alternative services following the closure of Crown post offices in city centres; [195932]

(2) if she will make a statement on the closure of Crown post offices by Royal Mail. [195933]

Mr. Sutcliffe [holding answer 4 November 2004]: Decisions on individual closures and conversions are operational and commercial matters for Post Office Ltd. The company has no plans for the large scale closure of directly managed post offices and anticipates that fewer than five directly managed branches will close in 2005–06. Post Office Ltd.'s policy is to maintain a core network of directly managed post offices while continuing to drive efficiencies, with the aim of making the business commercially viable. This strategy includes the conversion of some individual directly managed offices to franchise or agency status where suitable opportunities arise.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Lazarowicz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to allocate further funding to support the development of renewable energy. [195935]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 4 November 2004]: The Government have announced that they have allocated in total over £500 million in support for research and development and demonstration projects for longer term renewables and low carbon energy generation technologies, over the period from 2002 to 2008.

This includes the additional funding announced in the 2004 Spending Review during the summer. We are currently considering how this additional funding will be allocated between the different renewables technologies.

In addition, the Renewables Obligation, taken together with the exemption from the climate change levy for renewable electricity, is estimated to provide support for renewables of around £1 billion a year by 2010.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

CAFCASS

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many reports were completed by the Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Service (CAFCASS) in the last financial year; and in how many cases contact between children and the father was absent at the commencement of proceedings and then re-established following the intervention of CAFCASS staff. [194222]

Margaret Hodge: CAFCASS completed 33,803 reports in the last financial year. CAFCASS does not record the number of cases where contact between children and their father was absent. However, a one-off survey of 300 families (carried out by the National Association of Probation Officers in the summer of 2002) reported that prior to commencement of CAFCASS involvement, there was no contact with the non-resident parent in 42 per cent. of cases; following the completion of CAFCASS work, only 6 per cent. of non-resident parents remained without contact. The information in the survey was non gender specific.

A survey conducted by the Office of National Statistics (ONS) asked a sample of resident and a sample of non-resident parents about the contact arrangements with their children following relationship breakdown. Results for the non-resident parent sample showed that 78 per cent. of children whose parents had made informal contact arrangements had direct (face-to-face) contact with their non-resident fathers at least once a month. The resident parents sample reported that 61 per cent. of children had direct contact at least once a month.

Carers

Mr. Dhanda: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what support is available for people who take responsibility for grandchildren who would otherwise be in care; and if he will increase this support. [195609]

Margaret Hodge: Anyone caring for a child under 16 is entitled to claim child benefit and to apply for child tax credits (CTC) subject to the usual eligibility criteria. Where a child is orphaned or one parent has died and the other is missing, the carer may also be entitled to claim guardian's allowance.

Local authorities are also empowered to assist with the care of children and young people under the Children Act 1989. Where the local authority determines that a child is "in need" the authority may then provide services to meet those needs, or, in exceptional cases, provide financial assistance, under Section 17. Some local authorities also support families who have a Residence Order in respect of the child that they are looking after. This type of allowance is generally a contribution towards the cost of accommodating and maintaining them. In both cases the services and payments are provided once an assessment of need has been carried out and are at the discretion of the local authority.

Disabled Students (Access)

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what duties (a) colleges and (b) schools have with respect to access for people with disabilities; and what assessment he has made of the progress of (i) colleges and (ii) schools in complying with the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. [195280]

Margaret Hodge: The SEN and Disability Act (SENDA) 2001 amended Part 4 of the Disability Discrimination Act (DDA) 1995 to bring access to education within the remit of the Act. From September 2002 it has been unlawful for schools and institutions providing post-16 education to discriminate against disabled pupils or students for a reason relating to their disability, without justification. Both have a duty to make reasonable adjustments to ensure that disabled pupils and students are not put at a substantial disadvantage in comparison to those who are not disabled. For schools this does not include the provision of auxiliary aids or services or making changes to physical features.

Schools are under a duty to plan strategically to increase access over time. This duty includes planning to increase access to school premises, to the curriculum and providing written material in alternative formats to ensure accessibility. In the first planning period, 1 April 2003 to 31 March 2006, some £300 million is being made available to local education authorities in England through the Schools Access Initiative for projects to improve the accessibility of mainstream schools to disabled pupils.

Post-16 institutions have been required to make reasonable adjustments, including the provision of auxiliary aids and services, since September 2003; and from September 2005 they will also have a duty to make changes to physical features. Since 2002, £180 million has been allocated to help colleges of further education and local education authority adult education provision in England, become accessible.The duties not to discriminate apply to responsible bodies in England, Wales and Scotland. The planning duty applies in England and Wales only. The Scottish Parliament has legislated separately to introduce a similar duty in Scotland.

The Secretary of State asked the Office for Standards in Education (Ofsted) to report on the progress being made by schools in England in implementing the duties they acquired under SENDA and their report "Special educational needs and disability: towards inclusive schools" was published last month. Ofsted will continue to monitor the disability duties as part of their on-going inspections of schools.

The Learning and Skills Council (LSC) requires all colleges of further education in England to comply with the requirements of the DDA. The LSC's Annual Equality and Diversity Report for 2002–03 includes an assessment of overall progress towards compliance.

The DDA requires schools and post-16 institutions as employers not to unjustifiably discriminate against current or prospective employees with disabilities, or those who have had disabilities in the past, and as service providers not to unjustifiably discriminate against disabled people, where they provide non-educational services. More details about these duties may be found at the Disability Rights Commission's website: www. drc-gb.org.

Education Maintenance Allowances

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the total cost of the education maintenance allowance (a) has been in 2004 and (b) is expected to be in 2004, broken down into (i) total value of allowance awarded, (ii) administration costs and (iii) other costs. [194070]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: The amount already spent on EMA this year is £64 million. The estimated cost this year for EMA is £275 million which is broken down as follows: payments to young people £232.6 million, administration costs £37 million and other costs of £5.2 million.

Foster Carers

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) if he will review the payment regime for foster carers; [195082]

(2) if he will apply the national minimum wage rules to foster carers. [195083]

Margaret Hodge: The Secretary of State has tabled amendments to the Children Bill which would enable regulations to be made prescribing a national minimum allowance to be paid to foster carers in England and Wales.

We propose to work closely with local authorities over the next couple of years to try and find ways of simplifying and making more transparent the payment structures which they have in place. We shall be monitoring progress very closely and this amendment gives us the power to prescribe a national minimum allowance if that is considered appropriate.

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what plans he has to assist local authorities in recruiting younger couples into the fostering profession. [195085]

Margaret Hodge: The Green Paper, 'Every Child Matters' explicitly encourages more people to consider fostering, including groups such as single people, older people, unmarried couples and lone parents who may not realise they are eligible. In February this year we produced a Fostering Publicity Pack designed to help local authorities to run targeted local campaigns to recruit new foster carers for looked after children. We have also awarded a 3-year grant of £180,000 to the Fostering Network to support Foster Care Fortnight, which has a particular focus on recruitment.

Frontline Technologies Limited

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the purpose was of the action against Frontline Technologies Limited (European patent UK MO 0 664 061); what the cost to the Government was of the case; how much of this was borne by the Department; and what the outcome of the case was. [R] [190292]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 15 October 2004]: My Department issued proceedings against Frontline Technology Limited to challenge the validity of European Patent UK MO 0 664 061 which covers the process of exchanging student data over a wireless network using portable computers and transceivers in an educational environment. The patent encompasses a wide range of school activity including, for example, wireless electronic pupil registration and attendance management systems.

These proceedings were primarily brought because the patent restricted schools' access to a full range of technology. Additionally, my Department assessed the potential additional costs to schools for licence fees, based on Frontline Technology's published terms and scale of charges, to be substantial over the life of the patent to 2013.

The costs of the litigation are subject to negotiation between the parties and in the circumstances it would not be appropriate to cite a figure for those costs. However, the litigation costs incurred to date are a fraction of the potential cost that schools could have incurred by way of licence fees.

The written judgment of the patent court (Deputy Judge David Young) was handed down on 17 June 2004. My Department substantially won its case thus giving greater freedom to schools to buy wireless products and services of their choice, reducing costs for schools and stimulating the wireless technology market through greater competition. Frontline Technology Limited has applied to amend its patent by way of a statutory procedure. My Department is challenging the scope of the proposed amendment.

Integrated Children's System

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what plans the Government have to abolish the Child Protection Register; and on what time scale. [195337]

Margaret Hodge: The Government made it clear, in "Keeping Children Safe: The Government's response to the Victoria Climbié Inquiry Report and Joint Chief Inspectors' Report Safeguarding Children", that in the short to medium term, the training materials commissioned to accompany the booklet "What To Do If You're Worried A Child Is Being Abused" would include a section on child protection registers. In the longer term, as the Integrated Children's System becomes widely used, it will allow staff to identify those children who, for example, have been the subject of inquiries into whether they are at risk of suffering, or have suffered, significant harm, have been the subject of a child protection conference, or are the subject of a child protection plan. The child protection register will therefore no longer be necessary. It can then be discontinued as a separate register at a date to be agreed when the Integrated Children's System has been fully introduced across England and Wales.

Minister for Children

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills for what reason the right hon. Member for Barking (Margaret Hodge) will not meet Mr. T. Perry, a constituent of the hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham. [195804]

Margaret Hodge: Heavy diary commitments do not allow the right hon. Member for Barking to meet with Mr. Perry. However Mr. Perry has had lengthy telephone conversations with departmental officials and has received detailed replies to his correspondence, if Mr. Perry wishes to write a further letter to the right hon. Member for Barking, he will be assured of a reply.

Pupil Exclusions

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will break down by type of special educational need pupils with special educational needs who were excluded from schools in 2002–03. [194762]

Margaret Hodge: The requested information is not currently available.

Pupil Referral Units

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the latest available figure is for the average period that a pupil at each key stage spends in a pupil referral unit. [194766]

Margaret Hodge: The requested information is not collected centrally.

Residential Care (Children)

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many children were in residential care in (a) England and (b) the East Riding of Yorkshire in each of the last two years. [194960]

Margaret Hodge: The information requested is given in the table.

Children looked after in residential placements at 31 March 2002 and 2003

	31 March 2002	31 March 2003
England	7,900	7,700
East Riding of Yorkshire	30	35

Notes:

1. Figures have been taken from the CLA100 return.
2. Figures exclude children looked after under an agreed series of short-term placements.
3. Residential placements include secure units, children's homes and hostels, and residential schools.
4. National figures have been rounded to the nearest 100. Local authority figures have been rounded to the nearest 5.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Antisocial Behaviour Orders

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to encourage local authorities and the police to name young people convicted of offences under antisocial behaviour legislation; and if he will make a statement. [191965]

Ms Blears: The identity of any young person who commits a criminal offence is protected by automatic reporting restrictions under the Children and Young Persons Act 1933.

Antisocial behaviour orders (ASBOs) are civil orders rather than criminal penalties and are not subject to the same restrictions. Full details of the order, including the name and address of the perpetrator, can be publicised. However, the breach of an ASBO is a criminal offence, which means the identity of the youth is protected; we will be taking steps to change this.

In our Strategic Plan, published in July this year, we made a commitment to look into ending anonymity for people under 18 who breach the conditions of their ASBOs.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for asylum this year have been unsuccessful; and how many unsuccessful applicants have been deported. [191449]

Mr. Browne: 26,360 initial decisions were made between January and June 2004, the latest date for which figures are available. Of these, 890 were granted asylum, 80 were granted Humanitarian Protection, 2,085 were granted Discretionary Leave and 23,305 were refusals.

32,370 appeals were determined by adjudicators between January and June 2004, the latest date for which figures are available. Of these, 6,755 were allowed, 24,875 were dismissed and the remainder were withdrawn or abandoned. Appeals do not necessarily relate to initial decisions made during January and June 2004.

6,450 principal asylum applicants were removed from the UK between January and June 2004, 7,810 including dependants. This includes people who have departed "voluntarily" after enforcement action had been initiated against them and those leaving under the Assisted Voluntary Returns Programmes run by the International Organisation for Migration. Removals do not necessarily relate to initial decision or appeal determinations made during January and June 2004.

Information on initial decisions, appeals and removals are published on a quarterly and annual basis. The next publication covering the third quarter of 2004 (July to September) will be available on 16 November on the Home Office Research Development and Statistics Directorate website at http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/immigration1.html.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what circumstances asylum seekers are required to attend in person their appeal decision. [196622]

Mr. Lammy: I have been asked to reply.

There are currently no circumstances in which the Immigration Appellate Authority (IAA) requires asylum seekers to attend the giving of their appeal decision in person.

Appeals against immigration decisions taken by the Secretary of State for the Home Department are made to the IAA. The procedures of the IAA are governed by The Asylum and Immigration (Procedure) Rules 2003 which contain provisions for the tribunal to serve a written determination upon every party and any representative acting for a party.

Correspondence

Sir Gerald Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when he will reply to the letter to him dated 14 September from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton, with regard to Hanaf Attita; [195517]

(2) when he will reply to the letter to him dated 22 September from the right hon. Member for Manchester,Gorton, with regard to Mrs. R. Faiz; [195518]

(3) when he will reply to the letter to him dated 14 September from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton, with regard to Mr. A. Hussain, transferred to him by the Attorney General; [195520]

(4) when he will answer the letter to him dated 14 September from the right hon. Member for Manchester Gorton with regard to Mr. Arshad Hussain. [196116]

Mr. Blunkett: I wrote to my right hon. Friend on 4 November 2004.

Crime/Sentencing Statistics

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were charged with crimes in each year since 1995, broken down by (a) gender, (b) age and (c) type of offence. [190789]

Ms Blears: Statistics of defendants charged with crimes are not collected centrally. The table, which has been placed in the Library, however, gives the number of defendants proceeded against at magistrates courts by gender, age and offence type for England and Wales 1995 to 2002.

Statistics for 2003 will be published in November.

Graffiti

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress of the graffiti removal notice pilots. [191897]

Ms Blears: The Government recognises that graffiti causes offence to communities and individuals, leads to the fear of crime and is criminal damage.

The Anti-social Behaviour Act 2003 sections 48 to 52 gave local authorities the powers in 12 pilot areas to issue graffiti removal notices to speed up the removal of graffiti and recover their costs on certain types of property. This can be applied to the owners of street furniture, statutory undertakers and educational establishments. The Home Office is currently conducting a consultation and associated RIA on the impact and associated costs of national roll-out of these powers. The consultation period finishes on 31 December 2004.

The 12 pilot areas have demonstrated that constructive partnerships between local authorities, statutory undertakers and the owners of street furniture have led to the rapid and efficient removal of graffiti. We have also seen local authorities, the telecommunication industry and local police sharing their knowledge to secure prosecutions against graffiti vandals.

Illegal Immigration

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his plans to cut the levels of illegal immigration to the UK. [191269]

Mr. Browne: We have already made significant progress in strengthening the UK's borders. The measures we have put in place have reduced by half the number of asylum claims and they also serve to prevent would-be illegal migrants from circumventing our immigration controls. The operation of juxtaposed control operations and deployment of detection equipment overseas impact directly on those attempting to enter the UK illegally, regardless of whether they intend to abuse our asylum system or to reside or work here without entitlement.

We are committed to maintaining robust pre and on entry controls to prevent illegal immigration into the United Kingdom and there are many strands of work currently being undertaken to ensure the integrity of UK border controls. These include:

Reflex, the multi-agency forum which brings together key law enforcement players including the Immigration Service, as well as relevant government Departments and the Security Services, under the chair of the National Crime Squad to tackle organised illegal immigration (including human smuggling and trafficking). We have trebled funding for Reflex to tackle organised immigration crime with 20 million each year over the next three years.

As part of a longer-term strategy, the National Criminal Intelligence Service (NCIS) manages an expanding network of Immigration Liaison Officers in key overseas posts who work closely with local law enforcement agencies to combat illegal migratory flows.

The deployment of New Detection Technology overseas.

The extension of Juxtaposed Controls, now including Calais, Coquelles, Paris and from the end of October Brussels to allow the admissibility of passengers to be determined prior to embarkation to the UK.

The ongoing deployment of our Airline Liaison Officer network overseas.

An informed and robust visa strategy.

Introduction of a criminal offence to arrive without a valid travel document.

Close working with other UK border agencies and European and International partners.

The measures we have already taken to control illegal immigration and unfounded asylum claims are subject to on-going review and we will continue to use and develop our initiatives, resources and response capabilities to allow us to focus on areas of potential abuse whilst expediting the clearance of bona fide passengers.

Indymedia Servers

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether prior notification was received by his Department concerning the seizure of the Indymedia servers on 7 October. [194455]

Mr. Blunkett [holding answer 28 October 2004]: I can confirm that the Home Office received no prior notification in relation to this matter.

Money Laundering

Ross Cranston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his Department's consultation on money laundering and accountants' obligations to report money laundering. [191981]

Caroline Flint: On 4 August the Home Office issued an informal consultation paper seeking views on whether, and if so how, the law on the obligations of accountants to report money laundering needed to be changed to bring it into line with European law. This was in response to representations from the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales which challenged the treatment of accountants, auditors and tax advisers under Part 7 of the Proceeds of Crime Act 2002.

The consultation period ended on 30 September and around 40 responses have been received. The Home Office is giving full consideration to the responses, in consultation with other Departments. The Government have not reached a final view on whether the Proceeds of Crime Act 2002 and the Money Laundering Regulations 2003 need to be changed.

Travel Documents (Prosecutions)

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have been brought in the last 12 months against people who were suspected of destroying their travel documents. [195468]

Mr. Browne: Section 2 of the Asylum and Immigration (Treatment of Claimants) Act 2004 makes it an offence, in certain circumstances, to fail to produce a travel document when applying for leave to enter. Between 22 September 2004, when this legislation was implemented, and 30 October 2004, 79 people have been charged. This may include people who are suspected of destroying their travel documents.

There have been 15 convictions in the same period. This figure is provided from locally collated management information and may be subject to change.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Iraq

Adam Price: To ask the Solicitor-General pursuant to the answer of 26 October 2004, Official Report, columns 1105–06W, whether the Attorney-General has sought the Prime Minister's view on the veracity of Iraqi declarations on weapons of mass destruction in the light of the evidence now available. [195390]

The Solicitor-General: No.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Private Pensions

20. Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what steps the Government have taken to encourage individuals to take out private pensions. [196336]

Malcolm Wicks: The Government are very keen to encourage individuals to take out private pensions. We have introduced stakeholder pensions, a low charge, flexible and portable pension arrangement as an alternative option to personal pensions, which can be costly and inflexible.

Pensions also offer more generous tax treatment on pensions than on any other form of investment. In addition we want to encourage individuals to plan for their retirement. Clauses in the Pensions Bill will enable us to promote and facilitate financial planning for retirement as part of our wider Informed Choice agenda.

Disabled Discrimination

21. David Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what plans he has to tackle discrimination against disabled people in the workplace. [196337]

Maria Eagle: By extending the Disability Discrimination Act from 1 October this year, we have provided comprehensive protection against disability discrimination in employment. The employment provisions now cover an additional one million employers and seven million more jobs, and we will be undertaking a targeted publicity campaign to highlight to employers their duties under the Act. In addition, provisions in the draft Disability Discrimination Bill would extend the protection of the Act, including in employment, to more people with HIV, cancer and MS.

State Retirement Pension

23. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what recent submissions he has received in relation to state retirement pensions from the National Pensioner's Convention; and if he will make a statement. [196339]

Malcolm Wicks: I received a copy of the National Pensioners Convention "Pensioners Manifesto" earlier this year. The Government shares its aims of securing dignity and fulfilment for both today's and future generations of pensioners.

My hon. Friend may also be interested to know my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State is due to meet Rodney Bickerstaff, president of the National Pensioners Convention on 15 November.

Economic Inactivity

24. Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a statement on the Department's policies for reducing economic inactivity. [196340]

Jane Kennedy: Between 1979 and 1997 the number of people receiving incapacity benefit trebled and had that trend continued there would be around 4 million people now on incapacity benefit instead of 2.7 million.

Almost all of those who move on to incapacity benefits want and expect to go back to work, and our reforms will give them the opportunity and full range of help needed to realise that goal.

Agency Staff

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions pursuant to the answer of 1 November 2004, Official Report, column 113W, on agency staff, how many agency temporary staff were working for his Department in its central headquarters buildings in as many of the last five years as may be calculated without incurring disproportionate cost. [196617]

Maria Eagle: None of the information requested could be provided without incurring disproportionate cost.

Construction Industry

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many (a) deaths and (b) notified injuries there have been in the construction industry in each year since 1996. [195407]

Jane Kennedy: The table shows fatal and total injuries in construction reported to HSE under the RIDDOR Regulations during the period 1996–97 to 2003–4[1].

Injuries to workers in the construction industry— reported to all enforcing authorities 1996–97 to 2003–04[1]

Status	Year	Fatal injuries	Total injuries
Workers	1996–97	90	13,810

[1] Provisional

[2] Provisional non-fatal injury figures for 2003–04 will be available on 18 November 2004 following the publication of Health and Safety Statistics Highlights.

Note:

The construction industry is identified using Standard Industrial Classification 1992 Section F.

Injuries are reported and defined under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations (RIDDOR) 1995. These include injuries to employees, self-employed people and members of the public.

Council Tax Benefit

Mr. Swire: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many people are not claiming the council tax benefit to which they are entitled; and if he will make a statement. [196318]

Mr. Pond: Our most recent estimate, 2001–02, is that between 1.7 million and 2.3 million people who are entitled to council tax benefit are not receiving it.

Since then we have been working hard with local authorities to ensure that those people who are entitled to council tax benefit, get it.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many (a) households and (b) pensioner households claimed council tax benefit in England in (i) 1997 and (ii) the latest year for which figures are available. [194687]

Mr. Pond: The available information is in the table.

Council tax benefit recipients in England

	All cases	Aged 60 and over
May 1997	4,627,000	2,223,000
May 2003	3,851,000	1,953,000
May 2004	3,993,600	[1]—

[1] Not available.

Notes:

1. Data refers to benefit units which may be a single person, couple or family.

2. Figures at 1997 and 2003 are rounded to the nearest thousand. The figure for May 2004 is rounded the nearest hundred.

3. 1997 and 2003 figures are based on a 1 per cent. sample and are therefore subject to a degree of sampling variation.

4. Council tax benefit totals exclude any Second Adult Rebate cases.

5. "Aged 60 and over" refers to cases where the claimant and/or partner is aged 60 or over.

6. May 2004 data includes estimates for any non-responding local authorities.

7. The latest figures available for recipients aged 60 or over are May 2003.

9. No figures on the number of recipients of council tax benefit have been produced since the introduction of pension credit.

Disability Rights Legislation

Mrs. Betty Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what (a) areas, (b) groups and (c) services have been affected by the extension of rights under disability rights legislation since 1997. [196332]

Maria Eagle: Since 1997, this Government has significantly extended and improved rights for disabled people in employment, access to goods and services, education and transport. The Disability Discrimination Act now provides substantial protection against disability discrimination for around 10 million disabled adults and 700,000 disabled children.

Miss Begg: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what impact the extension of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 on 1 October has had on disabled people's rights. [196338]

Maria Eagle: The improvements we made to the Disability Discrimination Act on 1 October this year extend the employment duties to a further 1 million employers and cover an additional 7 million jobs, including 600,000 in which disabled people already work. By requiring service providers to tackle physical barriers to disabled people accessing their services, they will also open up access to goods and services for the 10 million disabled adults and 700,000 disabled children covered by the Act.

EU Commissions

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many times during the Greek presidency of the EU the Audit Board of the Administrative Commission on Social Security for Migrant Workers met; when and where these meetings took place; which UK Government expert was present at each meeting; what (i) technical and (ii) financial issues were raised by the UK Government expert at each meeting; what recommendations the Committee produced during that period; what actions were (A) proposed and (B) taken by (1) the EU and (2) the UK Government as a result of the Committee's recommendations; and if he will make a statement. [196102]

Mr. Hutton: I have been asked to reply.

The audit board of the administrative commission on social security for migrant workers met once during the Greek presidency, on 7–8 May 2003 in Brussels. Officials from the Department attended. The first day was a plenary session and the second devoted to a series of bilateral discussions.

The United Kingdom presented a paper setting out the average costs of treatment given by the national health service in the UK for the year 2000. A number of other member states also presented average cost papers. After analysis and discussion all were accepted by the audit board apart from that for France which was remitted to the next meeting for further explanations and study.

During the Greek presidency, the audit board considered matters concerning: improvement of the administration of, and the then current position on, the payment of old claims between member states; questions concerning the revision of Regulation (EEC) no. 574/72 in the light of work then in progress to simplify and update Regulation (EEC) no 1408/71. The audit board also discussed several other more minor matters which required further deliberation at subsequent meetings or at the administrative commission.

UK officials had bilateral talks on 8 May 2003 with Austria, Belgium and Italy concerning reimbursements of mutual claims.

Jobcentre Plus

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many additional Jobcentre Plus employees have been employed in the last two years; and what the projected increase over the next three years is for each existing or planned Jobcentre Plus office in North Wales. [190876]

Jane Kennedy: The administration of Jobcentre Plus is a matter for the Chief Executive of Jobcentre Plus, David Anderson. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from David Anderson to Mr. Chris Ruane, dated 8 November 2004:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions concerning how many extra Jobcentre Plus employees have been employed in the last two years; and the projected increase over the next three years. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of Jobcentre Plus.

When Jobcentre Plus was created in April 2002 the staff headcount for North Wales stood at 973.15 (whole time equivalent posts). In real terms, no extra staff have been employed since April 2002 in the two Jobcentre Plus Districts that cover North Wales. Whilst there has been some use of casual staff to meet short term business needs, there has been a year-on-year reduction in staffing levels, in order to meet strict head count targets, as shown in the table below.

Year ending	Headcount target	Staff in post
31 March 2003	885.2	876.73
31 March 2004	882.3	875.69

Note:

The figures are expressed as whole time equivalent (WTE) posts.

For the current year, we are working towards a head count target of 841.12 (WTE posts), by March 2005. Head count targets for the coming three years have yet to be finalised.

These reductions in staffing levels must be seen against the background of a significant investment in the modernisation of our office network and IT infrastructure, which will enable us to operate more efficiently, releasing more of our staff for customer facing roles. Improved services and efficient ways of working mean that, overall, we will need fewer staff to meet our targets and to deliver to our customers.

I hope this is helpful.

Pension Offices (Backlogs)

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a statement on backlogs in local pension offices. [196341]

Malcolm Wicks: The current Pension Service workloads are within the normal parameters for intake and clearance and are closely monitored at a local level ensuring a consistent service is provided nationally. Where there are problems at individual pension centres, action is taken to remedy this as soon as possible.

Pension Service

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) how many and what percentage of calls made to the Pension Service in each month since January (a) were answered, (b) were abandoned and (c) received an engaged tone; [193926]

(2) how many calls were made to the pension credit application line in each month since July; and how many and what percentage of calls (a) were answered within 30 seconds, (b) received an engaged tone or recorded message that all agents are busy and (c) were abandoned. [193988]

Malcolm Wicks: The information is given in tables 1 and 2 as follows. The figures are comparable with private sector norms of 90 per cent. of calls answered and 80 per cent. answered within 20 seconds. The pension credit application line, in particular, aims to answer 95 per cent. of calls and has achieved that standard for the period since it became operational.

Table 1: Calls to the Pension Service, January-August 2004

	Calls answered		Calls abandoned		Calls blocked
	Number	Percentage	Number	Percentage	Number	Percentage

February	1,599,720	88.8	157,510	8.7	85,060	5.1
March	1,600,030	87.2	214,370	11.7	178,980	10.2

Notes:

1. Numbers of calls are rounded to the nearest 10.
2. Table 1 does not include calls to the pension credit application line.
3. In both tables, the numbers of calls answered, abandoned and engaged (blocked) are not calculated on precisely the same basis and in some cases the rows will not add up to exactly 100 per cent.
4. The number of calls to the application line which received the engaged tone or a recorded message was high in August as a result of the telephone system being down for a time.
5. The number of calls received by the application line is a measure of the total number of calls from customers made to the application line number 0800 99 1234. The number of calls answered within 30 seconds is a measure of all calls answered in application line sites and excludes any calls abandoned by the customer.
6. The number of calls to the application line abandoned includes only calls abandoned after the customer has received the recorded message.

Personal Injury Claims

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what progress he has made on his plans for a pilot scheme for personal injury claims handling; and if he will make a statement. [193867]

Jane Kennedy: The Department is working with insurers, lawyers, employers and employee representatives to develop a specification for a pilot scheme for resolving ELCI claims cost effectively, more transparently and quickly. The Department is about to produce a third version of the pilot specification which addresses all the issues and concerns raised by stakeholders to date. Once stakeholders agree a specification, the first pilots can be launched.

Select Committees

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many recommendations by parliamentary select committees have been adopted by his Department since June 2001. [196293]

Alan Johnson: The information requested is not collected centrally.

The Government are required to respond formally to reports produced by select committees. In doing so the Government set out their views on the recommendations made by select committees, including whether or not it proposes to adopt a particular recommendation.

Copies of all Government responses are available in the Library.

State Second Pension

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what plans he has to move state second pension to a flat rate. [196436]

Malcolm Wicks: No decision has been taken as yet regarding whether and when to make the state second pension a flat-rate scheme.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Adam Smith Institute

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much the Government have spent on funding to the Adam Smith Institute for research into utilities in developing countries in 2004. [195919]

Hilary Benn: DFID has not funded any research by the Adam Smith Institute into utilities in developing countries. The consultancy company Adam Smith International Ltd. have provided advice to development partners this year on reform of public enterprises, including utilities, in Ghana, South Africa, Iraq and the West Bank and Gaza.

Afghanistan

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment has been made of viable crop alternatives to poppy cultivation in Afghanistan; and whether alternative crops would be predominantly (a) supplied to domestic markets and (b) exported. [196264]

Hilary Benn: The Department for International Development is funding practical research into alternative ways for those cultivating the opium poppy production to earn a living. This research is generating a variety of alternative and improved products to supply both the domestic and export markets.

DFID has established a Research in Alternative Livelihoods Fund for Afghanistan. The fund is providing £3 million over three years for applied research into natural resource-based livelihoods, including crops, livestock, natural products, post-harvest processing and rural services.

The fund is presently supporting seven projects. Three projects aim to identify local, national and international market opportunities for alternative crop varieties and test a variety of agro enterprises and marketing strategies including an organic export feasibility study. Other projects include improved forage and milk production and the introduction of legumes and vegetable crops as viable alternatives to opium poppy cultivation.

DFID is also funding the development of viable crop alternatives to poppy cultivation in Badakhshan. This includes the establishment of nurseries and greenhouses for fruit and vegetable production, apricot drying, honey bee keeping, poultry farms, cashmere and silk production and a tthan-weaving programme.

Bangladesh

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will make a statement on the effects of the floods in Bangladesh on (a) the Bhairab Bridge project and (b) the Road Rehabilitation II and III projects funded by his Department; and what plans he has to secure further funding for projects funded by his Department and devastated by the floods. [195987]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: The UK was the first bilateral donor to announce support for the flood-affected people of Bangladesh. On 26 July 2004, the UK Government allocated £10 million through DFID to meet immediate flood emergency needs. On 18 August 2004, I announced a further £15 million in response to the UN Consolidated Appeal. On 26 October 2004, I approved a further £4 million to be disbursed through the World Food Programme. The UK's overall contribution has been channelled through several agencies to address both the food and non-food emergency needs of the worst affected poor people.

Bhairab Bridge was opened in 2002. DFID continues to provide technical assistance to the Roads and Highways Department (RHD) of the Government of Bangladesh to help with the maintenance of the bridge.

Between mid-July 2004 and the end of August 2004, the bridge experienced the first extensive flood since its completion. The landscaped area surrounding the bridge was submerged by one foot of water and the jetty road at Bhairab was submerged to a depth of approximately three feet. However, the flood did not cause any major damage to the bridge apart from some top soil sliding on the embankments. Where minor damage has taken place the operator has taken immediate steps to repair the damage.

The roads constructed with World Bank loans under the Road Rehabilitation and Maintenance Projects (RRMP2 and RRMP3) survived the floods without serious damage. DFID has not directly financed the construction of roads under these projects; UK support has been restricted to developing capacity in the Roads and Highways Department (RHD) and Bangladesh Road Transport Authority (BRTA) of the Ministry of Communications.

Within the £29 million emergency response to the floods, DFID approved £3.9 million in September for emergency repairs to roads and bridges. RHD has decided that this should be spent on road repairs in Dhaka Zone, one of the worst flood affected areas. RHD has, with the help of a DFID-funded consultant, rapidly agreed a set of criteria for selecting those roads most in need of repair.

The monsoon season is now over and the flood situation continues to improve. All the emergency food shelters have closed. DFID's aid framework for Bangladesh continues to grow, but the emphasis is now shifting from emergency assistance to long-term development.

Belarus

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much aid the United Kingdom has given Belarus in each year since its independence from the Soviet Union. [196159]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: Belarus became independent in 1992. The following table shows UK Bilateral aid to Belarus in each year since then.

UK bilateral aid to Belarus

Caribbean

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assistance is being given by his Department to disaster-prevention work in the Caribbean. [195907]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: DFID is enhancing the region's pre-emptive disaster management capacity through its support of multilateral and regional initiatives and direct assistance for the UK's Caribbean Overseas Territories.

DFID has committed £3.75 million to the disaster mitigation and preparedness programmes of the Pan American Health Organisation's Programme for Emergency Preparedness and Disaster Relief (PAHO PED) for the period 2003–08. DFID has also supported PAHO PED's emergency work in Montserrat and Haiti in 2004. PAHO PED focus on three key activities:

preparing the health sector for disasters reducing the vulnerability of hospitals reducing the vulnerability of water and sanitation systems.

PAHO PED has also trained many professionals in the Caribbean region on disaster risk reduction policy and practice.

DFID has an institutional partnership agreement with the International Federation of the Red Cross that includes support to its Disasters and Emergencies Relief Fund through an annual contribution, currently £221,000. This support enables the Federation to provide immediate support to National Societi around the world to help mobilise immediate emergenc relief action following natural disasters. As well as i use in response to the recent hurricanes, the fund available to ensure swift response to future disaste affecting the Caribbean.

DFID's will be providing £265,000 of the Europea Union's (EU) €3 million Caribbean disaster manageme project. It will be co-ordinated by the Caribbean Disast Emergency Response Agency (CDERA) in collaboratio with the University of the West Indies, the Caribbe Development Bank, Government agencies, no Government organisations, the Organisation of Americ States and the Canadian International Developme Agency. It will strengthen the region's capacity to co with disasters through development of disast management legislation and regulations; national disast awareness campaigns; the capacity for assessing a disseminating disaster management information on-li and enhancing the ability to undertake disast management teaching and research.

DFID is already providing £1.1 million, through i share of a €13.2 million EU project, to strengthen ear warning systems in the region, by providing four ne digital radars in Barbados, Guyana, Belize and Trinid and Tobago. The Barbados system will also serve t countries of the Eastern Caribbean.

DFID's strategy for UK's Caribbean Overse Territories (COT) calls for > "more disaster preparedness to mitigate the risk of natu catastrophes, such as hurricanes and volcanic events."

All hazard risk reduction is increasingly integrated in the assistance given to the COTs by DFID and in o partnership with the Foreign and Commonweal Office. Policy direction is complemented by t appointment (since 2001) of a Disaster Manageme Adviser for the Overseas Territories and a distin programme, with an annual budget of £350,000. Th programme, through advocacy, training and t introduction of good practice, is helping to raise O disaster preparedness and risk reduction capabilities appropriate standards.

DFID continues to be closely involved in t humanitarian response to Hurricanes Frances and Iv and is committed to learning lessons from the devastating events and, if necessary, to identi opportunities for DFID to provide further support risk reduction efforts in the region from our ongoi partnerships.

Civil Servants

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State f International Development what the average length continuous service for civil servants within t Department is. [1944

Mr. Gareth Thomas: The average length continuous service for permanent and pensionable ci servants within DFID is 11 years six months.

Darfur

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State f International Development what his latest estimate is the number of people displaced in Darfur. [1962

Hilary Benn: Although it is difficult to accurately calculate the numbers of people displaced in Darfur, Western Sudan, the latest United Nations Humanitarian Profile estimates that approximately 1.6 million people are internally displaced within Darfur as a result of the crisis. The regional breakdown of this figure is 218,000 in North Darfur, 539,000 in South Darfur, and 653,000 in West Darfur. In addition to this figure, it is estimated that there are 200,000 Darfur refugees in neighbouring Chad.

The overall total of internally displaced people has risen by approximately 151,000 in the last month. Although increased insecurity and the pull of aid in major settlements accounts for two thirds of this rise, the remaining third represents new access to previously inaccessible locations that hold concentrations of internally displaced people—these are not therefore newly displaced people.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what his latest assessment is of the number of people who have died in each month in 2004 from malnutrition and disease in Darfur. [196203]

Hilary Benn: It is very difficult to provide accurate monthly figures of mortality in Darfur in 2004, given that there was very little access to large proportions of the Darfur in the early part of this year. The latest projections provided by the World Health Organisation (WHO) indicate that between 35,000 and 70,000 deaths occurred between March and September. In presenting these figures, WHO stated that further work was needed to estimate what proportion of these deaths were due to different causes, though it perceived that most were due to diarrhoeal diseases exacerbated by malnutrition.

The large variation in these figures is due to the fact that they are based on the findings of the WHO's retrospective mortality survey, which only covered North and West Darfur. Assessment in South Darfur was hampered by insecurity. The WHO found that between 15 June and 15 August, the crude mortality rate was 1.5 deaths per 10,000 per day in North Darfur and was 2.9 deaths per 10,000 people per day in South Darfur. Based on the numbers of internally displaced persons at the time, WHO estimated that between 6,000 and 10,000 people were dying per month.

It should be noted that these figures refer to mortality rates amongst the displaced. Further deaths may have occurred due to malnutrition, disease and for other reasons that have not been captured in the survey. DFID has urged the WHO to complete its survey in South Darfur and to undertake regular monitoring of morbidity and mortality levels throughout Darfur.

Environmental Audits

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development pursuant to the answer of 26 October 2004, Official Report, column 1138W, if he will publish the 2004 environmental audits. [194840]

Hilary Benn: The audit was commissioned by Pacific Rim Palm Oil and not by DFID. It is therefore a matter for the management of Pacific Rim Palm Oil to decide whether to publish this report.

Palestinian Authority

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment he has made of progress in improving financial transparency and accountability within the Palestinian Authority. [195906]

Hilary Benn: Substantial progress has been made since 2002 in improving the transparency and accountability of the Palestinian Authority's (PA) financial management systems. This has largely been driven by the Palestinian Finance Minister with donor encouragement.

A World Bank country financial accountability assessment completed in 2004 endorsed the major improvements made. It also identified key actions needed to further improve the systems. The World Bank public financial management reform trust fund has encouraged further financial reform. Disbursement of funding is conditional on the PA's achievement of agreed benchmarks, including on financial control management, auditing, and procurement.

St. Helena

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent discussions he has had with representatives of St. Helena on the improvement of transport facilities to and from the island. [195373]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: I have discussed this issue on a number of occasions this year with representatives of St. Helena, including the former Governor and island Councillors. In addition, DFID staff and their counterparts in St. Helena are in daily contact regarding ongoing work to review future options for maintaining access to and from the island after the present ship is withdrawn from service. I expect to consider a full report on this shortly.

Turkey

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what payments were made to Turkey in each of the last three years; for what purpose this money was paid; and if he will make a statement. [195585]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: The following table sets out total British Government bilateral aid to Turkey.

£000

Activity	2001-02	2002-03	2003-04
Ankara Gas Project	2,845	2,069	1,866
Humanitarian Assistance	7	—	—
FCO Drugs and Crime Fund	648	231	210
Total	3,140	2,300	2,076

The Ankara Gas Project represents the remaining contractual obligation to the Exports Credit Guarantee Department under the now defunct Aid and Trade Provision scheme (ATP). The project, which converted Ankara to natural gas usage, was completed in 1993; it was undertaken on commercial, but low-interest terms. DFID involvement under ATP was to fund the difference between commercial interest rates and the soft rate paid by the Turkish authorities. This was a 20-year arrangement and final interest payments will fall due in 2008.

The Foreign and Commonwealth Office also provides assistance under its Drugs and Crime Fund to assist local law enforcement agencies to combat the heroin trade in Turkey.

In addition, the UK share of EC aid to Turkey was:

Calendar year	£ million

2002	17
2003	19

This assistance was mainly targeted at support for Turkey's eventual accession to the EU.

Vietnam

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will make a statement on the work of his Department in Vietnam; and what relationship his Department has with the Government of Vietnam. [195549]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: The Vietnam Country Assistance Plan sets out the Department's priorities in Vietnam for the next two-three years: to promote the efficient, effective and equitable use of public financial resources; strengthen the Government's efforts to achieve development which benefits all social groups, and improve the accountability of Government to its citizens; to support economic transition from a planned to a market economy; and to promote greater effectiveness of the entire international development effort.

DFID will contribute £20 million in poverty reduction budget support to the Government of Vietnam for the Poverty Reduction Strategy Credit (PRSC 3) in 2004. The PRSC supports a range of reforms across the areas of economic reform, governance and social sectors. DFID continues to support public financial management reform and the findings of a recent public expenditure review indicate concrete progress towards improving public financial management within the Government of Vietnam. To help combat corruption and waste in public resource management, DFID has provided technical training in performance auditing and planning and investment inspection. DFID has also helped to set up links between the National Assembly and UK Parliament, and our support to the National Assembly to strengthen its oversight function has helped increase the accountability of the Government.

Regarding World Trade Organisation (WTO) accession, DFID has provided negotiation skills training to key officials, and supported analytical work to assist the Government understand the various accession options and their possible impacts on the poor. The Government of Vietnam's agreement with the European Union at the Asia/Europe meeting in October is a significant step towards Vietnam's goal of acceding to the WTO in 2005.

DFID continues to play a strong role in prima education with a new professional competen framework that set standards for a more mode teaching force now being trialled. DFID has al

DFID enjoys a very constructive dialogue with Government of Vietnam on development issues as p

Water Supplies

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of S for International Development what his policy is water utility companies seeking prepayment for w supplies in developing countries. [19

Hilary Benn: Very few developing countries h chosen to implement prepayment mechanisms for w
(South Africa being a notable exception), though m have done so for electricity and mobile pho Experience so far indicates that these mechani require levels of technical sophistication and social sensitivity which can be very hard to achieve in poorest communities. The Department for International Development (DFID) aims to ensure that the poor benefit from improved water and sanitation services, through subsidies for the poorest if required.

TRANSPORT

Motoring Costs

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what his Department's estimate is of the average cost of motoring per mile including depreciation, fuel and servicing; what sources were used to make the estimate; what factors are included in the estimate; and when the estimate was last revised. [195676]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 2 November 2004]: The estimated average cost of motoring per mile by car in 2002–03 was 39p for cars available to residents of households in Great Britain. This includes household expenditure on purchase, spares, repairs, insurance, taxation, fuel and parking, but excludes depreciation and costs paid by employers.

The Expenditure and Food Survey for 2002–03 was used for estimates of household expenditure on motoring and the National Travel Survey for 2002–03 was used for estimates of mileage by car drivers for personal travel. The estimate was produced for the purpose of answering this question.

Air Navigation Services

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received on the draft Single European Sky Implementing Rule on a Common Charging Scheme for air navigation services from (a) regional airlines and representative bodies and (b) the general aviation industry and representative bodies; and what assessment he has made of the economic impact of the proposals on the (i) regional airline and (ii) general aviation industry. [195824]

Charlotte Atkins: The Department has received 75 written representations from regional airlines, general aviation and their representative bodies on the draft Single European Sky Implementing Rule for a common Charging Scheme for air navigation services.

The Department has undertaken no formal assessment of the economic impact of the charging proposals as the detail of the Implementing Rule has not yet been finalised.

Air Safety

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how long it has taken to implement air safety recommendations made following each air safety incident since 1997. [195887]

Charlotte Atkins: The Air Accidents Investigation Branch (AAIB) makes safety recommendations to a wide range of organisations including the UK Civil Aviation Authority (CAA), overseas regulatory bodies, the new European Aviation Safety Agency, and aircraft and engine manufacturers.

The CAA publishes its responses to relevant AAIB recommendations by means of a FACTOR (Follow-up Action on Occurrence Report), and progress on implementation is recorded in an annual Progress Report. Since 2000, the CAA Annual Progress Reports have also included information on recommendations made to other bodies, though information on these is less detailed. The progress reports are available on the CAA website.

In the Annual Progress Report, recommendations addressed to the CAA will be classified as "open" or "closed". "Closed" indicates that all actions judged appropriate by the CAA have been completed or that the recommendation was not accepted by the CAA, and "open" indicates that action is on-going. In some instances further action may still be being progressed on closed recommendations by organisations outside the jurisdiction of the CAA. In these cases the CAA will continue to monitor progress as part of its normal regulatory activity.

Since 1 January 1997 the AAIB has made a total of 537 recommendations, of which 260 have been made to the CAA. Of the 235 recommendations accepted or partially accepted by the CAA, 34 remain open as at 3 November 2004. These include one from 2000, two from 2001, two from 2002, 20 from 2003 and nine from 2004. The timescales for implementation of accepted recommendations by the CAA vary considerably, from immediate action to a number of years, depending upon the impact upon safety and any requirements for further research.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) whether he has (a) contacted and (b) been contacted by (i) the European Aviation Safety Agency and (ii) other European certification agencies regarding failures in the winch manufactured by Hydrotechnics and used by the Aerophile Aerostat in the past five years; [196546]

(2) what representations he has (a) made to and (b) had from (i) the European Aviation Safety Agency and (ii) other European certification agencies concerning failures in any part of the Aerophile Aerostat in the past five years. [196548]

Charlotte Atkins: In the UK, aerostats (captive balloons) were exempt from any requirement for airworthiness certification prior to 28 September 2003, as explained in the answer of 6 October 2003, Official Report, columns 1057- 60W, given to the hon. Member. There was no reason for communications with any European certification body prior to that date.

Since 28 September 2003, neither the Government nor the Civil Aviation Authority has had contacts with EASA or other European certification agencies regarding any failures in any part of the Aerophile Aerostat.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what powers he has to revoke licences for airworthiness certificates for aerostats currently in operation in the UK whose certification came through Grandfather rights; [196547]

(2) what account the certifying authority takes of a track record of a proven aerostat system when considering applications for certification; [196550]

(3) which organisation is responsible for administering the process of aircraft type certification for applications made in respect of UK manufactured products; and which organisation makes the final decision on whether specific type certification should be granted in respect of an application from a UK manufacturer; [196551]

(4) what applications for type certifications (a) have been made, (b) are pending and (c) have been granted in respect of tethered gas balloons manufactured in the UK; [196552]

(5) whether the organisation responsible for processing the aircraft type certification is required to carry out technical studies of (a) the winch apparatus and (b) other components of the Aerostat system; and whether it is (i) entitled and (ii) otherwise permitted to accept third party attestations regarding such components from responsible bodies for the purposes of processing such certifications; [196553]

(6) whether he has ascertained from the European Aviation Safety Agency whether the Health and Safety Executive is deemed to be a responsible body for the purposes of safety accreditation such that its certification of winch apparatus may be deemed sufficient for the purposes of aircraft type certification; [196554]

(7) whether the Health and Safety Executive is deemed by the Civil Aviation Authority to be a responsible body for the purposes of safety accreditation of the winch apparatus forming part of an Aerostat system such that its certification may be deemed sufficient for the purposes of aircraft type certification; [196555]

(8) what steps Lindstrand Technologies Limited of Oswestry, Shropshire, should take in order to acquire the necessary certification allowing the sale of their HiFlyer Aerostat in (a) the UK and (b) the EU; [196556]

(9) what formal certification of specification has been promulgated for tethered gas balloons (aerostats); on what date it was promulgated; and by which organisation. [196654]

Charlotte Atkins: The historical background to the certification of aerostats (also known as gas balloons) is set out at length in the answer of 29 September 2003, Official Report, 6 October 2003 columns 1057–60W given to the hon. Member. This answer outlines the changes to the treatment of such aircraft that were brought about by EC Regulation 1592/2002 on common rules in the field of civil aviation and establishing a European Aviation Safety Agency (EASA) and related provisions for grandfather rights and transitional arrangements. EASA took up its certification responsibilities on 28 September 2003 and the necessary Commission Regulations detailing how these responsibilities are implemented are set down in Commission Regulations No. 1702/2003 and 2042/2003.

Article 10(1) of EC Regulation 1592/2002 provides that member states may react immediately to a safety problem which involves a product subject to the provisions of that regulation; this would cover the revocation of a Certificate of Airworthiness for aerostats currently in operation in the UK whose certification came through grandfather rights.

Prior to 28 September 2003, the CAA were responsible for both administering the process of aircraft type certification for UK products and made the final decision on granting the certification. Since that date, with some minor exceptions, these have been the responsibility of EASA.

The only application to date for type certification for a UK manufactured tethered gas balloon has been for the Lindstrand HiFlyer (also known as the HiFlyer Aerostat) and was made on 9 September 2003. It is therefore subject to transitional arrangements whereby the UK Civil Aviation Authority (CAA) has continued to carry out the necessary certification exercise, which involves satisfying itself that the aircraft meets the applicable safety standards; its compliance findings would be deemed to have been made by the agency. The sale of this product in either the UK or the EU can be achieved by either continuing with and completing the current certification exercise through the CAA or by making a new application directly to EASA. The latter would also be likely to involve the CAA being asked to conduct the detailed certification work on behalf of the agency.

Under the procedures which the CAA is currently following for certifying the HiFlyer, the authority is required to satisfy itself that both the winch apparatus and all other components of a tethered gas balloon/aerostat meet applicable safety standards. This requires specific work to be carried out to show that compliance with the requirements is achieved. If the aerostat had a proven positive track record prior to the application the CAA will note it, but it will not defray any compliance showing. If the proven track record is adverse, the CAA will assure itself during the process that the designer is addressing the issues.

The formal certification specifications and processes have not yet been formally adopted and published by EASA. On 27 February 2003, the European Commission, through the auspices of the Central JAA, promulgated for comment a draft of a proposed certification specification and the CAA has been using these, in consultation with the agency, in order to progress the work on the HiFlyer.

The draft certification processes provide that use can be made of third part attestations such as "expert body" accreditations of winches and ground equipments, but the agency has not yet defined how particular organisations should be accepted as "expert bodies". For this reason, neither the agency nor the CAA has been able to deem formally that the Health and Safety Executive is a responsible body for the purposes of safety accreditation of the winch apparatus forming part of an aerostat system. However, the authority is reviewing the existing HSE accreditation and if satisfied that compliance is shown with safety standards will be able to accept its findings as a suitable third party attestation. There is no obligation to accept such attestations.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what reports he has received from certification agencies (a) in the UK and (b) elsewhere in the world concerning failures with the HiFlyer Aerostat manufactured by Lindstrand Technologies Ltd of Oswestry, Shropshire. [196549]

Charlotte Atkins: None.

British Transport Police

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to make a decision on the capital funding for the British Transport Police for 2005–06; and if he will make a statement. [196493]

Mr. McNulty: Capital funding for the British Transport Police for 2005–06 is under consideration as part of the detailed allocation of the Department's Spending Review 2004 Settlement. Regular meetings have been held between the Department and the BTP to discuss this matter and we expect to be in a position to let the BTP know shortly the sum of their capital funding.

Buses

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the main causes of delay caused to bus services by (a) traffic congestion, (b) in-service mechanical failure and (c) fleet management. [196289]

Charlotte Atkins: Information on the causes of delays to bus services is not collected. However, data on bus mileage lost because of traffic congestion, mechanical problems and staffing problems are collected from bus operators. The results of this survey are published in the quarterly Bus Quality Indicators Bulletin, which is available in the House of Commons Library. In the latest quarter, the percentage losses of mileage for English bus services were 0.4 per cent. (traffic congestion), 0.4 per cent. (mechanical problems) and 0.4 per cent. (staffing problems).

Car Registrations

Mr. McCabe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many suppliers of car registration plates have been registered since January 2003; how many have been subject to investigation due to concerns about their probity; and what action has resulted from such investigations. [195063]

Mr. Jamieson: As of 29 October 2004, there were 30,869 registered businesses operating from 37,466 retail outlets.

The Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency (DVLA) responds to complaints about possible breaches of the regulations by writing to the supplier concerned and also to the appropriate trading standards office. DVLA has appointed three full-time enforcement officers who make follow-up visits where a supplier's procedures are in doubt. Cases where vehicle ringing is suspected are reported to the police.

There have been three prosecutions, all leading to convictions with fines totalling £1,600 plus costs. The police have also issued a number of cautions.

Child Accidents

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many children died in road accidents in the Greater London area during the last 12 months. [193154]

Mr. Jamieson: There were 12 Child (under 16 years of age) road accident fatalities in the Greater London area during 2003, the last full year for which figures are available.

Civil Servants

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the average length of continuous service for civil servants within the Department is. [194400]

Charlotte Atkins: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given on 3 November 2004, Official Report, column 268W, by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office. In addition, the Marine and Coastguard Agency has an average length of service of 8.92 years.

Consultants

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many consultancy firms or companies have been retained by the Department since June 2001; what the projects are for which each has been retained; and what the total is of the fees paid or incurred in each case. [193425]

Charlotte Atkins: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 3 November 2004, Official Report, column 251W given to the hon. Member for Stratford-on-Avon (Mr. Maples)

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much his Department has spent in each year since 2002 on employing external consultants to deal with the press and public relations of his Department; and if he will make a statement. [195450]

Charlotte Atkins: The Department uses Public Relations contractors primarily to promote our THINK! road safety and sustainable travel campaign messages to the public through print and broadcast media. In the current year we are also using a PR contractor to help publicise the benefits to the public of our Transport Direct website, which has been introduced to provide integrated travel information. Our aim is to raise awareness of our safety and travel messages and extend the reach of public service campaigns through features and promotions. Costs in financial years 2002–03 and 2003–04 were £496,004 and £347,666 respectively.

Crossrail

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will meet the Romford Crossrail Action Group to discuss concerns about Crossrail. [196174]

Mr. McNulty: Ministers have no current plans to meet the Romford Crossrail Action Group. Cross London Rail Links Ltd. (CLRLL) have undertaken two separate rounds of consultation on the Crossrail scheme, providing the opportunity for interested parties to register their views. In the course of their consultation, CLRLL have met with the Romford Crossrail Action Group and other concerned local parties on a number of occasions. The Group's views will be considered by CLRLL along with all those received through the consultation.

Departmental Staff

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many full-time equivalent jobs (a) his Department and (b) its executive agencies had in (i) Yorkshire and the Humber and (ii) the City of York in (A) 1997 and (B) the latest year for which figures are available. [191851]

Charlotte Atkins: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given on 25 October 2004, Official Report, column 1053W, by my hon. Friend, the Minister for the Cabinet Office. In addition, the Maritime and Coastguard Agency (MCA) currently has a total of 65 full-time equivalent posts located at its Bridlington, Beverley and satellite offices. MCA does not have offices in the City of York.

In 1997, the work currently undertaken by the MCA was the responsibility of the Marine Safety Agency (MSA) and The Coastguard Agency (TCA). Both agencies merged in April 1998 to form the MCA. Given the existence of the two agencies at that time, we are unable to confirm figures for 1997. However, it is unlikely there has been any significant variation at either of the offices in question since 1997.

Disabled Parking Bays

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions his Department has had with Greater London local authorities on the provision of disabled parking bays. [196535]

Charlotte Atkins: The Department has not held discussions with local authorities specifically on the provision of such bays. Advice has been issued to local authorities in Traffic Advisory leaflet 5/95 on the provision of disabled person's parking bays and officials are available to advise on issues raised by local authorities and others with an interest. Copies of the leaflet have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Generally, The Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984 gives a wide range of powers to local authorities to provide parking places, including designated bays for disabled people. The decision to provide a bay is ultimately for the local authority.

Emissions

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what work has been undertaken to reduce emissions around Heathrow airport. [195202]

Charlotte Atkins: As a condition of the planning permission for Terminal 5, BAA plc is required to produce and keep under review an action plan that sets out how it intends to minimise emissions from Heathrow airport. The "Air Quality Strategy and Action Plan 2001–2006" is available from BAA's website (www.baa.com). The airport also lies within an Air Quality Management Area declared by the London boroughs of Hillingdon and Hounslow and Spelthorne borough council. In accordance with the duties placed upon them by the Environment Act 1995, these authorities are now preparing air quality action plans, identifying the steps that will be taken in pursuit of UK air quality objectives.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to reduce carbon dioxide emissions from road traffic. [196809]

Mr. Jamieson: The Transport White Paper ("The Future of Transport: a network for 2030"), published in July 2004 and available via the Department for Transport's website, summarised in some detail the main steps the Government is taking to reduce emissions of carbon dioxide from road transport. The review of the climate change programme, on which the Government is due to publish a consultation document very shortly, will consider the scope for additional measures to reduce carbon dioxide emissions from the transport sector and other sectors.

Ferry Services

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those ferry services operating within UK domestic waters for which onshore ticketing (a) is mandatory and (b) is to become mandatory. [194365]

Mr. Jamieson: Ticketing arrangements are a matter for commercial decision and there are no ferry services operating within UK domestic waters for which onshore ticketing is mandatory. However, improvements to the security of some domestic ferry services have been sought by my Department since March 2003. The introduction of onshore ticketing is, in some cases, part of the response to the need for such improvement. No decision has been taken on future legal requirements.

Government Powers

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what powers he can seek to exercise with EU agreement to prevent the transportation of commercial cargoes within the territorial waters of EU member states. [196431]

Mr. Jamieson: Agreement by EU institutions is not relevant to the exercise of powers of the Secretary of State in relation to the territorial waters of EU Member States. We would not wish to intervene in the waters of other Member States, and the position as regards those of the United Kingdom is set out in my answer of 19 October to the hon. Gentleman's earlier question Official Report, column 608W.

Noise (Environmental Pollution)

Brian White: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which agencies are responsible for monitoring noise and environmental pollution at motorway service stations. [195604

Mr. Jamieson: Motorway service areas are operated privately. The local planning authority, who in genera will have approved the development at a site, i responsible for monitoring noise and environmenta pollution at an individual service area. The Environment Agency may monitor the releases to foul sewer or surface waters from an MSA, depending on the size of the releases.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies have been undertaken to determine the noise effects of mixed mode runway operation at Heathrow. [195097]

Charlotte Atkins: Analysis of the noise impacts of a variety of possible mixed mode scenarios is set out in a supporting document to "The Future of Air Transport" White Paper entitled "ERCD Report 0308: Revised Future Aircraft Noise Exposure Estimates for UK Airports". This is available from DfT's website (www.dft.gov.uk). Further analysis of the potential for mixed mode operations at Heathrow is being taken forward as part of the Project for the Sustainable Development of Heathrow. "The Future of Air Transport" makes clear that further development of Heathrow will only be considered on the basis that it results in no net increase in the total area of the 57dBA noise contour compared with summer 2002 (an area of 127km^2). It also commits the Government to public consultation ahead of any introduction of mixed mode operations at Heathrow.

Rail Freight

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many staff have been employed to inspect and search rail freight in each year since 2001. [194709]

Mr. McNulty: Security standards for domestic rail freight are set out in the National Railways Security Programme (NRSP) (dated June 2004). This document is issued to Network Rail, TOCs and others (Freight Operating Companies) with direct involvement in railway security. The document details both mandatory and best practice standards for the industry.

International rail freight via the channel tunnel or UK ports is liable to security checks.

The Department does not hold information on the number of staff required to meet these requirements.

Railways

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage change from the 2003 base he anticipates for (a) rail passenger mileage and (b) rail freight mileage by (i) 2008, (ii) 2013, (iii) 2018 and (iv) 2023. [196829]

Mr. McNulty: The SRA in their Strategic Plan 2003 forecast an increase in rail passenger mileage from 2000–01 to 2010–11 of between 25 per cent. and 35 per cent. Copies of this are available in the Libraries of the House. No forecasts of changes in rail freight mileage have been made.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the current level of debt of (a) Network Rail and (b) the Strategic Rail Authority is. [193885]

Mr. McNulty: This information may be found in Network Rail Limited Annual Report and Accounts 2004 and the Strategic Rail Authority Annual Report and Accounts 2003–04, copies of which are available in the Libraries of the House.

Sea Containers

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many sea containers arriving at each British sea port have been (a) inspected and (b) searched in each year since 2001. [194699]

John Healey: I have been asked to reply.

Information is not held in the format requested. A breakdown could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Strategic Rail Authority

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much he expects the Strategic Rail Authority to have cost from its inception to its abolition. [186789]

Mr. Darling: It is estimated that the Strategic Rail Authority and its subsidiary organisation will have incurred about £237 million of running costs between its establishment on 1 February 2001 and its winding up.

Transport White Paper

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has (a) to issue additional guidance and (b) to amend the guidelines for the implementation of quality contracts document following the 2004 Transport White Paper. [196290]

Charlotte Atkins: The draft guidance which the Department issued for consultation in June will be updated to take account of matters raised in the "Future of Transport" White Paper so far as they can be achieved without new primary legislation.

"The Future of Rail" put forward a proposal to make it easier for Passenger Transport Executives to create quality contracts, where this is part of a strategy which involves replacing some rail services with bus services. This requires primary legislation amending the Transport Act 2000. The guidance will be further amended in the event of such legislation being enacted.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many vehicles are licensed in each of the vehicle excise duty bands; and what the total revenue from each band was in the last period for which figures are available. [195346]

Charlotte Atkins: The information requested is as follows:

Vehicle Category	Number of Vehicles	Vehicle Excise Duty Gross £ million
Private and light goods	28,364,279	4,442,725,639
Motorcycles, scooters and mopeds	1,042,148	45,635,309
Public Transport	97,954	29,623,173
Heavy goods	428,906	276,967,418
Others	80,846	12,125,195
Crown and exempt	1,910,859	0
Total	31,924,992	4,817,879,350

Zero-emission Trams

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the potential for tackling climate change from the introduction of zero emission fuel cell powered light trams; and if he will make a statement. [196828]

Mr. Jamieson: The Department for Transport has not made any detailed assessment of the potential for fuel cell powered light trams to tackle climate change. The extent to which such vehicles would deliver carbon savings would depend, among other things, on how the hydrogen for the fuel cell was produced, distributed and stored. The cost of delivering these carbon savings would need to be considered against the costs of delivering similar carbon savings from other sectors. The review of the Government's climate change programme, on which a consultation document is due to be published shortly, will consider the scope for securing additional carbon savings from the transport sector and other sectors.

TREASURY

Accountancy Standards

David Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what regulatory powers are available to the Financial Services Authority to uphold standards in (a) international accountancy and (b) international financial consultancy. [196404]

Mr. Timms: The FSA has no direct powers to uphold standards in international accountancy.

The FSA can take enforcement action against listed issuers who publish annual reports and accounts which breach the listing rule requirements regarding the making of misleading, false or deceptive announcements under listing rule 9.3A.

The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has principal responsibility for oversight of audit. The Government intends to delegate this oversight role to the Professional Oversight Board for Accountancy of the Financial Reporting Council (FRC) early in 2005. The FRC has responsibilities for setting, monitoring and enforcing auditing and accounting standards and overseeing the regulatory activities of the professional accountancy bodies.

With regard to international financial consultancy, unless the activity constitutes a regulated activity under the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000, the FSA has no locus in this area.

Average Earnings

Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the average earnings were of full-time employees in (a) the North Southwark and Bermondsey constituency, (b) the Camberwell and Peckham constituency and (c) the Dulwich and West Norwood constituency in (i) April 1997, (ii) April 2001, (iii) April 2002, (iv) April 2003 and (v) April 2004. [194309]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 28 October 2004]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Simon Hughes, dated 8 November 2004:

As National Statistician I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what the average earnings for full time employees were in (a) the North Southwark and Bermondsey constituency, (b) the Camberwell and Peckham constituency and (c) the Dulwich and West Norwood constituency in (i) April 1997, (ii) April 2001, (iii) April 2002, (iv) April 2003 and (v) April 2004. (194309)

Average earnings are estimated from the Annual Survey of Hours and Earnings (ASHE) and are provided for full-time employees on adult rates of pay whose pay was unaffected by absence during the pay period, by their place of work. This is the standard definition used for ASHE tables. The ASHE does not collect data on the self employed and people who do unpaid work.

I attach a table showing the average gross weekly wage for full time employees in the North Southwark and Bermondsey constituency, the Camberwell and Peckham constituency and the Dulwich and West Norwood constituency for 2001 to 2004.

Data for 1997 is currently only available from a different survey which is discontinuous with the Annual Survey of Hours and Earnings (ASHE). Data from ASHE will not be available until later 2004 following a QA process.

The ASHE, carried out in April of each year, is the most comprehensive source of earnings information in the United Kingdom. It is a one per cent sample of all employees who are members of pay-as-you-earn (PAYE) schemes, but because of its sampling frame, it has difficulty capturing data on people with very low pay. It is therefore likely to under-represent relatively low paid staff earning below the tax threshold.

The Annual Survey of Hours and Earnings publication criteria ensures that all estimates are undisclosive. A number of estimates have been removed from the published tables for these reasons.

Notes:

Data for 1997 is currently only available from a different survey which is discontinuous with the Annual Survey of Hours and Earnings (ASHE). Data from ASHE will not be available until later 2004 following a QA process.

The table provides data on the average gross weekly earnings for full time employees on adult rates of pay whose pay for the pay period was unaffected by absence, who worked in North Southwark and Bermondsey, Camberwell and Peckham and Dulwich or West Norwood, for the years 2001 to 2004.

The Annual Survey of Hours and Earnings, (ASHE), carried out in April of each year, is the most comprehensive source of earnings information in the United Kingdom. It is a one per cent sample of all employees who are members of pay-as-you-earn (PAYE) schemes. The ASHE replaces the New Earnings Survey (NES) from October 2004. The main difference between the ASHE and NES being that estimates are weighted to population totals from the Labour Force Survey.

Gross weekly earnings for Adult Full-Time Employees whose pay for the survey period was not affected by absence.

ASHE results for 2004 have been produced on 2 separate basis. Firstly a similar basis to 2003 for comparison purposes labelled as 2004exc and also including a range of new supplementary surveys designed to improve the coverage labelled 2004inc, which is our best estimates of the level of earnings in 2004.

Keith Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the latest figures are for average earnings of (a) women and (b) men in the UK. [196018]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Keith Vaz, dated 8 November 2004:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question what the latest figures are for average earnings of (a) women and (b) men in the UK. (196018).

Average earnings are estimated from the Annual Survey of Hours and Earnings and are provided for full-time employees on adult rates of pay whose pay was unaffected by absence during the pay period, by their place of work. This is the standard definition used for Annual Survey of Hours and Earnings tables. The survey does not collect data on the self-employed and people who do unpaid work.

The median gross weekly earnings in 2004 for women was £358.0 and £462.0 for men. The mean gross weekly earnings in 2004 for women was £420.2 and £556.8 for men.

This data is available on the statistics web site: http://www.statistics.gov.uk/STATBASE/Product.asp?vlnk = 13101.

The Annual Survey of Hours and Earnings, carried out in April of each year, is the most comprehensive source of earnings information in the United Kingdom. It is a one per cent sample of all employees who are members of pay-as-you-earn schemes, but because of its sampling frame, it has difficulty capturing data on people with very low pay. The Annual Survey of Hours and Earnings publication criteria ensures that all estimates are undisclosive. A number of estimates have been removed from the published tables for these reasons.

Cancer Statistics

Tom Cox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) men and (b) women died of cancer in England and Wales in the last 12 months. [195926]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 8 November 2004:

As National Statistician I have been asked to reply to your recent question asking how many (a) men and (b) women died of cancer in England and Wales in the last 12 months. (195926)

The latest year for which data are available is 2003. Figures on the numbers of deaths due to cancer are shown in the table below for that year.

Number of deaths where the underlying cause of death was cancer[1] by sex in England and Wales, 2003[2]

	All ages	Aged 15 and over
(a) Males	70,814	70,663
(b) Females	65,141	65,010

[1] The cause of death was defined using the International Classification of Diseases, Tenth Revision (ICD-10) codes C00-C97.

[2] Number of deaths occurring in the calendar year.

Data Protection

Michael Fabricant: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what procedures are in place (a) to check the criminal records of civil servants in his Department and agencies responsible to his Department, including the Inland Revenue and Customs and Excise, who have access to computer databases containing confidential information on the public and (b) to ensure that there can be no improper use of computer databases containing confidential information on the public; and if he will make a statement. [194597]

Mr. Timms: The Chancellor's Departments and agencies have systems in place to ensure that appropriate character and security checks are carried out prior to unconditional offers of employment being made. Security clearance procedures are carried out in line with Cabinet Office guidance and reviewed at regular intervals. All staff are made aware of their obligation to maintain the confidentiality of data and information and that any misuse of departmental systems, or failure to follow established security procedures or policies, may lead to disciplinary action. Procedures are in place for serving staff to report any convictions.

Departmental IT

Brian White: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the Department's (a) implemented and (b) planned computer systems use open source software; and what plans are in place to raise this level. [195668]

Mr. Timms: The use of open source software is below1 per cent. in both implemented and planned computer systems. Treasury, Customs and Revenue, follow the Government's published policy, considering open source solutions alongside proprietary ones in IT procurements, and awarding contracts on a value for money basis. The policy can be viewed at the UK Govtalk website.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many agency temporary staff have been working for the Department in each of the last five years, excluding those working for agencies for which no data is kept centrally. [196050]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 4 November 2004]: The Chancellor's Departments do not keep central records of agency staff employed; only staff on the Departments' payrolls are recorded.

The Chancellor's Departments use agency staff where this is the most cost-effective way of filling a vacancy in the short-term.

Economically Inactive People

Mr. Wills: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent estimate he has made of the number of economically inactive (a) males and (b) females aged (i) 40 to 49 and (ii) 50 to 59; and what estimate he has made of the number of economically inactive males aged 60 to 65. [196032]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Colin Mowl to Mr. Michael Wills, dated 8 November 2004:

The National Statistician has been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question about economic inactivity. (196032)

The attached table gives the latest estimates of the number of economically inactive people by age and gender resident in the United Kingdom for the three months ending August 2004.

These estimates from the Labour Force Survey are, as with any sample survey, subject to sampling variability.

ONS: Labour Force Survey.

David Davis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people were unemployed in Haltemprice and Howden in (a) the last month for which figures are available and (b) each of the preceding 12 months. [194961]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. David Davis, dated 8 November 2004:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question about unemployment. (194961)

Estimates from the Labour Force Survey for the twelve-month period ending in February 2003 show that there were 1,000 residents aged 16 and over in the Haltemprice and Howden Parliamentary Constituency who were unemployed. The corresponding figure for the twelve-month period ending in February 2002 was also 1,000.

The unemployment estimates are based on small sample sizes and are therefore subject to a high degree of sampling variability. They should therefore be treated with caution.

The Office for National Statistics also compiles statistics of those claiming Jobseeker's Allowance for local areas including Parliamentary Constituencies. The attached table gives the number of people resident in the Haltemprice and Howden Parliamentary Constituency claiming Jobseeker's Allowance benefits for September 2004 and each of the preceding 12 months. The data are not seasonally adjusted.

Economic Statistics

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many full-time equivalent jobs (a) his Department and (b) its Executive agencies had in (i) Yorkshire and the Humber and (ii) the City of York in (A) 1997 and (B) the latest year for which figures are available. [191853]

Mr. Timms: The number of full-time equivalent jobs in the Debt Management Office and the Office of Government Commerce in Yorkshire and the Humber is published in "Civil Service Statistics" which is available in the Library, and at www.civil-service.gov.uk/statistics.

The number of full-time equivalent jobs in the Debt Management Office and the Office of Government Commerce in the City of York can be found in the following table.

Department/agency	1997	Current
Debt Management Office	0	0
Office of Government Commerce	n/a	1

For all other Chancellor's Departments, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 25 October 2004, Official Report, column 1053W.

Tony Lloyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many jobs were lost in (a) Manchester Central constituency, (b) the City of Manchester, (c) Greater Manchester and (d) the North West in each of the last 10 years. [195168]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 1 November 2004]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Tony Lloyd, dated 8 November 2004:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question about jobs lost in Manchester Central, City of Manchester, Greater Manchester and the North West. (195168)

While statistics of jobs lost are not available explicitly, statistics from surveys enable comparisons to be made of net changes in numbers of jobs from year to year.

The attached table shows the information available. The latest year available is 2002. Data comparable to this are available back to 1995.

Number of employee jobs[1] with workplace in Manchester Central, City of Manchester, Greater Manchester and North West—1995 to 2002

Fair trade

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether it is his policy to ensure that hospitality within his Department is sourced from fair trade producers wherever possible within the boundaries set by the public procurement rules. [197057]

Mr. Timms: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow) on 8 December 2003, Official Report, column 335W.

GDP (Manufacturing)

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of gross domestic product was comprised of the manufacturing sector in (a) 1997 and (b) the last year for which figures are available. [197006]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Colin Mowl to Mr. Eric Illsley, dated 8 November 2004:

The National Statistician has been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question concerning what percentage of gross domestic product was comprised of the manufacturing sector in (a) 1997 and (b) the last year for which figures are available. I am replying in his absence. (197006)

The manufacturing sector comprised 21.2 per cent. of gross value added (GVA) in 1997. The latest year for which fully reconciled figures are available is 2002, when manufacturing comprised 15.9 per cent. of GVA.

The contribution of industries to the economy is normally shown by their contribution to GVA. The difference between GVA and gross domestic product is taxes less subsidies on products (e.g. VAT, excise duties) which cannot be allocated across industries.

Gershon Review

Kate Hoey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much his Department spent on management consultants employed in connection with the Gershon Review. [195835]

Mr. Boateng: The Efficiency Review Team, led by Sir Peter Gershon, drew on a wide range of experience and expertise from both the public and private sectors and identified efficiency savings of over £20 billion. A number of management consultants provided advice during the Review, many of whom were made available to Sir Peter's team at no charge. A number of consultants' services were paid for at a cost of approximately £595,000 for the 11-month period of the Review.

Gun Deaths

Keith Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people in the UK have died from gunshot wounds in each of the last 10 years. [196007]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Keith Vaz, dated 8 November 2004:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many people in the UK have died from gunshot wounds in each of the last 10 years. (196007)

The most recently available information is for deaths in 2003. Figures for deaths from firearms are shown in the table below for the calendar years 1994 to 2003.

Number of deaths from firearms injury[1], United Kingdom, 1994 to 2003[2]

	Number
1994	341
1995	358
1996	254
1997	201

1999	210
2000	204
2001	167
2002	169
2003	163

[1] Cause of death was defined using the International Classification of Diseases, Ninth Revision (ICD-9) codes E922, E955.0-E955.4, E965.0-E965.4, E985.0-E985.4 and E970 from 1994 to 2000 and the International Classification of Diseases, Tenth Revision (ICD-10) codes W32-W34, X72-X74, X93-X95, Y22-Y24 and Y35.0 from 2001 onwards.

[2] Data for England and Wales are for deaths occurring in the calendar year (which were registered before the release of the routine annual publication). Data for Scotland and Northern Ireland are for deaths registered in the calendar year.

Household Incomes

Mr. Wills: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when data will be available for the number of Households Below Average Income in each ward in each constituency. [196372]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Colin Mowl to Mr. Michael Wills, dated 8 November 2004:

The National Statistician has been asked to reply to your recent question asking when data will be available for the number of Households Below Average Income in each ward in each constituency. I am replying in his absence. (196372).

Estimates for income by constituency are not available but ONS have recently published experimental ward-based average household income estimates (although these do not provide an income distribution within the ward). They cover England and Wales for 1998/99. These estimates have been developed specifically for small areas where traditional survey methods do not capture sufficient data. They have been produced using a modelling approach that enables survey data to be combined with Census and administrative data to estimate at the small area level. We advise against combining the ward level estimates to constituencies or other higher levels. The best estimates for these higher levels may require different methods or statistical models.

These model-based estimates are of a different nature from standard survey estimates because they are dependent upon correctly specifying the relationship between weekly household income and the census/administrative information. The main limitation of estimates for small areas, either those estimated directly from responses to surveys or model-based, is that they are subject to variability. We have also produced the confidence intervals associated with the model-based estimates in order to make the accuracy of the estimates clear.

These estimates are described in more detail on the National Statistics website at: http://neighbourhood.statistics.gov.uk/ShowMetaData.asp?tn = Product&id = 5060 and are available at http://neighbourhood.statistics.gov.uk/NoHSubject.asp?SID = 3BAB80A42E8941369E910AE3325975A9&B = True&E = 4,0#4,0

We are doing research into developing other estimates of income distribution for small areas.

DWP's annual publication Households Below Average Income (HBAI) is sourced from the Family Resources Survey (FRS), and gives information on the location of individuals on the income distribution.

The publication presents results covering Great Britain for children, working-age adults pensioners, and all individuals in separate chapters but due to small sample sizes only shows results by geographic area disaggregated by Government Office Region. One set of tables presented in the publication show the proportion of individuals that fall below various low income thresholds. The current FRS series spans the years 1994/5—2002/03. The next publication showing results for 2003/04 is scheduled for March 2005.

Imported Primates

Mr. Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many illegally imported primates were seized by HM Customs and Excise in the last five years, broken down by species. [197044]

John Healey: Customs has made the following seizures of imported primates in each of the past five years:

Item seized	Number	Common name	Latin name
1999
Live animals	6	Mona monkeys	Cercopithecus mona
Live animals	6	Spot nosed monkeys	Cercopithecus Spp

Monkey skulls	4	Not known	Cercopithecus Spp
Monkey skull	1	Not known	Not known

This information is included in the seizures report that Customs provide to the CITES Secretariat for publication.

Customs has also made a number of seizures under its enforcement responsibilities regarding products of animal origin, and some of these may have included meat from primates.

Influenza

David Davis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people aged 65 years or over died of influenza in (a) the East Riding of Yorkshire, (b) Hull and (c) England in each year since 2001. [194979]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. David Davis, dated 8 November 2004:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many people aged 65 years or over have died of influenza in (a) East Riding of Yorkshire, (b) Hull, (c) the UK in each year since 2001. (194979)

Figures for East Riding of Yorkshire and Kingston upon Hull, (City of) unitary authorities and the United Kingdom are provided in the table.

Numbers of deaths from influenza[1], 2001 to 2003[2] for East Riding of Yorkshire and Kingston upon Hull, (City of) unitary authorities and the United Kingdom[3]

[2] Figures are for deaths occurring in each calendar year, except for data for Scotland and Northern Ireland included in the United Kingdom totals. These are deaths registered in each calendar year.

[3] Deaths of usual residents of these areas.

[4] Fewer than five deaths.

Job Creation (Dagenham)

Jon Cruddas: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many jobs have been created in the Dagenham constituency since (a) 1997 and (b) 2001. [196453]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Colin Mowl to Mr. Jon Cruddas, dated 8 November 2004:

The National Statistician has been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question about jobs created in the Dagenham constituency. I am replying in his absence. (196453)

While statistics of new jobs created are not available explicitly, statistics from surveys enable comparisons to be made of net changes in numbers of jobs from year to year.

The attached table shows the information requested, relating to jobs in Dagenham for 1997, 2001 and 2002, which is the latest year available.

Oil and Gas (Windfall Tax)

Alan Simpson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will assess the case for a windfall tax on profits accruing to UK gas and oil producers as a result of recent and future oil price increases; and if he will make a statement. [196494]

John Healey: All taxes are kept under review on a Budget by Budget basis. The Government are committed to delivering a tax regime for the North Sea which promotes investment and takes a fair share of revenue derived from a national resource.

Older Workers

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to the answer of 7 September 2004, Official Report, column 1195W, on older workers, if he will break down the figures provided by (a) gender and (b) age. [194833]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. David Willetts, dated 8 November 2004:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about older workers broken down by gender and age. (194833)

The attached table gives estimates of the number of people above state pension age in employment and resident in the United Kingdom for the three months ending in May each year from 1992 to 2004.

These estimates from the Labour Force Survey (LFS) are, as with any statistical sample survey, subject to sampling variability.

Pensioners

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many households in England are (a) single occupation with one pensioner, (b) occupied by two pensioners and no other adults and (c) occupied by pensioners only. [195251]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mrs. Caroline Spelman, dated 8 November 2004:

As National Statistician and Registrar General for England and Wales I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many households in England are (a) single occupation with one pensioner, (b) occupied by two pensioners and no other adults and (c) occupied by pensioners only. (195251)

The table shows the number of exclusively pensioner households in England on Census day (29 April 2001), with special attention to one and two pensioner households. The figures have been extracted from Table T08 on the CD supplement to the Census 2001 National Report for England and Wales, which is available in the House of Commons Library.

Press Officers

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many press officers the Department has employed in each of the past five years. [196045]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 4 November 2004]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the right hon. Member for Charnwood (Mr. Dorrell) on 25 October 2004, Official Report, column 1057W.

Royal Lodge, Windsor

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the accommodation consists of at Royal Lodge, Windsor. [193943]

Mr. Timms: The accommodation consists of:

(a) Royal Lodge consisting of the main house including staff accommodation, gardens and grounds of 40.3 hectares including tennis court and the Miniature Welsh Cottage; and within these grounds

(b) Gardener's Cottage;

(c) Chapel Lodge and

(d) No. 6 Lodge Cottages.

Somalia

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Somalian nationals are resident in the UK. [195301]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Ian Gibson, dated 8 November 2004:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about Somalian nationals. (195301)

It is estimated that, for the three months ending in August 2004, there were 60,000 Somalian nationals resident in the United Kingdom.

This estimate from the Labour Force Survey is, as with any statistical sample survey, subject to sampling variability.

Unclaimed Assets

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the value of unclaimed gilts was in each of the last five years. [196108]

Mr. Timms: The following figures have been extracted from the Government Stock register currently maintained by the Bank of England:

The moneys unclaimed in respect of British Government Stock are:

£ million

As at 1 November	Unclaimed redemption moneys	Unclaimed dividend payments	Total unclaimed
2004	23.7	20.9	44.6
2003	22.9	20.4	43.3
2002	33.1	21.1	54.2
2001	24.3	23.0	47.3
2000	24.6	24.8	49.4

Efforts have been, and continue to be, made to reunite unclaimed funds with their rightful recipient.

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on progress on the proposal in the 2004 Budget to apply unclaimed assets for charitable purposes. [196109]

Mr. Timms: We plan to assess and report on progress in this year's PBR.

VAT (Charities)

Mrs. Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on VAT as applied to charities. [197375]

Mr. Gordon Brown: The Government will make a one-off donation to the Band Aid Charitable Trust equivalent to the VAT collected on sales of the new Band Aid record and the Live Aid DVD, so that all of the money will benefit the people that need it most in the poorest African countries.

Working Women

Keith Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in what industry the largest proportion of women in the UK are employed. [196019]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Colin Mowl to Mr. Keith Vaz, dated 8 November 2004:

The National Statistician has been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question about which industry employs the largest proportion of women in the UK. I am replying in his absence. (196019)

The industry grouping with the largest proportion of women in employment is Health and social work. In June 2004, 83 per cent. of the jobs in this area were held by women.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Big Lottery Fund

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will ensure that provision is made by the Big Lottery Fund for the funding of children's play facilities across the country. [196105]

Estelle Morris: We are reforming the lottery to make it more responsive to community needs and more flexible in its delivery. The fund is now consulting on themes, outcomes and suggested priorities, which include play. The Big Lottery Fund will be responsible for designing programmes, identifying the most appropriate means of delivery and selecting projects. We will be discussing with the fund how they can best achieve the spirit of the Government's commitment to play, within the framework of funding priorities.

British Library Music Collection

Ms Atherton: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans she has to require music companies to provide a copy of each CD or DVD that they produce for the British Library collection. [196327]

Estelle Morris: There are no plans to make the deposit of sound recordings a statutory obligation. The existing scheme of voluntary deposit is working well.

Ms Atherton: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what rationale underlies the policy of not requiring music companies to provide a sample copy of each CD or DVD produced for the British Library collection. [196343]

Estelle Morris: DCMS's policy is to support the successful voluntary deposit arrangements that exist between the music industry and the British Library. Under the voluntary scheme 85 per cent. of the total UK output of sound recordings are deposited in the Sound Archive of the British Library.

The voluntary deposit arrangement between the music industry and the British Library is working well.

Children's Play

Paddy Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when she will respond to the Dobson review of children's play; and if she will make a statement. [196363]

Mr. Caborn: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given on 21 October 2004, Official Report, column 821W, to my hon. Friend the Member for Gloucester (Mr. Dhanda).

Departmental Offices

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the cost of (a) decoration and (b) refurbishment of the London office of the Department was in each of the last four years. [196153]

Mr. Caborn: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Llwyd) on 26 March 2004, Official Report, column 1118W. Since that date £26,000 has been spent on redecoration in two of the four buildings occupied by the Department.

Departmental Publications (Accessibility)

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many and what proportion of publications issued by her Department are available in (a) Braille, (b) autoprint, (c) large print and (d) easy read format. [194289]

Mr. Caborn: All DCMS publications are available in disability versions on demand. Additionally, all DCMS publications are on the DCMS website which is available by phone.

Departmental/Lottery Spending

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much (a) departmental and (b) Lottery funding has been spent on (i) sport, (ii) museums, galleries and libraries, (iii) arts, (iv) historic buildings, monuments and sites, (v) the Royal Parks, (vi) tourism, (vii) broadcasting and media, (viii) commemorative services and (ix) administration and research in each year from 1997; how much was unallocated; and if she will make a statement. [194660]

Mr. Caborn: Information on departmental spending in these categories from 1998–99 is available in the departmental report 2004 (Cmd. 6220, pages 67 to 73 refer). Copies of the departmental report are placed in the House of Commons Library and it is also available on the DCMS website. Information on departmental spending in 1997–98 is not available on a comparable basis because of the change to resource accounting.

Tourism and broadcasting/media are not direct beneficiaries of Lottery funding. Information on Lottery spending (i.e. the amount authorised for payment out of the National Lottery Distribution Fund to the distributing bodies for grant payments) for the good causes, including sport, the arts and the national heritage, can be obtained from the National Lottery Distribution Fund Annual Accounts for the years 1997–98 to 2002–03 inclusive. In each year's Accounts, a table headed "Reconciliation of amounts available to distributing bodies" gives the amounts "Authorised for payment to distributing bodies". This equals the amount drawn down (and is equivalent to spending from) the NLDF by the distributors. Copies of the NLDF accounts are available in the House of Commons Library.

The NLDF annual accounts for 2003–04 are currently being audited prior to publication.

Digital Terrestrial Television

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when digital terrestrial television will be available throughout Totnes constituency, with particular reference to (a) Blackawton and (b) Halwell. [196947]

Estelle Morris: Due to the topography of the land and technical constraints on Digital Terrestrial Television (DTT) transmissions from the Beacon Hill transmitter, digital terrestrial services are not predicted to be available to viewers in Blackawton and Halwell before Switchover.

The Government are committed to ensuring that at Switchover everyone who can currently receive the main public service broadcasting channels on analogue will be able to do so on digital systems.

No firm dates for Switchover have been set, but current discussions suggest that Switchover could start to happen as early as 2007 and be completed by 2012.

English Heritage

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much English Heritage spent on skills and education projects in each year from 1997; and if she will make a statement. [194664]

Mr. Caborn: Since 1997, English Heritage has spent the following on education projects:

English Heritage—money spent on education projects since 1997

	£ million
1997–98	1,150,000
1998–99	1,100,000
1999–2000	1,150,000
2000–01	1,222,000
2001–02	1,210,000
2002–03	1,145,000
2003–04	1,343,000

English Heritage does not undertake specific skills projects, therefore a similar breakdown cannot be provided. They take a strategic approach towards skills development, co-ordinating action across industry, education, other public bodies and government. Since 1997 they have spent £300,000 on supporting the work of the National Heritage Training Group and conducting research into the condition of the traditional building sector, plus £474,000 on supporting parks, gardens and landscape maintenance skills.

Fair Trade

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State fo Culture, Media and Sport if she will make it her policy to ensure that all hospitality within her Department i sourced from Fair Trade producers wherever possibl within the boundaries set by the public procuremen rules. [196655

Mr. Caborn: It is already the policy in DCMS for al catering to make use of Fair Trade goods and provision wherever possible.

Free Television Licences

Jon Cruddas: To ask the Secretary of State fo Culture, Media and Sport how many households i Dagenham receive the free television licence for th over-75s. [196454

Estelle Morris: TV Licensing, who administer fre television licences for people aged 75 or over as agent for the BBC, are not able to provide geographica breakdowns of the number of free licences issued However, 2001 Census data indicate that approximatel 6,600 people living in the Dagenham constituency ar aged 75 or over.

Gambling

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State fo Culture, Media and Sport where she expects th proposed new casinos to be located, broken down b region. [19466

Mr. Caborn [holding answer 1 November 2004]: When the Gambling Bill is implemented it will be for operators to decide where to site new casino premises, provided that they have the necessary operating licences, premises licences and planning permission.

Heritage Lottery Fund

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what her policy is in relation to the provision of funds by the Heritage Lottery Fund for heritage properties overseas that have a particular British connection and relevance. [196107]

Mr. Caborn: Decisions on the provision of funds by the Heritage Lottery Fund (HLF) are a matter for the board of trustees who are independent of Government: it is not open to Ministers to intervene in these decisions. The HLF only supports projects that relate to the national, regional or local heritage of the UK.

Licensing Act

Claire Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when she expects the Licensing Act 2003 to be fully implemented; and if she will make a statement on progress with implementation. [196576]

Mr. Caborn: We are making good progress with the implementation of the Licensing Act 2003. On 7 July, the Secretary of State announced that the first appointed day, when the transitional period begins, would be 7 February 2005, and that full implementation of the 2003 Act was therefore expected for November 2005. Draft regulations, which provide details on how the new licensing system will operate, are currently the subject of a public consultation that ends on 10 November. We announced a separate consultation with regard to the draft on Thursday 4 November.

Lottery Funding (Scotland)

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what her estimate is of the displacement of lottery funding to Scotland that would be consequent on a successful London bid for the 2012 Olympics. [195265]

Tessa Jowell: In the event of a successful bid, new Olympic Lottery games may lead to a sales diversion from core national lottery games. This, and the possible change to percentage shares after 2009 should the full lottery contribution towards the games be required, could result in a loss of income to the existing good causes of around 5 per cent. before 2009 and up to 12 per cent. between 2009/2012. This displacement of funding will occur at the same level for Scotland as for the rest of the country.

Lottery Games

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment she has made of the likely overall impact of the new London Olympic lottery game on the existing national lottery. [195264]

Tessa Jowell: It is estimated that sales diversion to Olympic lottery games, which will only be introduced if the Olympic bid is successful, will reduce income to the existing good causes by about 5 per cent. overall. The effect is likely to be lower in the early years, and to increase as the games approach.

Lotto Terminals

Anne Picking: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many representations have been made to her expressing concern about the process used by Camelot when selecting outlets for lotto terminals; and if she will make a statement. [195923]

Estelle Morris: In the last two years my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received eight representations expressing concern about the selection process used by Camelot when selecting outlets for lotto terminals. Issues concerning national lottery terminals are a matter for the national lottery operator acting under its licence from the National Lottery Commission.

Olympic Games

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will make a statement on financial guarantees the Government has given to the International Olympic Committee with regard to the London Olympic bid. [194170]

Tessa Jowell: In the Applicant Questionnaire, submitted to the International Olympic Committee (IOC) on 15 January 2004 for the first stage of the bid process, the Government confirmed it would be the ultimate guarantor of Olympic funding should there be a shortfall between Olympic costs and revenues.

For the next stage, in the Candidature File, the IOC are seeking detailed guarantees, within that existing Government commitment, which relate to financing the various elements of the Games. They cover the infrastructure, transport, economic shortfall of the OCOG and government related services such as security, medical, customs and immigration. In agreeing these guarantees the Government will be careful to ensure that the commitments made are consistent with the Olympic funding Memorandum of Understanding laid before Parliament as a Command Paper 5867 and further reported to Parliament in a Departmental Minute dated 2 December 2003.

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment she has made of the impact of a successful London Olympic bid on tourism on each (a) country and (b) region of the UK. [194174]

Tessa Jowell: We are assessing the impact of staging a London Olympics on various economic sectors, including on tourism. This does not include an attempt to estimate a breakdown of that impact by UK nation and region.

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what her estimate is of the value to the UK economy of the proposed London Olympics; and whether she has made an assessment of employment generated by the proposed games in each (a) country and (b) region of the UK. [194209]

Tessa Jowell: We are assessing the impact of staging a London Olympics on the economy, but this does not include an attempt to estimate employment generation by UK nation and region.

Sport (Suffolk Schools)

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans her Department has to promote sport in Suffolk schools. [196504]

Mr. Caborn: The Government are investing over £1 billion to transform school sport throughout England. This is delivering an ambitious Public Service Agreement target to increase the percentage of 5 to 16-year-olds who spend a minimum of two hours each week on high quality PE and school sport to 75 per cent. by 2006 and to 85 per cent. by 2008.

As part of this investment the Government are establishing a network of School Sport Partnerships to increase and enhance school sports opportunities for all children in their areas. All maintained primary, special and secondary schools will be in a School Sport Partnership from September 2006. Currently 54 per cent. of schools are in a School Sport Partnership. Suffolk Local Education Authority has four School Sport Partnerships, comprising 23 secondary schools and 76 primary schools.

CABINET OFFICE

Civil Service Pensions

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what the latest figure is for the average length of payment of civil service direct benefit pension. [195720]

Ruth Kelly: Based on the most recent assessment of the Principal Civil Service Pension Scheme carried out by the Scheme Actuary as at 31 March 2003, the average life expectancy for someone retiring at age 60 was 23.2 years (men) and 26.2 years (women).

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

African Union

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the African Union about monitoring of (a) ceasefire violations and (b) breaches of international (i) human rights and (ii) humanitarian law. [196083]

Mr. Mullin: We are in daily contact with the African Union (AU) about their Monitoring mission in Darfur. In recent months my right hon. Friends the Foreign Secretary and the Secretary of State for International Development, have both spoken to the Chair of the AU Commission, Alpha Oumar Konare, and the AU Commissioner for Peace and Security, Said Djinnet. I met with both Mr. Konare and Mr. Djinnet during my visit to Addis Ababa on 26 October.

British Overseas Territories

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list for each British overseas territory, the responsibilities which in England would be those of a central Government Department but which in that territory are exercised by (a) him and (b) the Crown's representative. [195430]

Mr. Rammell: Most of the Overseas Territories enjoy a large degree of internal self-government and control over their own domestic affairs. However, certain reserved powers are retained by the Governor or equivalent (HM the Queen's representative in each Overseas Territory), in order to protect the UK Government's overall responsibility for the good governance of the Overseas Territories and for their defence and external affairs. In general, defence, internal security, external affairs, nationality and administration of the public service and police remain the responsibility of the Governor or equivalent. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary does not exercise direct responsibilities in the territories, but may instruct Governors or their equivalents as to the exercise of many of their functions.

The main responsibilities of the Governor in each territory are as follows:

Anguilla

External affairs; defence; internal security (including the police); offshore finance; the public service.

Bermuda

External affairs; defence (including armed forces); internal security and the police; certain senior appointments.

British Virgin Islands

External affairs; defence; internal security (including the police); the public service.

Cayman Islands

External affairs; internal security (including the police); defence; the public service.

Falkland Islands

External affairs; the public service; (with the Commander British Forces) defence and internal security.

Gibraltar

All matters not specifically allocated to local Ministers; in particular for defence, external affairs and internal security.

Montserrat

External affairs; defence; internal security (including the police); offshore finance; public service.

Pitcairn Islands

External affairs; defence of the Islands; some other broad policy issues (Pitcairn islanders manage their day-to-day internal affairs through the Island Council and the Island Internal Committee).

St. Helena and dependencies

External affairs; defence; internal security; the police; finance; shipping; the public service.

Turks and Caicos Islands

Defence; external affairs; offshore finance; internal security (including the police); management of the public service.

Sovereign Base Areas of Akrotiri and Dhekelia in Cyprus

The Sovereign Base Areas (SBA) are military bases. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has overall responsibility for the Sovereign Base Areas, but day-to-day responsibility for the bases rests with the SBA Administration.

British Antarctic Territory, British Indian Ocean Territory and South Georgia and South Sandwich Islands

In these Territories, most governmental functions are exercisable by the Commissioner or by officers subordinate to the Commissioner. There are no settled populations and, accordingly, there are no local representative institutions.

Commonwealth Countries

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs of which countries the Queen is the head of state. (186895)

Mr. Rammell [Pursuant to the reply, 7 September 2004, Official Report, c. 1060–61W]: There were a number of errors in my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office Mr Mullin's answer of 7 September to the hon. Member, for which I apologise. The correct answer should read as follows:

Her Majesty The Queen is the Sovereign and Head of State of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, Her Majesty's Realms, Her Majesty's Overseas Territories, and Her Majesty's Crown Dependencies.

HM Realms are:

Antigua and Barbuda

Australia

The Bahamas

Barbados

Belize

Canada

Grenada

Jamaica

New Zealand

Papua New Guinea

St Kitts and Nevis

St. Lucia

St. Vincent and the Grenadines

Solomon Islands

Tuvalu

HM Overseas Territories are:

Anguilla

Bermuda

British Antarctic Territory

British Indian Ocean Territory

British Virgin Islands

Cayman Islands

Falkland Islands

Gibraltar

Montserrat

Pitcairn, Henderson, Ducie and Oeno Islands

St Helena and her Dependencies of Ascension Island and Tristan da Cunha

South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands

The Sovereign Base Areas of Akrotiri and Dhekelia on Cyprus

Turks and Caicos Islands

Her Majesty's Crown Dependencies are:

The Isle of Man

The Bailiwick of Jersey

The Bailiwick of Guernsey

Correspondence

Sir Gerald Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will reply to the letter to him dated 1 September from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton, with regard to Pastor D. Lindsay. [195515]

Mr. Mullin: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary replied on 29 October.

Sir Gerald Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will reply to the letter to him dated 23 August from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton, with regard to Ms Saira Ash. [195516]

Mr. Mullin: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary replied on 29 October.

Custodial Sentences (Foreign Jails)

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British citizens are serving custodial sentences in foreign jails, broken down by country. [195802]

Mr. Mullin: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office does not collate the numbers of British Nationals serving custodial sentences overseas. Providing the hon. Member with the requested information could be provided only at disproportionate cost. We do, however, collate annual and quarterly figures for all British Nationals detained who have requested consular assistance, whether they are on remand or in custody. I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bury, North (Mr. Chaytor) on 13 May 2004, Official Report, columns 514–15W.

Departmental IT

Brian White: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of the Department's (a) implemented and (b) planned computer systems use open source software; and what plans are in place to raise this level. [195656]

Mr. Mullin: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO) currently makes no significant use of open source software.

It is the FCO's practice to procure IT on the basis of best value for money. In doing this we are careful not to exclude open source solutions, but we have no specific objective to increase our use of open source software.

Departmental Offices

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the cost of (a) decoration and (b) refurbishment of the London office of the Department was in each of the last four years. [196154]

Mr. Rammell: The cost of decoration and refurbishment of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office's London offices (King Charles Street and the Old Admiralty Building) in each of the last four years is as follows:

	Decorations	Refurbishment
2001	100,368	70,000
2002	68,197	629,000
2003	74,342	583,000
2004	113,000	10,000

Eritrea/Ethiopia

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the Government have taken to ensure that Ethiopia (a) accepts the 2002 World Court ruling regarding its border dispute with Eritrea and (b) withdraws from the occupied town of Badme. [195825]

Mr. Mullin: The UK continues to press Ethiopia to accept the final and binding decision of the Boundary Commission. I raised this most recently with Prime Minister Meles in Addis Ababa on 26 October.

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the governments involved in the Eritrean-Ethiopian border dispute. [195826]

Mr. Mullin: The UK discusses the Ethiopia-Eritrea border dispute with both parties on a regular basis. I raised the issue with Eritrean President Isaias in Asmara on 15 January and most recently with Ethiopian Prime Minister Meles in Addis Ababa on 26 October.

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the (a) UN, (b) EU and (c) African Union regarding the Eritrea-Ethiopia border dispute. [195827]

Mr. Mullin: The UK discusses the Ethiopia-Eritrea border dispute with the EU, UN and the African Union on a regular basis and is actively supporting their efforts to promote a lasting peace. I discussed the issue with UN Special Envoy Lloyd Axworthy in London on 3 November.

India (Brood Mares)

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has discussed with the Indian Government restrictions on the importation of British brood mares into India. [194936]

Alun Michael: I have been asked to reply.

India is only prepared to import breeding horses from countries which have been free from contagious equine metritis (GEM) for at least three years. The UK cannot currently comply with this requirement which goes beyond the Office International des Epizooties (International Organisation for Animal Health) Terrestrial Animal Health Code guidelines on GEM. We have, on a number of occasions, pressed the Indian authorities to accept health assurances for breeding horses in line with OIE guidelines, but without success.

Iraq

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to the answer of 26 October 2004, Official Report, column 1177W, on Iraq, what factors obstructed verification of the 45 minute claim between the start of the US-led administration in Iraq and the publication of (a) the Hutton report and (b) the Butler report. [195793]

Mr. Straw: The validation of human intelligence sources is described in Chapter 5.9 of Lord Butler's report. The report commended SIS for the thoroughness with which it had sought to validate these sources after the war. These matters have been examined during the course of the Butler Review and other inquiries, and covered during debates and statements on Iraq.

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to the answer of 28 October, Official Report, column 1386W, on the Iraq Survey Group Report, whether the intelligence relating to the assertion in the September 2002 dossier that Iraq sought to procure uranium from Africa, which was not shared with the Iraq Survey Group, was shared with Lord Butler of Brockwell's Review Committee. [195967]

Mr. Straw: Yes, as was confirmed in paragraph 503 of Lord Butler's report.

Khartoum University

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent arrests of students at the University of Khartoum; and whether he has interceded on their behalf. [191122]

Mr. Mullin: In September five students from the University of Khartoum, and one from Port Sudan were arrested. All have now been released.

On 9 October, students at the University of Khartoum set fire to the Student Support Fund offices on the university campus in protest at perceived irregularities in the way the fund is run. Sudanese police announced that 37 arrests were made in connection to this incident. As of 11 October, 32 had been released and five were detained pending further investigations.

Our embassy in Khartoum regularly raises the detentions of students and activists with the Government of Sudan.

Overseas Parliaments (English Teaching)

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what projects are undertaken by (a) British embassies and (b) the British Council to offer members of overseas parliaments free lessons to learn the English language; and if he will make a statement. [195707]

Mr. Mullin: Neither the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO), nor the British Council runs centrally-funded programmes to provide free English lessons to overseas parliamentarians. The British Council provides English language training on a repayment basis. Where this is sponsored by other organisations, including FCO posts, it may be free to participants, including parliamentarians. Although central records are not kept, and the following list may not be definitive, these projects have been carried out by the British Council on behalf of the sponsoring bodies indicated:

Country	Details	Sponsor
Bulgaria	15 x 30-hour courses between autumn 2002 and autumn 2004 for MPs and Ministers and occasional courses for parliamentary Members and Deputy Ministers/Ministers	British embassy
Morocco	30 hours for eight Ministers—total 240 hours	British embassy
Romania	540 hours for the presidential administration	UNDP
Sri Lanka	100 hours for parliamentary administrators	UNDP
Ukraine	75 hours for one MP and tuition for four other British embassy members of the Verhovna Rada Committee for European Integration
Georgia	Tuition for over 50 Members of Parliament	British embassy/British Council

Parliamentarians may be nominated for Chevening Fellowships sponsored by the FCO. These courses include an optional opportunity for the Fellows to improve their English, which is free to participants.

Press Releases

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many press releases have been issued by his Department in each month of 2004; and if he will make a statement. [195460]

Mr. Straw: To date the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO) have issued 314 press releases in 2004 on various subjects:

	Number
January	22
February	31
March	21
April	36
May	36
June	33
July	31
August	31
September	34
October	35
November	4

FCO missions overseas issue their own press releases directly to their host country's media. A record of these is not held centrally.

Sudan

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many prisoners of conscience in Sudan, detained for the non-violent expression of their opinions, have been released in the last six months. [194458]

Mr. Mullin: The Sudan Organisation Against Torture (SOAT) estimates that, during the last six months, 139 people have been arrested in Sudan for the non-violent expression of their opinions. Of these, 24 have so far been released.

SOAT is closely monitoring the cases of those who remain in custody. Our embassy in Khartoum makes regular representations to the Government of Sudan on the need for due process in its judicial system and maintains close contact with Sudanese human rights organisations.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps his Department has taken to provide the support necessary for the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights to strengthen its monitoring capacity in Darfur. [196205]

Mr. Mullin: We strongly welcomed the decision by the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights to expand its monitoring mission in Darfur. The UK provided £250,000 for the deployment of the original eight OHCHR monitors to Darfur, and have made clear our willingness to provide support to assist the expansion.

Trinidad and Tobago

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the travel advice for Trinidad and Tobago was last updated. [195958]

Mr. Rammell: The date of the most recent review of all Foreign and Commonwealth Office Travel Advice notices is given at the top of the advice. The Travel Advice for Trinidad and Tobago was last updated on 19 October 2004.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a Minister from his Department last visited Trinidad and Tobago; and what plans he has to visit Trinidad and Tobago. [195959]

Mr. Rammell: I was the last Foreign and Commonwealth Office Minister to visit Trinidad and Tobago in March of this year. It is not our practice to announce visits until they are firm. Because of the unpredictable nature of world events, final decisions on overseas visits are often not possible until very shortly before the day of travel.

My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary met the Foreign Minister of Trinidad and Tobago, the hon. Knowlson Gift, at the UK-Caribbean Forum in London in May this year.

Turkey (Penal Code)

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what his policy is on section 306 of the new Turkish penal code and the new criminal offence of speaking against the national interest, with particular reference to comments in Turkey on (a) the Armenian genocide and (b) the withdrawal of troops from Cyprus, in the context of Turkey's application for accession to the EU; and if he will make a statement. [194850]

Mr. MacShane: Article 306 of the Turkish penal code is about the recruitment of militia against a foreign state. Article 305, however, concerns Turkish citizens acting against national interests in return for material benefits from a foreign individual or organisation. The wording of this article only refers to such national interests as independence, territorial integrity and national security. There is no mention of Cyprus or the Armenian genocide.

The commission, with our support, will monitor implementation of all laws closely to ensure Turkey meets its international legal obligations.

Uzbekistan

Sir Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the US State Department's conclusions in relation to Uzbekistan regarding (a) its absence of democracy and a free press and (b) its use of torture as a routine investigation technique; and if he will make a statement. [195509]

Mr. Straw [holding answer of 4 November 2004]: The US State Department conclusions to which the right hon. Gentleman refers represent the basis upon which the US Secretary of State took the decision in July to withdraw up to $18 million in aid programmes to Uzbekistan. The decision was taken because of Uzbekistan's lack of progress in meeting its commitments to improve its human rights record under the strategic partnership framework agreed in 2002 between Uzbekistan and the US.

The US position is consistent with messages conveyed to the Uzbek Government by the UK and EU partners.

Vietnam

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the work of the British Council in Vietnam. [195550]

Mr. Mullin: The British Council in Vietnam operates in Hanoi and Ho Chi Minh City. It has about 100 staff. Its main activities are English language training, education development, governance, promotion of UK creativity, and of UK education and qualifications, and managing the Chevening Scholarships programme.

The Council has a Memorandum of Understanding with the Vietnamese Education and Training Ministry covering support in education development and advice on teaching English. Demand for its education services is growing rapidly, with Hanoi being one of its fastest-growing teaching centres world-wide. Its information centres provide information on all aspects of UK education, life and culture. It has showcased UK achievements in science and technology through a DNA50 exhibition and work on governance issues through programmes such as journalist training.

It is also engaged in a capacity-building programme for senior Vietnamese officials.

Visas

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many visitors' visas were granted by high commission offices in (a) India, (b) Pakistan and (c) Sri Lanka during the last 12 months. [194139]

Mr. Mullin: For the period from 1 October 2003 until 1 October 2004, the figures are as follows:

	Visit visas issued
India (to include Chennai, Calcutta, Mumbai and New Delhi)	122,732
Pakistan (to include Islamabad and Karachi)	61,128
Sri Lanka (Colombo only)	11,674

NORTHERN IRELAND

Free Transport Scheme

Mr. Gregory Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many journeys on (a) Ulsterbus, (b) Citybus and (c) Northern Ireland Railways were undertaken by senior citizens using the free transport scheme in the year ending 31 December 2003. [196511]

Mr. Spellar: Translink have advised that in the year ending 31 December 2003 the following free journeys were ticketed by senior citizens using the Northern Ireland Concessionary Fares Scheme:

(a) 3,659,599 on Ulsterbus,

(b) 3,596,629 on Citybus, and

(c) 153,859 on Northern Ireland Railways (NIR).

The figures for NIR reflect the fact that new ticketing systems, which record free journeys taken, were progressively introduced on the railway network throughout 2003.

Magilligan-Greencastle Ferry

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland pursuant to the answer of 20 October

2004, Official Report, column 811W, on the Magilligan-Greencastle Ferry, what information he has collated on the sums provided by (a) Limavady borough council and (b) Donegal county council towards operating the Magilligan-Greencastle Ferry Service since its introduction. [196281]

Mr. Spellar: The Magilligan-Greencastle ferry is funded directly by Limavady borough council and Donegal county council. I have passed your query on to the Chief Executive of Limavady borough council.

Paramilitary Criminal Activity

David Burnside: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what his estimate is of the (a) size, (b) scale and (c) range of criminal activities being carried out by (i) the UDA, (ii) the UVF, (iii) PIRA and (iv) INLA; and what action is being taken to stop such activities. [196501]

Mr. Pearson: The Organised Crime Task Force (OCTF) Threat Assessment, which was launched on 11 May 2004, clearly indicated that all Northern Ireland based paramilitary groups remain involved in organised crime, particularly in respect of counterfeiting, drugs, oils fraud, extortion, money laundering, robbery and illegal tobacco.

The IMC reports of 20 April and 4 November also provide a clear assessment of the criminal activities of all paramilitary groups.

The Organised Crime Task Force provides the strategic framework for the law enforcement agencies to share intelligence and agree priorities for tackling organised crime in Northern Ireland. The effectiveness of this approach is clearly evidenced by the partner agencies' continuing successes against organised criminal gangs.

Pension Shortfall

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he is taking to introduce relief for homeowners facing the prospect of being forced to sell or re-mortgage their homes because of an income reduction caused by a pension shortfall. [193562]

Mr. Timms: I have been asked to reply.

The Government are tackling pensioner poverty through personal tax and benefit changes which mean that the average pensioner household is now £26 per week better off in 2004–05 than they would have been under a continuation of the 1997 system. One of the key measures that offers extra financial support to the poorest and most vulnerable is the pension credit. This guarantees pensioners a minimum weekly income of £105.45 for single pensioners and £160.95 for couples and rewards pensioners who have low or moderate income or who have saved for their retirement.

For those who face a shortfall from their occupational pension schemes, from next April, when a company becomes insolvent and is unable to honour employees' Defined Benefit pension rights, the new Pension Protection Fund will offer a scheme that offers compensation, thus reducing the shortfall that they would otherwise suffer. To help members of schemes that wind-up before April 2005 DWP are developing a Financial Assistance Scheme

Planning

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action he will take to prevent development without prior planning permission through the operation of the retrospective planning process. [193439]

Angela Smith: The planning system aims to stop unacceptable development and to allow other development to proceed, subject to conditions. In certain circumstances, it is appropriate to accept retrospective planning applications, but generally, development in advance of planning permission is discouraged. To strengthen this, I shall bring forward legislation in the forthcoming Planning Reform Order enabling the Department to apply a multiple of the normal planning fee to retrospective planning applications.

The Department is also implementing recommendations from its benchmarking of planning enforcement against planning authorities in Great Britain that enable more effective action against unauthorised development. This includes an experienced, well equipped and well trained body of enforcement staff commensurate to its workload that can act within reasonable timescales, further development of working relationships with district councils and seeking the application of more realistic fines by the courts.

Prisons

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cells in prisons in Northern Ireland are occupied by more prisoners than those cells were designed to hold. [195531]

Mr. Pearson: At present there are 156 cells designed for single occupancy that now accommodate two prisoners per cell.

Telecommunications Masts

Mr. Gregory Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consultations are being held with the mobile telecommunications industry on the need for further dialogue between communities living in the immediate vicinity of masts and their possible relocation. [194789]

Angela Smith: My Department is not involved in any formal consultations with the telecommunications industry on this matter.

As you will be aware, all proposals for the erection of mobile phone masts in Northern Ireland require planning permission and are considered on their individual merits against prevailing planning policies, taking account of representations received following normal advertising and consultation arrangements.

The telecommunications industry does, however, appreciate that the Government would support greater public consultation by operators prior to planning applications for new telecommunications equipment being lodged.

It was for this reason the Mobile Operators Association (MOA), which represents the main mobile telecommunications operators, developed the Traffic Light Rating Model for Public Consultation, as part of the operators 10 commitments. The guide is to assist the operators in ascertaining the amount and type of public consultation that is required for any proposed site. The consultation that is carried out under this process by the operator is in addition to that already carried out by the Planning Service for planning permission.

CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

Child Witnesses (Court Delays)

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what assessment he has made of the (a) level and (b) length of delays in court cases involving a child witness since 1997. [196639]

Mr. Leslie: The waiting time for a child called as a prosecution witness in the Crown courts in June 2004 was 118 minutes, down from 155 minutes in 1997. For a child called as a defence witness, the waiting time was 54 minutes, compared to 189 minutes in November 1997.

In the magistrates courts, the waiting time for a child called as a prosecution witness was 92 minutes, down from 97 minutes in 1997. For a child called as a defence witness, the waiting time was 134 minutes compared to 153 minutes in November 1997.

The Effective Trial Management and "No Witness No Justice" Programmes will reduce the numbers of ineffective trials and delay at court and further improve services for victims and witnesses, including child witnesses.

Civil Servants

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what the average length of continuous service for civil servants within the Department is. [194404]

Mr. Lammy: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office (Ruth Kelly), on 3 November 2004, Official Report, column 267W.

Electoral Registration

Mr. Evans: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what action he is taking to ensure that Electoral Registration Officers are proactive in registering overseas voters. [196738]

Mr. Leslie: Electoral Registration Officers each year invite electors who have applied to be added to the overseas electors' list to renew their applications to be included in the electoral register. The independent Electoral Commission provides information and advice to British citizens living abroad on their electoral rights and has produced a registration form for use by eligible British citizens.

Magistrates

Mr. Allen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs if Ministers in the Department will make it their policy to encourage magistrates to meet tenants' leaders, neighbourhood watch co-ordinators and other community leaders in the areas they serve; and if he will make a statement. [196211]

Mr. Leslie: There are existing and successful programmes in operation so that magistrates can engage with their local communities, such as "Magistrates in the Community" which aims to raise awareness of the magistracy and its work.

The Secretary of State has commissioned a programme entitled "Supporting Magistrates to Provide Justice". This initiative will be seeking input from all those who work within, and with, the magistrates courts. Ideas from here will be fed through to the very good work that is already being carried out under the Magistrates in the Community Programme, and further foster community links. Further announcements in relation to this initiative will be made in due course.

In addition, the Courts Boards that are being established will provide another means of engaging with representatives of the local community.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs if he will make it his policy to encourage magistrates to meet hon. Members who serve courts in their constituency. [196212]

Mr. Leslie: Hon. Members can meet with magistrates to discuss the general concerns of their constituency, where both parties are content. In order to preserve judicial independence, magistrates should not be asked to discuss individual cases.

Public Services

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what his Department has done in the last 12 months to fulfil its role as a Department improving the quality of and people's confidence in public services. [192656]

Mr. Leslie: Public service delivery is at the heart of the Department for Constitutional Affairs. Putting people at the centre of the Department's work is a vital component in our vision for better quality service. Justice for all is as central to the objectives of this Government as is education for all and health care for all. So since the creation of the Department for Constitutional Affairs in June 2003 we have been working to make sure that the Department delivers for the people who use its services—especially in our justice system, where people seeking redress either against crime or against civil injustices are at the centre of what the system exists to achieve.

That means offering particular support to victims, to witnesses and to jurors. It means improving and reforming our justice system and our legal system to make sure that they offer the best possible help to those who make use of them. It means making our courts work better so that the public's confidence can be raised. A vital part of that will be the creation in April next year of a unified courts administration—for the first time, bringing all courts together administratively. It means making sure, for example, that the market for legal services is working as well as it should be. It was for this reason we established a far-reaching review of legal services headed by Sir David Clementi, which will report shortly. It is also why we have established a fundamental review of our legal aid system. The new consumer strategy review within the DCA will also help to make sure that we put people first in all that we do.

We believe that these and a range of other steps are contributing to the quality of public service, which this Department is committed to deliver, and to people's confidence in those services. There is a great deal more to do. But we believe that we have made a good start.

HEALTH

Agenda for Change

Phil Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his estimate is of the total cost of implementing "Agenda for Change"; and if he will ensure that these costs are fully funded by central Government. [195144]

Mr. Hutton: The latest estimate of costs for implementing "Agenda for Change" is that expected costs nationally represent 1.8 per cent. of the non-medical pay bill in 2004–05 and 3.7 per cent. of non-medical pay bill in 2005–06. The corresponding total levels of funding for "Agenda for Change" in each of those years, expressed as percentage of non-medical pay bill, are 2.1 per cent. and 3.8 per cent. respectively.

Aimspro

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment the National Institute for Clinical Excellence has made of the current trials of the use of Aimspro for multiple sclerosis sufferers; and if he will make a statement. [195107]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The treatment Aimspro is not licensed for use in the United Kingdom and has not been referred to the National Institute for Clinical Excellence for assessment.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been done into the effects of Aimspro on MS sufferers. [195648]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Aimspro is a product being developed by Daval International, a United Kingdom company, for a number of indications, including multiple sclerosis and rheumatoid arthritis. The company is conducting or planning to conduct a number of trials in these disease areas. The only clinical data available currently to the Medicines and Healthcare products Regulatory Agency comes from individual patient case reports and we are not aware of any formal clinical trial data or scientific publications on Aimspro.

Available Beds

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many beds were available in the Hull and East Yorkshire hospitals NHS trust in the last two quarters for which figures are available. [194974]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Information on the number of beds is collected and published on an annual basis. In 2003–04, the average daily number of open and staffed beds in the Hull and East Yorkshire hospitals national health service trust was 1,425, including 1,332 general and acute beds.

Breast Cancer Units

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many breast cancer units there are at NHS hospitals within the Greater London area. [195899]

Dr. Ladyman: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Bus Service

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the future of the Tilley bus service between Edgware and Barnet hospitals. [196361]

Dr. Ladyman: This is an operational matter for Barnet and Chase Farm Hospitals National Health Service Trust.

Children's Wards

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the hospitals covering the Greater London area which have children's wards. [195925]

Dr. Ladyman: Information on the national health service bodies within the five London strategic health authorities (SHAs) who have reported on wards open in the day and overnight relating to children is shown in the tables.

Complementary Medicine

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the amount spent on complementary and alternative medicine in England in each of the last five years. [194236]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Department does not collect such data.

Consultant Surgeons

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many consultant surgeons working in hospitals in the Greater London area have been suspended from duty in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [195930]

Dr. Ladyman: The Department routinely collected information on the number of consultants suspended for more than six months until June 2004. This information was not broken down by speciality. The number of consultants suspended for more than six months within the five London strategic health authority areas for the last three years is shown in the table.

Period	Suspensions
Quarter 2, 2001 to quarter 2, 2002	1
Quarter 3, 2002 to quarter 2, 2003	2
Quarter 3, 2003 to quarter 2, 2004	2

Delayed Discharges

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he is taking to tackle delayed discharges from hospitals within the Greater London area. [195903]

Dr. Ladyman: The Community Care (Delayed Discharges, etc.) Act 2003 places new duties on councils and the national health service relating to joint working between health and social care systems and with patients and carers around hospital discharge. From January 2004, the Act introduced a financial incentive to avoid delayed discharges. That is supported by the delayed discharges grant.

Latest figures show the total number of patients delayed in an acute hospital bed on any one day, within the five London strategic health authority areas, is now 318—a reduction of 67 per cent., since September 2001.

Dentistry

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to encourage recruitment of NHS dentists within the Greater London area. [195931]

Dr. Ladyman: We have undertaken a review of the dental primary care workforce in consultation with representatives of the dental profession—professional bodies, dental academics, as well as the British Dental Association (BDA). We have worked closely with the BDA to draw up proposals for a new contract from April 2005, which will remove the treadmill of item of service.

This links with the new duties primary care trusts (PCTs) will have from April 2005 to secure the provision of primary dental care services, either through contracts with individual practices, or by providing services themselves. PCTs, including those within London, have been drawing up local dentistry action plans, setting out how they are using their proportion of the £59 million additional funding we have allocated to improve access to NHS dentistry this year and their priorities for commissioning in 2005–06.

The NHS workforce will be increased by the equivalent of 1,000 dentists by October 2005, allowing up to an extra two million people to be treated nationally.

Departmental IT

Brian White: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of the Department's (a) implemented and (b) planned computer systems use open source software; and what plans are in place to raise this level. [195655]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Department does not use open source software (OSS) on any of its implemented or planned computer systems.

Software procurement by the Department follows the 'level playing field' Government OSS Policy, which does not require the raising of levels of OSS usage in Government; rather that Government considers OSS solutions alongside proprietary ones in information technology procurements and that contracts should be awarded on a value for money, case by case basis. This policy can be viewed at www.govtalk.gov.uk.

Departmental Offices

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the cost of (a) decoration and (b) refurbishment of the London offices of the Department was in each of the last four years. [196137]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The information requested is shown in the following table.

	Decoration works	Refurbishments
2000–01	85,542.20	652,456
2001–02	171,202.51	1,029,000
2002–03	116,738.31	1,978,000
2003–04	178,968.54	2,841,000

Dermatology

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many days training an undergraduate medical student receives in dermatology; and if he will make a statement. [196237]

Mr. Hutton: Individual university medical schools determine their own undergraduate medical curriculum in the light of recommendations from the General Medical Council's education committee, which has the statutory responsibility to determine the extent and knowledge and skill required for the granting of primary medical qualifications in the United Kingdom.

The education committee's most recent recommendations on undergraduate medical education are contained in "Tomorrow's Doctors," which was published in July 2002. It recommends curricular themes and is not a complete guide.

Gunshot Wounds

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many victims have been treated for gunshot wounds in UK hospitals in each of the last five years. [196005]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Information on the number of patients admitted to hospital in England as a result of gunshot injuries in the last five years is shown in the table. Information is not collected centrally on the number of patients treated in accident and emergency but not admitted. The information covers England only.

Injuries from gunshots—primary diagnosis (ICD-10 SOO—T98) injury. Cause code (ICD-10 W32—W34)—discharge from firearm. Count of finished admission episodes—national health service hospitals, England 1998–99 to 2002–03

Year	Admissions
1998–99	134
1999–2000	117
2000–01	102
2001–02	155
2002–03	129

Notes:

1. A finished admission episode is the first period of in-patient care under one consultant within one healthcare provider. Please note that admissions do not represent the number of in-patients, as a person may have more than one admission within a year.
2. The cause code is a supplementary code that indicates the nature of any external cause of injury, poisoning or other adverse affects.
3. The primary diagnosis is the first of up to 14 (seven prior to 2002–03) diagnosis fields in the hospital episode statistics data set and provides the main reason why the patient was in hospital.

Health Spending (Leeds)

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been spent in each year since 1990 by Leeds Primary Care Trust and its predecessor health care commissioning bodies. [195379]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Expenditure by the Leeds Primary Care Trusts (PCTs) and their predecessor commissioning bodies from 1991–92 to 2003–04 is shown in the table.

	Expenditure
1991–92	355,557,000
1992–93	375,741,000
1993–94	397,178,000
1994–95	418,162,000
1995–96	457,889,000
1996–97	491,271,000
1997–98	485,232,000
1998–99	539,539,000
1999–2000	613,214,000
2000–01	647,260,000
2001–02	670,609,000

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funding has been received in each year since 1990 by the Leeds Teaching Hospitals NHS Trust and its predecessor bodies. [195380]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Income for the Leeds Teaching Hospital National Health Service Trust and its predecessor trusts from 1991–92 to 2003–04 is shown in the following table.

	Income
1991–92	222,027,000
1992–93	251,443,000
1993–94	271,038,000

Hospital Infections

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients in each (a) hospital and (b) trust in England have contracted methicillin resistant staphylococcus aureus in the NHS since 1997, broken down into age groups (a) 0–10, (b) 11–20, (c) 21–30, (d) 31–40, (e) 41–50, (f) 51–60, (g) 61–70, (h) 71–80, (i) 81–90 and (j) older than 90 years. [193457]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Information for individual national health service trusts and hospitals broken down by age is not available.

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) UK and (b) Scottish recipients are anticipated to qualify for the Skipton Fund support for those who have contracted Hepatitis C from infected NHS blood products; and if he will make a statement. [193650]

Miss Melanie Johnson: It is not possible to provide accurate figures on the number of people who will benefit from the Hepatitis C ex-gratia payment scheme.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the work of Directors of Infection Control. [195487]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The director of infection prevention and control should oversee local control of infection policies and their implementation; and report directly to the chief executive and trust board. We expect these authoritative figures to play a key role in producing a national health service culture where infection control is everyone's business, rather than the job of specialists. They should have the authority to challenge inappropriate clinical hygiene practice as well as antibiotic prescribing decisions. Directors should have the appropriate expertise and authority to act to reduce local infection rates and one of their tasks is to produce a public annual report on progress.

Hysterectomy

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many adverse incidents have been recorded from (a) uterine fibroid embolisation, (b) endometrial ablation and (c) hysterectomy, in each year since 1999. [195030]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The National Patient Safety Agency (NPSA) has been established to improve the safety of national health service patient care by promoting an open culture and by introducing a new national reporting and learning system for patient safety incidents. The reporting system is being implemented across the NHS during 2004 and will provide information about reported patient safety incidents, including potentially any involving uterine fibroid embolisation, endometrial ablation or hysterectomy.

Junior Doctors

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he will take to improve the retention of junior doctors wishing to train part-time. [194986]

Mr. Hutton: In the last few years, there has been an increase in the number of junior doctors training on a part time basis under the existing flexible training scheme. This success means that more doctors are seeking part time posts in the national health service, and the Department is currently working with the British Medical Association and deaneries to develop new proposals for flexible trainees, which will better integrate into the NHS work force.

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to increase post-graduate deanery budgets to accommodate (a) part-time training and (b) increasing numbers of junior doctors. [194987]

Mr. Hutton: When the new contract for junior doctors was introduced in 2000, additional funding (£7 million) was provided to the service to fully resource the new arrangements for both full-time and part-time trainees. This funding is recurrent. It is for the deaneries, working on behalf of strategic health authorities (SHAs), to decide how these funds are allocated between part-time and full-time trainees—local needs must be fully considered. There are no plans to increase this amount.

This year (2004–05) additional funding has been provided to SHAs in their multi professional education and training (MPET) allocations for 134 new general practitioner registrars, 119 new specialist registrars and 203 new pre-registration house officers. The MPET budget for 2005–06 has yet to be determined, but further funding will be provided for additional GP registrars, specialist registrars and pre-registration house officers, on top of funding provided for existing trainees.

Leukaemia

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children were diagnosed with leukaemia in each of the last five years. [196004]

Mr. Timms: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Keith Vaz, dated 8 November 2004:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent question concerning the number of children in the UK who were diagnosed with leukaemia in each of the last five years. (196004)

The most recent available figures are for the year 2001. The number of newly diagnosed cases of leukaemia registered in the years 1997 to 2001 are given in the table below.

Number of newly diagnosed cases of leukaemia[1] in children[2] in the UK, 1997–2001

	Number of cases
1997	459
1998	493
1999	479
2000	423
2001	421

National Programme for IT

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he has taken (a) to promote public awareness that patient data will be held centrally under the National Programme for IT in the NHS and (b) to ensure that patients are aware of their ability to opt out of centrally held databases in the NHS. [194892]

Mr. Hutton: A major public awareness campaign is being planned by the national programme for information technology (NPfIT) to address the full range of issues posed by implementation of a national health service care records service (NHS CRS) and to ensure that NHS patients know their rights and how information about them can be used within the health service. This campaign will commence in 2005 and will run for a number of years. To maximise the impact of the campaign, relevant information will be made available to NHS staff and to the public record in each local health community in the months running up to the go-live date for the NHS CRS.

The campaign will comprise written materials in various languages, web resources, and training tools and a media pack for health communities to use according to their local circumstances. It will complement communications activity in the NHS that is already required under Data Protection legislation and Departmental policy.

A key component of the NPfIT relates to the access controls that will protect data. Patients will be able to restrict who may see different elements of the data that is held about them and may choose to opt-out of having any data shared through the new systems. The Data Protection Act 1998 also provides patients with the right to object to the processing of data that can identify them where this may cause them substantial damage or distress. The NPfIT is considering how this right should apply to implementation of the NHS CRS.

NHS Doctors (Appraisal and Revalidation)

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the costs arising from the new appraisal and revalidation processes for NHS doctors. [190580]

Mr. Hutton: The General Medical Council (GMC) is currently in the process of consulting on proposed guidance for United Kingdom doctors undergoing revalidation, which it intend to introduce from July 2005. The implications for the national health service will depend very much on the outcome of the consultation and subsequent agreement with the GMC as to what systems we adopt for supporting NHS doctors to revalidate.

We will aim to introduce systems which do not entail significant extra bureaucracy for the NHS, while ensuring that doctors are supported in keeping up to date and fit to practise. That is why we have linked appraisal and revalidation, by using broadly the same data for both.

NHS Trust Boards

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) men and (b) women he has appointed to NHS trust boards in the last 12 months. [195927]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Appointments to national health service trust boards are delegated to the NHS Appointments Commission. I have asked the chair of the Commission, Sir William Wells to write to my hon. Friend with the information requested.

Operating Theatres (Fires)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many fires there have been in operating theatres in the NHS in England in each year since 1997. [194237]

Mr. Hutton: The numbers of reported fire incidents originating in operating departments in the national health service in England are shown in the table. A fire incident is defined as any incident where fire alarms have been activated and the fire service has attended.

	Number of incidents
1997	10
1998	8
1999	12
2000	11
2001	22
2002	9
2003	16
2004	[1]7

[1] To 25 October 2004.

Overseas Nurses

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many overseas nurses have been recruited to work in the NHS during the last 12 months. [194632]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is not collected centrally.

The Nursing and Midwifery Council (NMC) registers all nurses who work in the United Kingdom and produces a statistical breakdown of its register. An analysis of the register can be found on the NMC website at www.nmc-uk.org.

In the last 12 months 14,124 non-United Kingdom nurses were admitted to the NMC register.

A copy of the most recent data has been placed in the Library.

Paediatric Services

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the total expenditure on (a) the NHS in England and (b) NHS paediatric services in England has been in each year since 1992. [194245]

Dr. Ladyman: The data available is shown in the table.

Total NHS expenditure, and expenditure on paediatric services in England 1994–95 to 2002–03

£ millio

	Total expenditure-all ages	Expenditure on childre (ages 0–15) excludin expenditure o maternity service

Patients' Complaints

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Healt what action he has taken to ensure that patients' complaints against NHS hospitals within the Greate London area are dealt with immediately; and if he wil make a statement. [195898

Dr. Ladyman: The National Health Servic (Complaints) Regulations 2004 came into force o 30 July. They contain all the time scales for loca resolution. Supporting guidance was issued at the sam time. Both are available on the Department's website a http://www.dh.gov.uk/assetRoot/04/08/81/57/04088157.pd

PFI (Greater London)

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health i he will list the private finance initiative hospital building programmes under consideration for the Greate London area. [195929

Dr. Ladyman: Information on the schemes within th five London strategic health authority areas is shown i the table.

Pharmacists

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the cost of the new community pharmacy contract to pharmacists who wish to expand their practices. [195920]

Ms Rosie Winterton: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave him on 4 November 2004, Official Report, column 398W.

Postgraduate Deaneries

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much central funding was given to postgraduate deaneries in each year since 1997. [195724]

Mr. Hutton: Central funding for postgraduate medical and dental education and training since 1997 has been:

	Amount (£ million)
1996–97	533
1997–98	592
1998–99	621
1999–2000	657
2000–01	821
2001–02	864
2002–03	1,156
2003–04	1,235
2004–05	1,344

This represents an increase of 132 per cent., or £811 million. These sums formed part of the overall national health service training budgets allocated to regional health authorities and, more recently, to strategic health authorities. The amounts that postgraduate deaneries actually received will have been determined locally in the light of local priorities and national work force targets.

Radiologists

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to increase the number of clinicians performing interventional radiology. [195032]

Mr. Hutton: Interventional radiology is the use of imaging guidance for the purpose of treating patients.

Many clinical radiologists undertake interventional radiological procedures and most of them combine diagnosis and intervention in their practice. There is no certificate of completion of specialist training in interventional radiology, therefore the Department does not collect data on the numbers of interventional radiologists practising in the national health service.

Since September 1997, numbers of consultants in clinical radiology have increased by 417, or 29 per cent. Consultant numbers are expected to increase further as a result of the significant investment in training capacity in this speciality.

Between 2002–03 and 2004–05, 166 additional centrally funded specialist registrar posts have been allocated to clinical radiology. In 2005–06, there are plans in place to create up to 60 posts for the new clinical radiology academies.

Reducing Bureaucracy

Jon Trickett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to the written ministerial statement of 22 July 2004, Official Report, columns 73–77WS, on reducing bureaucracy, what assessment he has made of the future role of private contractors in NHS procurement. [195025]

Mr. Hutton: The Department's commercial directorate is scrutinising the business processes and procurement activities of many of the central services of the Department's arm's length bodies (ALBs) to establish the full scope of the efficiencies to be made, especially in relation to the money—about £3 billion—that is spent by ALBs on behalf of frontline organisations on national health service supplies, temporary staff and litigation services. This includes evaluation of the value that could be achieved by partnering with the private sector.

The commercial directorate's work on the NHS supply chain is already well advanced, suggesting savings of approximately £500 million per annum by 2007–08.

South Dorset

Jim Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set out, with statistical evidence relating as closely as possible to the South Dorset constituency, the effects of changes to departmental policy since 1997 on the South Dorset constituency. [194968]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Government have put in place a programme of national health service investment and reform since 1997 to improve service delivery in all parts of the United Kingdom. There is significant evidence that these policies have yielded considerable benefits for the South Dorset constituency.

For example:

At the end of August 2004, the number of people more than nine months for in-patient treatment within South West Dorset Primary Care Trust (PCT) has fallen to zero from 22 in June 2002.

At the end of June 2004, the number of patients waiting over 13 weeks for out-patient treatment within the South West Dorset PCT has fallen to four from 182 in June 2002.

In 2002, at the West Dorset General Hospitals NHS Trust, 80.4 per cent. of patients spent less than four hours in accident and emergency from arrival to admission, transfer or discharge. Figures for June 2004 show an improvement to 93.2 per cent.

Between September 1997 and June 2004, the number of consultants at West Dorset General Hospitals NHS Trust has increased from 58 to 85. The number of nurses increased from 690 in September 1997 to 803 in September 2003.

General practitioner figures are stable, with an increase from 112 to 115 from September 2002 to June 2004.

Figures for September 2004 show that 100 per cent. of patients within South West Dorset PCT are able to be offered an appointment with a primary care professional within two working days.

South West Dorset Primary Care Trust allocation has risen to £134.3 million for 2004–05, a cash increase of 9.5 per cent.

A new catheter laboratory at West Dorset General Hospitals NHS Trust at a cost of £1.4 million, which opened on 1 October 2004.

A redevelopment of Portland Hospital at a cost of £2 million, which will include the building of a new ward and complete renovation of existing facilities.

Upgrade of services currently provided in Portland at a cost of approximately £2 million, including 16 general medical practitioner beds, out-patient department, physiotherapy and occupational therapy, x-ray facilities and the minor injuries unit.

Westhaven Hospital site development, where South West Dorset has invested £800,000 as part of a £10 million development to build an innovative new complex to meet the needs of older people living in and around Weymouth. The development has been designed to meet a range of housing and care needs.

Transport

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the provision of transport for individuals needing to access hospitals some distance away, with specific reference to rural areas. [196820]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Primary care trusts are responsible for providing or securing the provision of ambulance services, which could include patient transport services, to such extent as they consider necessary to meet all reasonable requirements. It is, therefore, for the local national health service to decide who provides transport services for patients in its area.

Guidance has been issued to the NHS, which states that:

> "... patient transport service should be seen as part of an integrated programme of care. A non-emergency patient is one who, whilst requiring treatment, which may or may not be of a specialist nature, does not require an immediate or urgent response. A clinical need for treatment does not imply a medical need for transport. Medical need for non-emergency patient transport must be determined by a doctor, dentist or midwife and will depend upon the medical condition of the individual patient, the availability of private or public transport and distance to be travelled. The principle which should apply is that each patient should be able to reach hospital in a reasonable time and in reasonable comfort, without detriment to their medical condition".

A copy of the guidance, "Ambulance and other patient transport services: Operation, use and performance standards", has been placed in the Library.

Waiting Times

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients in (a) 2003 and (b) 2004 in Hull and the East Riding waited longer than eight weeks after being referred to a cancer specialist. [194975]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Information on the number of patients waiting longer than eight weeks after being referred to a cancer specialist is not collected by the Department. Statistics are collected on the number of patients who wait more than 28 days for a first out-patient appointment following general practitioner urgent referral with suspected cancer. For Hull and East Yorkshire hospitals national health service trust, when the referral was received within 24 hours, three patients waited more than 28 days to see a cancer specialist in 2002–03 and no patients waited longer than 28 days in 2003–04.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average change in the total in-patient/day case waiting list has been in (a) England and (b) Crosby since July 2003. [195493]

Mr. Hutton: The table shows the average change in the total in-patient/day case waiting list since July 2003 both for England and for the two national health service trusts in the Crosby area.

Patients waiting for elective in-patient—position at month end

	England		Aintree hospitals NHS trust		Southport and Ormskirk hospital NHS trust

Whiplash

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have required hospital treatment for whiplash arising from a car accident in each year since 2000. [195214]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The number of people admitted to hospital where the primary diagnosis has been sprain and strain of cervical spine and where the cause has been a transport accident since 2000 is shown in the table.

	Number of admissions
2000–01	534
2001–02	474
2002–03	454

Winter Plans

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether all NHS organisations in Cheshire and Merseyside have updated their winter plans. [195491]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The emergency services action team (ESAT) was commissioned by the Cheshire and Merseyside strategic health authority to manage winter planning across the Cheshire and Merseyside area. The ESAT has collated winter plans from local health communities and assessed them against set criteria to ensure the plans are robust. Each local health community has a plan in place that aims to minimise the risk of predicted increases in demand on national health service organisations.

Working Time Directive

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of funding charges necessary to support the medical training requirements of the European working time directive. [195079]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 1 November 2004]: The requirement to comply with the working time directive (WTD) does not directly affect investment in medical education and training. Achieving compliance for doctors in training from August 2004 has been taken forward as part of a wider modernisation programme designed to improve both the quality of services and working patterns for doctors. We have supported this through central investment in pilot work across a number of national health service trusts over recent years. We have disseminated the lessons we learned across the NHS. We have also made more postgraduate medical training places available to help the recruitment of extra doctors.

We assess regularly the number of training places we need for doctors and consequently the level of funding required to support them. Continuing compliance with the WTD is one of the factors that influence decisions on the future number of doctors.

DEFENCE

A400M

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress with the A400M procurement; and how many countries have expressed interest in purchasing the aircraft. [194621]

Mr. Ingram: A contract for the development and production of the A400M aircraft was signed with Airbus Military (AM) on 27 May 2003 on behalf of the partner nations. The UK off-take is 25 aircraft out of a total 180. The contract milestones are being achieved.

The participating nations within the programme are Germany, France, Turkey, Spain, Belgium, Luxembourg and United Kingdom. Portugal and Italy participated during the preparation stage but withdrew before MOU/Contact signature. While a number of other countries are potential customers for A400M, none of them have expressed formal interest.

Air Depth Maintenance

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the consultation period on the future locations of air depth maintenance support announced on 16 September expires. [196210]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 4 November 2004]: The Trade Union consultation period on the preferred way ahead on End-to-End Logistics Air Depth Support ended on 27 October.

Aircraft Carriers

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which US companies have been invited to bid for (a) management and (b) construction work on the project for the Royal Navy's new aircraft carriers since the appointment of BAE Systems and Thales to lead the project. [194315]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 28 October 2004]: Since the start of the Future Aircraft Carrier (CVF) Assessment Phase in 1999, and the subsequent announcement of the alliancing strategy in January 2003, both BAE Systems and Thales UK have involved a number of US companies, including Lockheed Martin, Northrop Grumman and Raytheon. As part of implementing the alliance strategy, we are currently running a competition to select the company best placed to fulfil the role of physical integrator (PI). The PI would be expected to provide a management role to co-ordinate the ship building aspects of the carriers, which will be acquired in line with the current Government policy of building warships for the Royal Navy in the United Kingdom. Six companies were invited to submit proposals including Bechtel and KBR, an operating segment of the Halliburton Company.

Armed Forces (Work with Children)

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence under what circumstances military personnel (a) are and (b) may in future work with children; and if the Government will ensure criminal records checks are made on members of the armed forces who interact with children. [196440]

Mr. Ingram: There are a number of circumstances where military personnel, in the course of their duty, may be involved with children. In the main, but not exclusively, they are the medical services, some legal staff, welfare and families staff, Padres, cadet and youth training teams, recruitment staff, cadet instructors and administrative staff, and Service community police. In all instances Service personnel appointed to these posts undergo a criminal records check to an appropriate level of disclosure.

Armed Services (Voter Registration)

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to promote registration to vote amongst service personnel. [196097]

Mr. Caplin: The Ministry of Defence issues a Defence Council Instruction explaining the procedure for registration. Assistance is provided to personnel, especially those overseas, and personnel are notified of all parliamentary elections. We are also considering the use of other media to promote registration.

Army (Specialists)

Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the Army's (a) present and (b) anticipated strength against establishment is in (i) Signals, (ii) Logistics, (iii) Engineers and (iv) Intelligence. [194381]

Mr. Caplin: The Army's strength against establishment as at 1 September 2004 in the Corps requested is set out as follows.

Corps	Strength	Establishment
Royal Corps of Signals	8,850	8,630
Royal Logistic Corps	15,540	16,200
Corps of Royal Engineers	8,770	9,160
Intelligence Corps	1,380	1,410

Notes:

1. The present establishment relates to the last trained requirement published figure contained in Tri-Service Publications 3 and 4.
2. Both sets of figures are for UK trained regular army and therefore exclude Gurkhas, Full Time Reserve Service Personnel, the Home Service Battalions of the Royal Irish Regiment and mobilised reservists. The figures also exclude those with the rank of Colonel and above who are held against "staff" strength and requirement.

Army Strength

Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many infantry are (a) on operational tour, (b) training to go on operations and (c) on recreational and training tour. [194389]

Mr. Ingram: There are currently (a) seven Infantry Battalions and one Infantry Company deployed on operations and; (b) seven Infantry Battalions training for operations. In answering part (c) of the question, I have assumed that the hon. Member is referring to Infantry Battalions on overseas training exercises, of which there is one. Details can be found in the following table:

Infantry Battalions deployed on operations

Operation	Unit
Iraq	1st Battalion The Black Watch, 1st Battalion The Duke of Wellington's Regiment, 1st Battalion The Welsh Guards, 1st Battalion The Scots Guards
Northern Ireland (roulement battalion)	2nd Battalion The Light Infantry
Afghanistan	1st Battalion The Worcestershire and Sherwood Foresters Regiment
Bosnia	1st Battalion The Grenadier Guards
Falkland Islands	1st Battalion The Royal Gloucestershire, Berkshire and Wiltshire Regiment (Company Level Deployment)

Infantry Battalions training for operations

1st Battalion The Royal Regiment of Fusiliers

1st Battalion The Highlanders

1st Battalion The Staffordshire Regiment

1st Battalion The Royal Anglian Regiment

1st Battalion The Coldstream Guards

3rd Battalion The Parachute Regiment

1st Battalion The Royal Gurkha Rifles

Infantry Battalions on overseas training exercises

1st Battalion The Welsh Guards

Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which Army personnel recommended the reduction of three battalions from two divisions. [196219]

Mr. Ingram: Advice on all aspects of Army organisation, management and structure is put to Ministers by the Executive Committee of the Army Board, the senior official committee of the Army. It is chaired by the Chief of the General Staff and its membership comprises: the Second Permanent Secretary, the Commander in Chief Land Command, the Adjutant General, the General Officer Commanding Northern Ireland, the Quartermaster General, the Master General of the Ordnance.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions he has consulted retired field marshals about (a) proposed changes to the Army and (b) operational matters. [196460]

Mr. Ingram: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has not consulted retired Field Marshals on either issue.

Canberra Aircraft

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many accidents there have been during the service life of the Canberra that have (a) been the direct or indirect result of training for emergency situations and (b) taken place during asymmetric approaches or landing simulating engine failure; and how many civilian casualties have occurred as a result of those training accidents. [195173]

Mr. Ingram: We only hold verifiable statistical data on Canberra accident rates dating from 1974. Since then, the RAF has lost 12 Canberra aircraft in accidents, at a rate of 0.35 per 10,000 flying hours. Of these, three were attributed to training for emergency situations. Of the three losses in emergency training, all were during the take off or overshoot phase while simulating engine failure. During the same period there have been over 100 incidents involving Canberra aircraft where engines have had to be shut down during flight.

Three civilians were killed and six injured as a result of a training accident in 1977.

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps his Department is taking to provide (a) improved ejection seats and (b) a flight simulator for the (i) operational and (ii) training aircraft used for training in emergency situations for Canberra PR9s. [195174]

Mr. Ingram: There are no plans to update the ejection seats or to develop flight simulator training for the Canberra. Modifications to Canberra ejection seats would take up to four years to develop and embody, exceeding the planned Canberra out of service date of 31 March 2006.

Chile (Rover Class Tanker)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with (a) the Chilean Government, (b) the Chilean navy and (c) others concerning the transfer of a Rover class tanker to Chile. [194682]

Mr. Ingram: In response to an approach from the Head of the Chilean Naval Mission in London in July 2003 concerning the availability for sale of RFA Rover Class and other naval ship types, the Ministry of Defence's Disposal Services Agency (DSA) informed him that, in line with current plans, no Rover Class tankers would be decommissioned from service until later in the decade. This issue was subsequently raised by the Chilean Navy in September 2004. There have been no discussions with any other parties.

Departmental Expenditure Limit

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his Department's cash Departmental Expenditure Limit is for the current financial year. [196464]

Mr. Ingram: The Ministry of Defence has been set Departmental Expenditure Limits for Resource and Capital expenditure only. However, the Department's programme this year is expected to remain within a 'cash equivalent' (Resource DEL plus Capital DEL less anticipated depreciation and Cost of Capital costs) of £26.5 billion as set out in "Spending Review 2004, New Public Spending Plans 2005–08" (HM Treasury July 2004. Cm 6237) and, subject to any changes voted in Supplementary Estimates within the total cash figure voted by Parliament in Main Estimates (HC 466, April 2004) of £28.6 billion.

Departmental Secondments

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many staff in his Department and its agencies were seconded from the (a) private and (b) academic sector in each of the last three years. [175364]

Mr. Caplin: The information requested is set out in the following table:

	Inward secondments
Financial year	Private sector	Academic sector
2003–04	24	1
2002–03	14	0
2001–02	3	0

EU Battlegroups

Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to the answer of 28 October 2004, Official Report, column 1367W, on EU battlegroups, who has command of a battlegroup once it has been deployed; and to whom the commander will be directly responsible. [196213]

Mr. Hoon: Any deployed EU battlegroup would have a force commander and an operation commander. The force commander would be determined on a case-by-case basis. For a battlegroup operating under the Berlin Plus arrangements, the operation commander would be DSACEUR. For a battlegroup not operating under the Berlin Plus arrangements, the operation commander would be determined on a case-by-case basis. We would expect them to be drawn from the nation or nations making the major troop contributions to the battlegroup concerned.

As with all EU operations, the political control of a battlegroup mission, including any decisions appointing commanders, would rest with the 25 member states, acting by unanimity through the Political and Security Committee (PSC). The force commander of a deployed battlegroup would be directly responsible to the operation commander, who would be directly responsible to the PSC.

Iraq (Depleted Uranium)

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the letter written by his Department's legal adviser to the legal secretary to the Law Officers dated 12 March 2003, in respect of the legal position on taking military action against Iraq, to which reference is made in paragraph 382, page 95, of the Butler Committee Report on intelligence on weapons of mass destruction, HC898. [185191]

Mr. Hoon: The correspondence to which paragraph 382 of the Butler Committee Report refers was considered by the Committee, and is covered by legal professional privilege. I am withholding the letter under Exemptions 2 and 4 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Military Personnel (Commonwealth)

Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentages of the (a) Guards, (b) Scottish, (c) Queen's, (d) King's, (e) Prince of Wales's and (f) Light divisions are comprised of personnel from Commonwealth countries. [196218]

Mr. Caplin: The following table shows the percentages of the personnel from Commonwealth countries in (a) Guards, (b) Scottish, (c) Queens, (d) Kings, (e) Prince of Wales and (f) Light divisions. Figures relate to Regular Army trained officers and soldiers as at 1 September 2004.

	[1]Commonwealth percentage
Footguards	2.3
Scots divisions	5.9
Queens divisions	8.9
Kings divisions	5.2
Prince of Wales divisions	5.2
Light divisions	7.5

Missile Defence

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to the written statement of 12 October 2004, Official Report, columns 9–10WS, on missile defence, what the (a) names and (b) qualifications are of the United Kingdom appointments to the (i) Executive Steering Committee and (ii) Senior Management Committee of the joint US/UK Ballistic Missile Defence programme. [195412]

Mr. Hoon: The United Kingdom is represented on the Executive Steering Committee by the Ministry of Defence's Chief Scientific Advisor, Professor Roy Anderson, whose qualifications are available on the MOD website. The name of the UK's representative on the Senior Management Committee is being withheld in accordance with Exemption 12 to the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information, as are details of their qualifications. No specific qualifications are stipulated for these appointments, which are made on the basis of the individuals' current posts, experience and technical expertise.

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he expects that the United Kingdom will receive funding from the United States for arrangements provided for the facilitation of its missile defence programme; what the latest estimate is of what it would cost the United Kingdom to have the missile defence programme cover defence of the UK mainland; and if he will make a statement. [196401]

Mr. Hoon: I do not expect to receive funding for the new arrangements at RAF Fylingdales, since the United States have borne the full cost of upgrading the radar for missile defence purposes. The only other arrangements with the US in the missile defence field cover cooperative research and development programmes, for which there is no agreed budget with the US. Under the terms of the Research, Development, Test and Evaluation Annex MOU, announced to the House on 12 October, Official Report, columns 9–10WS, any such funding will be agreed on a project-by-project basis; to date there are no agreed projects. Regarding costs for the protection of the United Kingdom, the Government have taken no decisions about the need for such protection, nor the architecture and systems required. Since costs would be very dependent on these factors, as well as on the level of involvement that might be agreed with allies, it is not possible to give an estimate.

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the Government have received a request in connection with the stationing of missiles as part of the United States' Missile Defence Programme; and if he will make a statement. [196402]

Mr. Hoon: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 28 October 2004, Official Report, column 1372W, to the right hon. and learned Member for North-East Fife (Sir Menzies Campbell).

Nuclear Materials Transport

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department is providing military support to the BNFL ships due to transport weapons grade plutonium from Charleston to Cherbourg; and if he will make a statement. [190097]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 11 October 2004]: The Ministry of Defence did not provide support to the BNFL ships transporting plutonium from the USA to France.

Press Officers

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many press officers are employed in his Department; and how many were employed in each year since 1996–97. [195355]

Mr. Caplin [holding answer 1 November 2004]: On 2 November 2004 there were 16 press officers employed in the Ministry of Defence's central press office in London.

The number of press officers employed by the MOD in each year since 1996–97 is shown in the following table:

	Press officers
1996–97	12
1997–98	12
1998–99	13
1999–2000	18
2000–01	17
2001–02	20
2002–03	18
2003–04	18

The information in the table above relates to those employed in a press officer role at any time during the financial year. Furthermore, these figures relate solely to those press officers employed in the Department's central press office in London. The information does not include those employed as press officers in Regional Press Offices, Defence Agencies, the Permanent Joint Headquarters, single Service Commands and at unit level, some of whom have a press officer task in addition to their main role. Accurate information on this is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

RAF Aldergrove

David Burnside: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what environmental impact assessment has been made of the effect on service personnel and their families at RAF Aldergrove of the proximity of asbestos storage and destruction at Crosshill Quarry, Crumlin. [196074]

Mr. Ingram: None. It is the responsibility of the person making the planning application to conduct an environmental impact assessment. The Ministry of Defence has however, considered the health and safety implications of the proposed storage facility for service personnel and their families.

Ranger Stuart McMaster

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department has pressed for a criminal investigation of the circumstances of the death of Ranger Stuart McMaster at Skydive Ranch in Canada in 2002. [194984]

Mr. Ingram: The death of Ranger Stuart McMaster has been investigated by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP), who concluded that the circumstances of the death were not suspicious. Subsequently, the Royal Military Police Special Investigation Branch conducted additional inquiries to support HM Coroner's investigations. Should any new and substantive evidence come to light from any source, this will be considered and, if appropriate, referred back to the RCMP.

Request for Resources 1

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much of his Department's 2003–04 Request for Resources 1 underspend has been carried forward to the current financial year in (a) cash terms and (b) resource terms. [196468]

Mr. Ingram: None. Approval for carry-forward will be sought in Winter Supplementary Estimates to be put to the House later this month. End Year Flexibility entitlements, based on provisional outturn figures, were published in the Public Expenditure Outturn White Paper in July 2004 (Cm 6293).

Salisbury Plain

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what management procedures are in place in the Salisbury Plain training area to restrict military training on environmental grounds in response to severe weather conditions; and how quickly the military can respond to those procedures. [196020]

Mr. Caplin: As the hon. Member will have seen during his visit on 29 October, the Army Training Estate (Salisbury Plain) takes extremely seriously its environmental responsibilities. It has well established procedures to ensure that training plans can be adjusted quickly to take account of changing conditions. These procedures are kept under constant review and are adjusted and improved where appropriate.

Second World War 60th Anniversary

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what activities his Department's plans to commemorate the 60th anniversary of the end of the Second World War. [196582]

Mr. Caplin: I refer my hon. Friend to the announcement I made on 9 June 2004, Official Report, column 309. I shall be making a further announcement very shortly.

Soldiers (Media Contact)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what rules apply to serving soldiers speaking to the media about deployments and other operational matters; and if he will make a statement. [196269]

Mr. Ingram: The general rules for service and civilian MOD personnel governing contact with the media, and for writing or speaking in public, were re-issued on 29 October 2004 as Defence Council Instruction (DCI) General 200/04.

The key principle is that service and civilian MOD staff should only contact the media (or write or speak in public) on defence matters if they have prior authorisation. This principle is not new, and reflects previous versions of the DCI, and relevant sections of Queen's Regulations for the Armed Forces and the Civil Service Code.

The normal channels for contact with the media are the main defence press office, subsidiary press offices and press information centres or spokespeople with deployed forces. Nonetheless, large numbers of other personnel do have contact with the media on particular occasions in approved circumstances. Joint Warfare Publication (JWP) 3-45 extends and adapts the general provisions of the DCI to cater for the needs of deployed forces.

The rules are designed to ensure that standards of political impartiality and public accountability are maintained, and to enable appropriate support to be given to personnel.

The substantive content of the DCI and of the JWP will be made available in the 'Publications and Reports' section of the MOD website, and copies will be placed in the Library of the House.

Zimbabwe

Sir Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much financial assistance has been granted to British war (a) veterans and (b) widows living in Zimbabwe in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available; and what plans the Government have to provide further financial assistance. [195046]

Mr. Caplin: Information is not available in the form requested. However, 40 pensions are currently in payment to former service personnel resident in Zimbabwe. We do not have readily available information for previous years or on the value of the pensions in payments and this could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Disabled veterans and the widows of veterans may be entitled to a war pension or an Armed Forces Pension Scheme (AFPS) pension if a disablement or death was caused by service. We do not have information available for the number or value of such AFPS pensions in payment. However, the information available relating to war pensions in payment to people resident in Zimbabwe is set out in the following tables.

Table 1: The number of war pensions in payment with Zimbabwe as the recorded country of residence

	Type of pensioner
Numbers as at end of March	War disablement	War widow
2000	90	20
2001	75	20
2002	60	20
2003	50	20
2004	40	20

Notes:

1. All data have been rounded to the nearest five.
2. Figures exclude those cases with no recorded country of residence.
3. In each year, there were a small number (less than five) of entitled ongoing war disablement pensioners whose cases were dealt with manually rather than on the computerised payment systems. These are not included in the table.

Table 2: Average weekly amount of pension entitlement for war pensioners with Zimbabwe as the recorded country of residence

	Type of pensioner
Average weekly amount as at end of March	War disablement	War widow
2000	56.61	167.33
2001	54.24	168.62
2002	56.35	176.50
2003	58.56	180.24
2004	63.67	182.86

Notes:

1. The average has been calculated using the mean of all weekly entitlement information for those war pensioners included in Table 1.
2. Amounts include both the basic war disablement or war widows' pension and additional allowances.

In addition, records show that 18 payments of £10,000 each have been made under the Far East Prisoner of War and Civilian Internee Ex Gratia Payment Scheme to ex-servicemen or to the widows of servicemen living in Zimbabwe.

Upholder Class Submarines

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the Upholder Class submarines were sold to Canada with a warranty; and if he will make a statement. [194502]

Mr. Ingram: The Ministry of Defence (MOD) does not provide a warranty to Canada for the design and build of the Upholder Class submarines and neither does it provide a warranty for any equipment on board the submarine. The MOD has, however, undertaken to exercise on Canada's behalf right granted to it under any third party arrangement, such as the guarantee on the work by BAE Systems under contract to the MOD.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether HMCS Chicoutimi was manned by a Canadian crew during its sea trials prior to handover; and if he will make a statement. [195215]

Mr. Ingram: During sea trials, HMCS Chicoutimi, formerly HMS Upholder, was manned by a Canadian crew under the command of a Royal Navy Commanding Officer. At handover and acceptance the Canadian Commanding Officer designate assumed command.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Commission for Africa

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will make a statement on the Commission for Africa. [197191]

Hilary Benn: Following the second successful meeting of the Commission for Africa in Addis Ababa, the Commission has produced its consultation document, which is now available on its website. The Commission will be seeking the views of governments, civil society and businesses within and beyond Africa, on this document until 17 December. I hope that hon. Members will continue to feed in their views and comments on the Commission's work over the coming months. I expect that the final report will be published in March 2005.

Departmental Offices

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the cost of (a) decoration and (b) refurbishment of the London offices of the Department was in each of the last four years. [196142]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: The cost of redecoration and refurbishment of DFID's two London offices in each of the last four years were as follows:

1 Palace Street redecoration:

2000–01: Nil
2001–02: £7,975
2002–03: Nil
2003–04: £615

20 Victoria Street redecoration:

2000–01: Nil
2001–02: Nil
2002–03: Nil
2003–04: Nil

In addition to the above, major refurbishment projects were carried out on the two offices. These were:

1 Palace Street, 2000–01 to 2001–02, total project cost £27 million

20 Victoria Street, 2001–02, total project cost £1.2 million.

Fair Trade

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development whether it is his policy to ensure that hospitality within his Department is sourced from fair trade producers wherever possible within the boundaries set by the public procurement rules. [197060]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: I can confirm that it is DFID's policy that all tea, coffee and orange juice served within the Department is sourced from fair trade producers. Our external catering company also promotes and make use of fair trade products wherever possible in our staff restaurant.

Horn of Africa

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment his Department has made of the impact of the current drought in the Horn of Africa; and if he will make a statement. [196667]

Hilary Benn: The drought conditions in the Horn of Africa have caused serious stress to the most vulnerable communities in the region, in some cases resulting in humanitarian crisis. DFID is committed to ensuring the most urgent humanitarian needs are met. At the same time, and where possible, DIFD is working with governments to reduce vulnerability to these shocks.

Successive years of drier than normal rainfall conditions especially in the Horn of Africa, during the last five years, have led to reduced pasture and water availability in many key areas—northern Somalia, eastern and southern Ethiopia, eastern Kenya, parts of Eritrea, northern Sudan and a part of western Chad.

DFID has doubled humanitarian expenditure in Somalia and Sudan over last year. In Ethiopia DFID is responding to humanitarian needs with direct support and is also working with the Government of Ethiopia to reduce vulnerability to these kinds of shocks in a more sustainable way—while increasing the overall level of resources substantially. DFID has also recently agreed £5 million for humanitarian relief in affected parts of Kenya.

DFID continues to monitor the situation in Somalia and Eritrea and is considering the best means of assistance to address the most urgent humanitarian needs resulting from the drought there.

Overseas Aid

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what (a) expenditure was allocated prior to 6 November 2003 and (b) adjusted expenditure was allocated after 6 November 2003 to middle-income countries for (i) 2003–04, (ii) 2004–05 and (iii) 2005–06; and how much was allocated to (A) South Africa, (B) China, (C) Sri Lanka, (D) Russia, (E) Jamaica, (F) Guyana, (G) Brazil, (H) Bolivia, (I) Serbia and Montenegro, (J) Bosnia, (K) Albania, (L) Kosovo, (M) Belize and (N) Windward Islands in each year. [196036]

Hilary Benn: On 6 November 2003, I announced changes to DFID's planned bilateral aid programme allocations to middle-income countries for 2004–05 and 2005–06. The changes resulted from decisions taken on the Government's pledge on reconstruction and humanitarian aid in Iraq, together with DFID's commitment to increase the proportion of its bilateral aid going to the poorest countries to 90 per cent. by 2005–06.

Planned bilateral commitments to middle-income countries prior to 6 November 2003 totalled £234 million in 2003–04, £249 million in 2004–05 and £220 million in 2005–06. After 6 November the comparative figures were £443 million, £304 million and £228 million respectively, of which Iraq accounted for £207 million in 2003–04, £91 million in 2004–05 and £86 million in 2005–06.

The following table sets out the changes to allocations in the countries requested:

£ million

[1] This figure represents SACU MIC countries (South Africa, Botswana, Namibia and Swaziland).

[2] The reduced allocations for Brazil and Bolivia in 2005–06 are part of a move to a more regional approach, focused on support for the Inter-American Development Bank and the World Bank's Latin America operations. This is shown in the increased Latin America regional budget for 2005–06.

[3] Includes Belize/Windward Islands.

The figures for 2005–06 are indicative planning figures and will be reviewed as part of DFID's annual resource allocation exercise that will conclude in the new year.

Sudan

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many internally displaced people are (a) known and (b) estimated to be hosted by camps near Nyala in Darfur; and if he will make a statement. [196663]

Hilary Benn: The most recent UN Humanitarian Profile (October 2004) indicated that approximately 529,000 internally displaced people are in the South of Darfur, of which Nyala is the capital. A large proportion of these are in camps and settlements. The UN reports that 170,963 are internally displaced people known to be hosted in camps in the Nyala area. It is likely that there are further numbers of displaced persons in host communities and recent arrivals due to insecurity moving into the area.

On 2 November, the Government of Sudan forcefully relocated of 6–8,000 internally displaced people from the El Geer camp (previously known as the El Seraif camp) in the Nyala area. This occurred without prior consultation with the UN. It was therefore in breach of the established and agreed mechanism to determine voluntary return and movement of people. The UK strongly condemns any forced relocations, and through our Ambassador to Sudan, has made representations to the Government of Sudan to adhere to its obligations and commitments under the Memorandum of Understanding on Darfur, between the Government of Sudan and the International Organisation for Migration, which prohibits involuntary movement of internally displaced persons. This has been echoed by the EU and UN. DFID continues to monitor the situation closely.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what estimate his Department has made of the number of internally displaced people in (a) Sudan and (b) Darfur; how many there are estimated to have been in each month since September 2003; and if he will make a statement. [196664]

Hilary Benn: According to the latest UN Humanitarian Profile in October, there are 1.6 million people displaced in Darfur. It is estimated that a further 4 million have been displaced in Sudan as a whole. In addition there are a further 200,000 displaced from Darfur into Eastern Chad as refugees.

It is very difficult to provide accurate monthly figures of internally displaced people in Sudan as a whole of Darfur due to the issue of access constraints, notably due to problems of security affecting agency movements.

Due to very limited access in Darfur up until April 2004, the UN did not estimate figures on a monthly basis beyond its September 2003 report of 250,000 displaced people. From April 2004 until August, the UN estimated that there were just over 1 million displaced people. From September this figure reached 1.5 million. The reasons for this increase is due to the on-going violence and improving access to Darfur. For Sudan as a whole, the UN has not made monthly estimates. It has been estimated that in September 2003 there were 3.7 million displaced.

The UK continues to monitor the situation.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment his Department has made of the number of internally displaced people displaced by the conflict in (a) southern Sudan and (b) Darfur; and if he will make a statement. [196665]

Hilary Benn: It is difficult to determine accurately the numbers of people displaced in Darfur and southern Sudan primarily due to the problem of access. The latest United Nations Humanitarian Profile estimates that approximately 1.6 million people are internally displaced within Darfur as a result of the crisis there. It is estimated that up to 4 million people have been displaced in Sudan as a whole. In addition to this figure, it is estimated that there are 600,000 Sudanese refugees in neighbouring countries, of which 200,000 from Darfur have been displaced into Eastern Chad.

The UK continues to press both the Government of Sudan and the rebels to allow greater access as well as pressing all parties to sign and deliver on the Abuja humanitarian protocol. The UK strongly condemns any forced relocations of conflict affected persons.

ELECTORAL COMMISSION

Overseas Voters Electoral Register

Mr. Evans: To ask the hon. Member for Gosport, representing the Speaker's Committee on the Electoral Commission what action the Electoral Commission is taking to ensure that all British citizens who are living abroad are able to vote in any forthcoming general election. [196735]

Mr. Viggers: The Electoral Commission provides information and advice to British citizens living abroad and has produced a registration form for use by eligible British citizens. The Commission has also provided information to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office both for dissemination to its staff and for use when dealing with inquiries from British citizens resident abroad about their electoral rights in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Evans: To ask the hon. Member for Gosport, representing the Speaker's Committee on the Electoral Commission what estimate the Electoral Commission has made of the number of people (a) living in the US for 15 years or less and (b) living abroad who will be eligible to vote in a UK general election. [196734]

Mr. Viggers: The Electoral Commission has made no estimate of either the number of people living abroad, or of the number who have lived in the United States for 15 years or less, who will be able to vote in a United Kingdom parliamentary election.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Departmental Properties

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the properties occupied by (a) his Department and its predecessors and (b) its agencies in (i) 1997 and (ii) 2004, stating (A) for each and (B) in aggregate, the area; and what the aggregate rental value was in each year. [195129]

Phil Hope: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister was established in May 2002, and thus figures do not exist for 1997. The list of properties occupied on 1 April 2004 is as follows:

[1] Denotes freehold property. Figures for the rental value of these can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Except where indicated the above properties are occupied either wholly or partly on a leasehold basis. Where the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister shares the leasehold occupation with other Government Departments the figures represent only the space occupied by the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister.

Although the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has overall responsibility for the buildings occupied by Government Offices, they carry out functions on behalf of 10 Government Departments.

Green Spaces

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the Government's strategy is for improving inner-city green spaces. [195963]

Phil Hope: The Government have already established a programme to improve urban parks and green spaces. This is set out in the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's reports "Living Places—Cleaner, Safer, Greener" (ODPM 2002), and "Sustainable communities: building for the future" (ODPM 2003). The initiatives they contain are currently being implemented through the cross-government "Cleaner, Safer, Greener Communities" programme.

The 8 per cent. increase to 71 per cent. satisfaction with parks and open spaces over the last three years shows that the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's programme is working.

HMO National Licensing Scheme

Chris Ruane: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what cross-departmental co-operation his Department is encouraging with (a) police, (b) the fire service, (c) local government, (d) the Benefits Agency and (e) the Inland Revenue in implementing the National Licensing Scheme for Houses in Multiple Occupation. [196206]

Keith Hill: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has close working relations with other Government Departments and relevant bodies that have an interest in the Houses in Multiple Occupation (HMO) Licensing scheme. In particular we have worked very closely with the Local Government Association, the Home Office and the Department of Works and Pensions in the development of the licensing scheme and we shall continue to do so as we work towards in its implementation. Local authorities will be responsible for the implementation of the national scheme in their areas and we expect that other relevant bodies, such as the police and fire service, will work with them in achieving this, in so far as they are able to do so.

Affordable Housing

Ms Oona King: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) pursuant to the answer of 5 July 2004, Official Report, columns 450–51W, on affordable housing, what the affordability criteria for the new shared ownership properties are in each London borough; [196823]

(2) whether his Department monitors the number of shared ownership properties built in each London borough that are more expensive than the stated affordability criteria for that area. [196824]

Keith Hill: London boroughs' Unitary Development Plans contain policies on the provision of affordable housing generally, in accordance with national planning policy. These policies should define what the authority considers to be affordable in the local plan area in terms of the relationship between local income levels and house prices or rents for different types of households. Affordable housing policies in local plans should not be expressed in favour of any particular form of tenure.

Registered social landlords operating shared ownership schemes are expected to have regard to the affordability of schemes to first time buyers. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister does not monitor the affordability criteria for shared ownership properties by local authority area. However, the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister keeps the general operation of the scheme funded by the Housing Corporation under review to ensure that it continues to meet our policy objectives and the needs of the intended client group.

My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister announced on 26 September that the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is developing an initiative to help more first time buyers onto the first rung of the housing ladder. The aim is to achieve better value for money and more housing options by making smarter use of public sector-owned land and by driving down construction costs. Details are still being worked up and more information will be set out in the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's strategic plan.

Ms Oona King: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he expects the Housing Corporation to begin publication of the new Shared Ownership Performance Indicators; and if he will make a statement. [196825]

Keith Hill: The Housing Corporation has published the new Shared Ownership Performance Indicators on the 8 November 2004, on its Performance Indicator Profiles website www.housingpis.co.uk.

Ministers' Private Offices

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the running costs of Ministers' private offices in his Department have been in each year since 1997. [191380]

Phil Hope: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister was established following the Machinery of Government changes on 29 May 2002.

The total running costs (Admin Pay Cost and Admin Nonpay Costs) of the Ministers' private offices for the financial year 2003–04 was £1,556,886.0.

The final outturn figures for Departmental running costs are published in Departmental appropriation and resource accounts.

Rough Sleepers

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will place in the Library a copy of his Department's guidelines on the definition of rough sleepers used for surveys of their numbers. [196517]

Keith Hill: The guidance on the definition of rough sleepers for the purpose of count exercises was first published in 1996 and developed in partnership with charities and voluntary organisations helping people sleeping rough.

The definition of people who should be included in rough sleeper counts is clearly set out on page 5 in the guidance. It is:

> "People sleeping, or bedded down, in the open air (such as on the streets, or in doorways, parks or bus shelters); people in buildings or other places not designed for habitation (such as barns, sheds, car parks, cars, derelict boats, stations, or "bashes")."

A copy of the guidance will be placed in the Libraries of the House. The guidance is also available on the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's website at: http://www.odpm.gov.uk/stellent/groups/odpm_homelessness/documents/page/odpm_home_024817.hcsp

WALES

Consultants

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much expenditure his Department has incurred in each year since 2002 on employing external consultants to deal with the press and public relations of his Department; and if he will make a statement. [195449]

Mr. Touhig: None.

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much his Department spent in each year since 2002 on employing (a) external management consultants and (b) external human resources consultants; and if he will make a statement. [195764]

Mr. Touhig: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Castle Point (Bob Spink) on 12 May 2004, Official Report, column 183W.

The Wales Office has not incurred any cost relating to external management consultants and external human resources consultants since 1 April 2004.

Departmental Advertising Costs

Charles Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what the cost of (a) creative work, (b) media spend and (c) administration for his Department's advertising activity has been in each financial year since 1997–98, broken down by contractor. [197303]

Mr. Touhig: The Wales Office runs no publicity campaigns and hence has spent nothing on advertising since its creation in July 1999.

TRANSPORT

A27

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the (a) maximum and (b) average speeds of vehicles along the A27 Lewes bypass were in the most recent year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [196832]

Mr. Jamieson: The Highways Agency does not routinely measure vehicle speeds along the A27 Lewes bypass. Exceptionally, readings were taken at the approaches to the Ashcombe roundabout in February 2002, for use in the design of a proposed speed reduction scheme, as shown in the table:

Miles per hour

	Location	Maximum speed	Average speed
February 2002	Westbound approach to Ashcombe roundabout	Not available	61.1
February 2002	Eastbound approach to Ashcombe roundabout	Not available	56.9

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what data local authorities are required to collect on carbon dioxide emissions; and whether this includes emissions from road traffic; [196806]

(2) what the level of carbon dioxide emissions from road traffic was in each local authority area in the last year for which figures are available. [196808]

Mr. Jamieson: There is no legal requirement on local authorities to collect data on carbon dioxide emissions in their areas, and there are therefore no centrally held data on carbon dioxide emissions from road transport in each local authority area.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the processes involved in the collection of data on carbon dioxide emissions from road traffic. [196807]

Mr. Jamieson: The figures for total carbon dioxide emissions from UK road transport are compiled by the National Environmental Technology Centre (NETCEN) and published in the National Atmospheric Emissions Inventory (NAEI). They are based on DTI annual statistics on fuel sales and the carbon content of the fuels. The NAEI allocates this to different vehicle categories on the basis of fuel consumption rates and total kilometres travelled for each vehicle type.

EU Committees

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many times during the Greek presidency of the EU (a) the Advisory Committee on access for Community air carriers to intra-Community air routes, (b) the Advisory Committee on the definition and use of compatible technical and operating standards and specifications for the procurement of air traffic management equipment and systems and (c) the Committee on the harmonisation of technical requirements and administrative procedures in the field of civil aviation met; when and where these meetings took place; which UK Government expert was present at each meeting; what (i) technical and (ii) financial issues were raised by the UK expert at each meeting; what recommendations the Committee produced during that period; what actions were (A) proposed and (B) taken by (1) the EU and (2) the UK Government as a result of the Committee's recommendations; and if he will make a statement. [193389]

Mr. McNulty: A meeting of the market access advisory committee took place during 2003, to consider restrictions on the approaches to Zurich airport. The exact date of the Committee meeting is not recorded. The outcome of the meeting is referred to in Commission Decision 2004/12/EC. The UK Government were not represented. The other information requested would require an unreasonable diversion of resources to obtain.

There were no meetings of the other two Committees during the Greek Presidency.

Details of developments during the Greek Presidency can be found in Cm6097 "Developments in the European Union, January to June 2003, the Greek Presidency" which was laid before Parliament in January 2004 and is available at www.fco.gov.uk/commandpapers.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many times during the Greek presidency of the EU the Committee on (a) application of the legislation on access to the groundhandling market at Community airports, (b) unfair pricing practices in maritime transport and (c) application of the legislation on the minimum level of training for seafarers and the recognition of certificates issued by training institute or administrations of third countries met; when and where these meetings took place; which UK Government expert was present at each meeting; what (i) technical and (ii) financial issues were raised by the UK Government expert at each meeting; what recommendations the Committee produced during that period; what actions were (A) proposed and (B) taken by (1) the EU and (2) the UK Government as a result of the Committee's recommendations; and if he will make a statement. [193394]

Mr. McNulty: There were no meetings of the Committee on the application of the legislation on access to the groundhandling market at Community airports during the Greek presidency.

UK involvement in the Committee on unfair pricing is not the responsibility of the Department for Transport.

During the Greek Presidency, there were three meetings of the Committee on seafarer training, on 6 February, 12 February and 4 March 2003. All took place in Brussels. The meeting discussed the text of proposed amendments to Directive 2001/25. Department for Transport and Maritime and Coastguard Agency officials attended. The identities of the individuals concerned are withheld under exemption 15 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

The other information requested would require an unreasonable diversion of resources to obtain.

Details of developments during the Greek Presidency can be found in Cm6097 "Developments in the European Union, January to June 2003, the Greek Presidency" which was laid before Parliament in January 2004 and is available at www.fco.gov.uk/commandpapers.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many times during the Greek presidency of the EU the Committee on (a) application of legislation on application of tonnage measurement of ballast spaces in segregated ballast of oil tankers, (b) minimum requirements for vessels bound for or leaving Community ports and carrying dangerous or polluting goods and (c) the transfer of ships from one register to another within the Community met; when and where these meetings took place; which UK Government expert was present at each meeting; what (i) technical and (ii) financial issues were raised by the UK Government expert at each meeting; what recommendations the Committee produced during that period; what actions were (A) proposed and (B) taken by (1) the EU and (2) the UK Government as a result of the Committee's recommendations; and if he will make a statement. [193395]

Mr. McNulty: No meetings of these Committees took place during the Greek presidency.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many times during the Greek presidency of the EU (a) the Committee for the establishment of conditions for the interoperability of the trans-European high-speed rail system, (b) the Committee on the adaptation to scientific and technical progress of legislation concerning the transport of dangerous goods and (c) the Committee for the adaptation to technical progress of recording equipment in road transport (tachographs) met; when and where these meetings took place; which UK Government expert was present at each meeting; what (i) technical and (ii) financial issues were raised by the UK Government expert at each meeting; what recommendations each committee produced during that period; what actions were (A) proposed and (B) taken by (1) the EU and (2) the UK Government as a result of each committee's recommendations; and if he will make a statement. [193007]

Mr. McNulty: During the Greek Presidency there were two meetings of the Committee for the establishment of conditions for the interoperability of the trans-European high-speed rail system, on 4 February 2003 and 23–24 June 2003. Both took place in Brussels. The UK was represented at these meetings by the Strategic Rail Authority. The Committee is primarily responsible for assisting and overseeing the production, adoption and revision of Technical Standards of Interoperability (TSIs). The purpose of these specifications is to technically harmonise the European railway supply market. The Committee oversees the development of these TSIs for both the High Speed (96/48/EC) and the Conventional Interoperability (2001/16/EC) Directives. During the specified period, the Committee discussed principles for the drafting groups to adhere to in writing the TSIs and monitored the progress being made on the production of these TSIs. It also considered the cost-benefit analyses that accompany the TSIs and the co-ordination of notified bodies (organisations appointed in Europe to verify compliance with TSIs.). The other information requested would require an unreasonable diversion of resources to obtain.

The Committee on the adaptation to scientific and technical progress of legislation concerning the transport of dangerous goods met once during the Greek Presidency, on 4 June 2003 in Brussels. It discussed derogations and modifications of the annexes to three Directives on the transport of dangerous goods. It also discussed the date of implementation of the transportable pressure equipment Directive and the work of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods. The other information requested would require an unreasonable diversion of resources to obtain.

The Committee for the adaptation to technical progress of recording equipment in road transport (tachographs) met once during the Greek Presidency, on 26 June 2003 in Brussels. It considered and approved amendments to the technical specification to Commission Regulation (EC) 1360/2002, adapting to technical progress Council Regulation (EEC) 3821/85 on recording equipment in road transport (tachographs). These amendments were subsequently published as a corrigendum to that regulation.

Where a UK Government official attended the name is withheld under exemption 15 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Details of developments during the Greek Presidency can be found in Cm6097 "Developments in the European Union, January to June 2003, the Greek Presidency" which was laid before Parliament in January 2004 and is available at www.fco.gov.uk/commandpapers.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many times during the Greek presidency of the EU the (a) Advisory Committee on transport, (b) Community-Switzerland Transport Committee (rail and road) and (c) Committee on the system of charging for the use of transport infrastructure met; when and where these meetings took place; which UK Government expert was present at each meeting; what (i) technical and (ii) financial issues were raised by the UK Government expert at each meeting; what recommendations the committees produced during that period; what actions were (A) proposed and (B) taken by (1) the EU and (2) the UK Government as a result of the committee's recommendations; and if he will make a statement. [193011]

Mr. McNulty: Information in respect of the Advisory Committee on Transport is not centrally available.

The Management Committee for the Agreement between the European Economic Community and the Swiss Confederation on the carriage of Goods by Road and Rail met on 19 February 2003, in Brussels.

The Committee on the system of charging for the use of transport infrastructure did not meet during the Greek Presidency.

The other information requested would require an unreasonable diversion of resources to obtain.

Where a UK Government official attended the name is withheld under exemption 15 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Details of developments during the Greek Presidency can be found in Cm6097 "Developments in the European Union, January to June 2003, the Greek Presidency" which was laid before Parliament in January 2004 and is available at www.fco.gov.uk/commandpapers.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many times during the Greek presidency of the EU the (a) Committee for granting Community financial aid in the field of trans-European telecommunications networks, (b) Advisory Committee on the management of the research programme for management and storage of radioactive waste and management of the Community plan of action in the field of radioactive waste and (c) Advisory Committee on measures to be taken in the event of a crisis in the market in the carriage of goods by road and for laying down the conditions under which non-resident carriers may operate national road haulage services within a member state met; when and where these meetings took place; which UK Government expert was present at each meeting; what (i) technical and (ii) financial issues were raised by the UK Government expert at each meeting; what recommendations the committees produced during that period; what actions were (A) proposed and (B) taken by (1) the EU and (2) the UK Government as a result of the committee's recommendations; and if he will make a statement. [193012]

Mr. McNulty: UK involvement in the Committees at (a) and (b) is not the responsibility of the Department for Transport.

There were no meetings of the Advisory Committee on crisis management in the haulage industry during the Greek Presidency.

Details of developments during the Greek Presidency can be found in Cm6097 "Developments in the European Union, January to June 2003, the Greek Presidency" which was laid before Parliament in January 2004 and is available at www.fco.gov.uk/commandpapers.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many times during the Greek presidency of the EU (a) the Committee on implementation of Protocol 9 to the Act of Austria concerning transport by road and rail and combined transport (Ecopoints), (b) the Committee for the adaptation to technical progress of roadworthiness tests of vehicles and (c) the Committee for a transparent system of harmonised rules for restrictions on heavy goods vehicles involved in international transport on designated roads met; when and where these meetings took place; which UK Government expert was present at each meeting; what (a) technical and (b) financial issues were raised by the UK Government expert at each meeting; what recommendations each committee produced during that period; what actions were (i) proposed and (ii) taken by (1) the EU and (2) the UK Government as a result of each committee's recommendations; and if he will make a statement. [193015]

Mr. McNulty: The Ecopoints Management Committee met twice during the Greek Presidency, on 7 May and 10 June 2003, in Brussels. The identity of the UK Government official who attended is withheld under exemption 15 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. The other information requested would require an unreasonable diversion of resources to obtain.

There were no meetings of the Committee for the adaptation to technical progress of roadworthiness tests of vehicles during the Greek Presidency.

As the Community has yet to adopt legislation on harmonised driving restrictions no such Committee exists.

Details of developments during the Greek Presidency can be found in Cm6097 "Developments in the European Union, January to June 2003, the Greek Presidency" which was laid before Parliament in January 2004 and is available at www.fco.gov.uk/commandpapers.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many times during the Greek presidency of the EU the Committee on the driving licence met; when and where these meetings took place; which UK Government expert was present at each meeting; what (a) technical and (b) financial issues were raised by the UK Government expert at each meeting; what recommendations the Committee produced during that period; what actions were (i) proposed and (ii) taken by

(1) the EU and (2) the UK Government as a result of the Committee's recommendations; and if he will make a statement. [193019]

Mr. McNulty: The European Commission's Committee on the driving licence met three times during the Greek presidency of the EU, on 7 February 2003, 28 March 2003 and 29 April 2003, in Brussels. Officials from the Department for Transport, the Driving Standards Agency and the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency attended as necessary to cover the matters raised. Their identities are withheld under exemption 15 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. Items discussed at these meetings included medical standards, driving licence codes (which codify the entitlements which an individual's licence confers) and vehicle adaptation for disabled people, driving test requirements and Commission research projects. The other information requested would require an unreasonable diversion of resources to obtain.

Details of developments during the Greek Presidency can be found in Cm6097 "Developments in the European Union, January to June 2003, the Greek Presidency" which was laid before Parliament in January 2004 and is available at www.fco.gov.uk/commandpapers.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many times during the Greek presidency of the EU (a) the Advisory Committee for the application of legislation on the development of the Community railways met, (b) the Advisory Committee for the application of uniform principles on costing for railway undertakings and (c) the Advisory Committee for the harmonisation and comparability of the accounting and annual accounts of railway undertakings met; when and where these meetings took place; which UK Government expert was present at each meeting; what (i) technical and (ii) financial issues were raised by the UK Government expert at each meeting; what recommendations each Committee produced during that period; what actions were (A) proposed and (B) taken by (1) the EU and (2) the UK Government as a result of each Committee's recommendations; and if he will make a statement. [193020]

Mr. McNulty: The Advisory Committee for the application of legislation on the development of the Community railways met once in this period, on 31 January 2003, in Brussels. The UK was represented by officials from the Department for Transport and the Office of the Rail Regulator. The identity of the individuals concerned is withheld under exemption 15 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. The main agenda items were a tour de table on the status of the implementation of the Infrastructure Package Directives (Directives 2001/12/EC, 2001/13/EC, 2001/14/EC), reports on managing the transition process until full implementation of the infrastructure package Directives, and an outline from the European Commission on its intentions for future legislation in the railways sector. The Commission subsequently adopted new proposals in March 2004 as the Third Rail Package.

Also during the Greek Presidency, the European Commission published a draft proposal for a recommendation on the use of a common European format for licences issued in accordance with Council Directive 95/18/EC on the licensing of railway undertakings. This recommendation was based on advice from the Advisory Committee for the application of legislation on the development of the Community railways. The Commission adopted the recommendation on 7 April 2004 and published in the Official Journal on 20 April 2004 (L313).

Neither the Advisory Committee for the application of uniform principles on costing for railway undertakings nor the Advisory Committee for the harmonisation and comparability of the accounting and annual accounts of railway undertakings met in this period.

Details of developments during the Greek Presidency can be found in Cm6097 "Developments in the European Union, January to June 2003, the Greek Presidency" which was laid before Parliament in January 2004 and is available at www.fco.gov.uk/commandpapers.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many times during the Greek presidency of the EU (a) the Advisory Committee for the application of legislation on the conditions under which non-resident carriers may operate national road passenger transport services within a member state, (b) the Committee on the reciprocal recognition of national boatmasters' certificates for the carriage of goods and passengers by inland waterway and (c) the Advisory Committee on aids to transport by rail, road and inland waterway met; when and where these meetings took place; which UK Government expert was present at each meeting; what (i) technical and (ii) financial issues were raised by the UK Government expert at each meeting; what recommendations each Committee produced during that period; what actions were (A) proposed and (B) taken by (1) the EU and (2) the UK Government as a result of each Committee's recommendations; and if he will make a statement. [193021]

Mr. McNulty: None of these Committees met during the Greek Presidency. Details of developments during the Greek Presidency can be found in Cm6097 "Developments in the European Union, January to June 2003, the Greek Presidency" which was laid before Parliament in January 2004 and is available at www.fco.gov.uk/commandpapers.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many times during the Greek presidency of the EU (a) the Committee on the development of trans-European transport networks, (b) the Committee for granting Community financial aid in the field of trans-European energy networks and (c) the Committee for granting Community financial aid in the field of trans-European transport networks met; when and where these meetings took place; which UK Government expert was present at each meeting; what (i) technical and (ii) financial issues were raised by the UK Government expert at each meeting; what recommendations each Committee produced during that period; what actions were (A) proposed and (B) taken by (1) the EU and (2) the UK Government as a result of each Committee's recommendations; and if he will make a statement. [193022]

Mr. McNulty: The Committee on the development of trans-European transport networks met twice during the Greek Presidency, on 4 March and 3 June 2003, in Brussels. The agenda comprised items regarding progress towards completion of the TEN-T and its further development.

UK involvement in the Committee for granting Community financial aid in the field of trans-European energy networks is not the responsibility of the Department for Transport.

The Committee for granting Community financial aid in the field of trans-European transport networks met once during the Greek Presidency, on 30 June 2003, in Brussels. The agenda comprised issues regarding the financing of the network and the projects of common interest on it.

Where a UK Government official attended the name is withheld under exemption 15 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

The other information requested would require an unreasonable diversion of resources to obtain.

Details of developments during the Greek Presidency can be found in Cm6097 "Developments in the European Union, January to June 2003, the Greek Presidency" which was laid before Parliament in January 2004 and is available at www.fco.gov.uk/commandpapers.

Fair Trade

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether it is his policy to ensure that hospitality within his Department is sourced from Fair Trade producers wherever possible within the boundaries set by the public procurement rules. [197058]

Charlotte Atkins: At the Department's headquarters building, Great Minster House, the hospitality arrangements include the provision of Fair Trade bulk brew filter coffee and Down to Earth Fair Trade enveloped tea. The restaurant also serves the above as well as Fair Trade sweets and chocolate.

Heathrow Airport

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what criteria are used to made decisions on changing airport flight paths into London Heathrow airport. [196534]

Charlotte Atkins: Routes within UK airspace are subject to regulation by the Civil Aviation Authority (CAA) and changes are agreed by the CAA against criteria set out in its Civil Air Publications 724 and 725, available on the CAA website. These include consideration of the operational, environmental, economical and safety impacts of any changes. Under section 66 of the Transport Act 2000, the Secretary of State for Transport has issued Directions to the CAA requiring it to take account of environmental and other considerations and to seek his approval in certain circumstances.

There are no set routes for arriving aircraft between the point where they leave a holding "stack" and the point where they join the Instrument Landing System for final approach. Aircraft are individually directed by Air Traffic Control who ensure safe traffic separation, but they are also required whenever practicable to follow "continuous descent approach" with a view to minimising noise impacts.

Aircraft departing Heathrow are required to follow specific paths called noise preferential routes which are designed as far as possible to minimise over-flight of built-up areas.

Motorcycle Casualties

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the evidential basis is of his statement that there is an increase in motorcycle casualty rate per mile at 33BHP. [195999]

Mr. Jamieson: We have made no such statement. However, we are aware of reports attributed to the Government that we would like motorcyclists to have experience on a 125cc motorcycle for two years before gaining access to a larger motorcycle. We certainly believe that some motorcyclists who gain their licence via Direct Access arrangements, allowing them to ride large motorcycles without earlier experience on a smaller machine, are at risk, simply through inexperience of riding a powerful motorcycle.

The Advisory Group on Motorcycling (AGM), amongst other things, concluded that since the majority of novice riders choose to pass their test via the Direct Access route, as a relatively fast route to big bike riding, it is timely for the Government to consider its effectiveness (a copy of the report is lodged with the House). We will do so, in the context of wider ranging AGM suggestions and recommendations for the future of motorcycling. Should that review lead to proposals for change, we would consult before implementing them.

Road Schemes (Birmingham)

Richard Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the likely effects of the Birmingham Northfield Relief Road project in relation to (a) transport movements in the area and (b) regeneration of South West Birmingham. [196718]

Charlotte Atkins: The Northfield Relief Road was given provisional approval for funding under the Local Transport Programme in December 2000 in the light of an appraisal carried out by Birmingham city council which included consideration of the contribution the scheme would make to improved transport movements and regeneration of the area it serves. The appraisal included benefits such as improved journey times, improved access for pedestrians and buses and improving the vitality and viability of the Northfield shopping area. Following completion of statutory procedures an updated appraisal was received in July 2004 in support of a request from Birmingham city council for full approval of this scheme which is currently being considered.

Terrorism

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures have been taken to protect the security of railway tunnels and bridges since 2001. [196308]

Mr. McNulty: The Department for Transport, British Transport Police and other central Government agencies support the rail industry in security matters affecting operations and infrastructure. It would be inappropriate to provide details of the specific measures taken for obvious reasons

Uninsured Drivers

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps his Department has taken in conjunction with the Metropolitan police to reduce the number of uninsured drivers on the roads of Greater London. [196536]

Mr. Jamieson: The steps already taken to deal with the problem of uninsured driving include a review of motor insurance arrangements in the UK by Professor David Greenaway and, following publication of his report on 11 August, the setting up of an implementation board to see that action follows.

Working jointly with the insurance industry we now plan to introduce legislation, improve procedures and design education, publicity and enforcement programmes to drive down uninsured driving. These measures will be available to all police forces in Great Britain.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Aircraft Emissions

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the projected improvement is in emissions from aircraft engines over the next 25 years on which Government predictions of emissions are based. [195088]

Charlotte Atkins: I have been asked to reply.

In February 2004, the Government published technical reports in support of the Air Transport White Paper that include projections of improvement in aircraft engine emissions. The report "Aviation and Global Warming" includes assessments of fleet renewal, fuel efficiency improvement and emissions improvement. The report Air Quality Assessments Supporting the Government's White Paper "The Future of Air Transport" focuses more on prospects for engine improvements in emissions of oxide of nitrogen (NO_x). Technology projections relate to different timescales up to 2030 and span a range of emissions performance given uncertainty over proving technologies and bringing them to market. These technical reports are available at www.aviation.dft.gov.uk

Animal By-products Regulations

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether carcases of horses and donkeys may be buried on the owner's land under the Animal By-products Regulations. [196270]

Mr. Bradshaw: The regulation allows member states to apply for various derogations regarding the disposal of animal by-products, and, among others, we have applied the derogation to permit the burial of dead pet animals. However, this does not automatically mean that all horses and donkeys may be buried.

The definition of a pet animal given within the regulation is: any animal belonging to species normally nourished and kept, but not consumed, by humans for purposes other than farming.

The situation with regard to equines is complicated. Although it can be argued that humans within the UK do not consume members of the equine family, the UK does export horses/ponies which may be used for human consumption. Under a strict interpretation the EU regulation would, therefore, ban the burial of pet equines but we would expect local authorities, who enforce the legislation, to take a sensible approach to the burial of horses that are clearly pets.

Bees

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much funding the Government have given to the National Bee Unit for the current financial year; how many bee inspectors there are; what estimate has been made of the number of bees under serious threat from the varroa mite; and what advice and assistance is given by the National Bee Unit to beekeepers in the South West. [194159]

Alun Michael: In the current financial year the National Bee Unit will receive funding of £1,235,000 from Defra and £283,000 from the Welsh Assembly Government.

There are 45 bee inspectors in England and Wales of whom 36 are part-time, seasonal bee inspectors.

It is estimated that there are 250,000 honey bee colonies in England and Wales, maintained by some 37,000 beekeepers. Since varroa is now endemic throughout almost the whole of the United Kingdom, its presence is a challenge to all beekeepers but this can be managed through good bee husbandry.

In addition to the statutory inspection programme, which has given rise to over 900 visits and the inspection of almost 4,000 colonies in Devon, Cornwall and Somerset between April and September 2004, the NBU provides laboratory diagnoses, the destruction or treatment of colonies infected with European Foul Brood, and a testing programme for varroa resistance to treatment with pyrethroids. Over 2,500 beekeepers attended advisory lectures, field demonstrations and liaison meetings provided by NBU in the South West in 2003–04. Beekeepers in the region also have access to a national telephone help-line, advisory leaflets and the NBU website.

Burnside Farm

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when her Department was first informed of the existence of a video of Burnside Farm taken by Northumberland Trading Standards officers on 23 February 2001; and when her Department first obtained a copy of the video. [194308]

Mr. Bradshaw [holding answer 28 October 2004]: A Defra official was present at Burnside Farm on 24 February 2001 when the video of the conditions on the farm was being made by Northumberland Trading Standards Department. Defra officials saw some of the video when it was shown at Robert Waugh's trial in May 2002. Defra recently obtained copies of the video when it was referred to in correspondence received by Defra officials on 30 September 2004.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether a representative of her Department was present at the trial of Mr. Bobby Waugh for breach of his waste food feeding licence in May 2002. [194307]

Mr. Bradshaw [holding answer 28 October 2004]: The trial was attended by four officials from Defra, three of whom gave evidence.

Civil Servants

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the average length of continuous service for civil servants within the Department is. [194399]

Alun Michael: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend, the Minister of State, Cabinet Office (Ruth Kelly) on 3 November 2004, Official Report, column 268W.

Conservation Areas

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the (a) scientific and (b) socio-economic objections to the designation of (i) Bolton Fell Moss and (ii) Solway Moss as special areas of conservation are; and when she expects to conclude each consultation. [194493]

Mr. Bradshaw: Generic scientific issues raised by the objectors to the proposed SAC designations on Bolton Fell and Solway Moss are:

> that sites which are mainly areas of bare peat is contrary to EU and Joint Nature Conservation Committee (JNCC) guidance; > sites with bare peat do not contain National Vegetation Classification (NVC) plant communities typical of raised bogs;
> the designation of these two peatland sites in conjunction with others already classified as cSACs is not necessary to achieve favourable conservation status for raised bogs;
> the National Peatland Resource Inventory has been wrongly interpreted which has led to far more degraded raised bogs being selected as pSACs than is necessary to satisfy the guidance received from the European Commission;
> the site selection process was partial and ad hoc and the criteria was written after sites were selected instead of developing the selection criteria and then selecting sites;
> English Nature did not consider selecting sites which were wooded, afforested or contained peat underlying agricultural sites;
> English Nature placed undue emphasis on the restorability and/or size of the site when selecting sites and this overrode other considerations;
> that contextual information required to list appropriate areas of active and degraded raised bogs is not available, and finally, that English Nature did not follow JNCC guidance on the number of sites to be selected from the first moderation process.

Objections on socio-economic grounds to both designations are:

> local employment issues concerning the closure of peat-extraction operations at either site;
> loss of revenue to landowner from peat-extraction operator; after-use restriction on ability of landowner at Bolton Fell Moss to generate income following end of peat extraction.

Once the scientific objections have been resolved, and it is confirmed that the sites meet the selection criteria for SAC protection, they will be designated forthwith. It is not currently clear how long this will take.

Contagious Equine Metritis

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the last outbreak of contagious equine metritis in British horses was recorded; and where. [194937]

Mr. Bradshaw: The last outbreak of contagious equine metritis in Great Britain occurred in late 2002 in Staffordshire, with the last individual case linked to this outbreak occurring in early 2003, again in Staffordshire.

Cormorants

Sir Paul Beresford: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs pursuant to the answer of 20 October, Official Report, columns 695–96W, on cormorants, what action is being taken through the European Union to tackle cormorant numbers at a European level. [194811]

Mr. Bradshaw [holding answer 1 November 2004]: At the European level the REDCAFE group (Reducing the conflict between cormorants and fisheries on a Pan-European scale) was set up in 2001, to synthesise current cormorant and fisheries information and identify and evaluate methods of reducing Europe-wide conflict between conservationists and fishery interests. Initial conclusions emphasise site-specific management as the key. Further work has been agreed, on an inter-disciplinary approach taking account of social and economic interests. Discussions at ORNIS (the EC Committee covering the Birds Directive), also covered the Development of a Framework for Biodiversity Reconciliation Action Plan (RAP): The data from REDCAFE will be input into this process, along with other European initiatives such as the IMEW (Integrated Management of European Wetlands). The RAP aims to fully quantify the problems, develop a solution and provide synthesis and dissemination of the results. This process will provide a participatory decision strategy. The approach is being supported with EU research funding, and member states are also encouraged to participate.

Departmental IT

Brian White: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what percentage of the Department's (a) implemented and (b) planned computer systems use open source software; and what plans are in place to raise this level. [195657]

Alun Michael: The information is as follows:

(a) The percentage of implemented computer systems in Defra that use open source operating systems such as Linux is small, less than 5 per cent., but many Defra systems comply with the Government eGIF standards that allow easy and open exchange of data.

(b) Defra has recently outsourced its IT operations. There are no targets imposed on the supplier to implement open source software, a level playing field will apply in procurement of software solutions. The IT supplier is bound to work within eGIF standards and many of the planed IT systems will include a significant proportion of open source code. In addition the supplier will be conducting a number of additional pieces of work to test the business benefits to Defra of extending the use of open source.

Directive 2002/49/EC

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the timetable is for transposing Directive 2002/49/EC into UK law. [195203]

Alun Michael: Directive 2002/49/EC relating to the assessment and management of environmental noise requires that member states of the European Union must comply with Directive 2002/49/EC on the assessment and management of environmental noise by 18 July 2004 (Article 14). Unfortunately, due to the practical complexities of the Directive the UK has been unable to meet this deadline.

We are continuing to work to comply with the Directive as soon as possible and we will be putting our proposed approach to complying with the Directive to public consultation in due course. We will use the responses to the consultation to inform our final approach to complying with the Directive.

Equine Exports

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many equines were exported from the UK in each of the past 10 years; and if she will make a statement. [193517]

Mr. Bradshaw [holding answer 27 October 2004]: Available information on the number of equines certified for export from the UK is as follows:

	Number
1996	1,169
1997	8,119
1998	11,086
1999	9,579
2000	9,176
2001	14,284
2002	10,785
2003	9,130

The figures are derived from computer based systems introduced in late 1996 relating to export health certification from the UK. The figures are subject to updating and amendment.

Except for part of 2001 and 2002, the figures exclude the movement of certain horses to France and Ireland which, under a Tripartite Agreement, do not require export health certification.

Fallen Stock

Nick Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what discussions she has held with organic certification bodies on the effect that non-burial of fallen stock might have on the soil's microbiology. [193624]

Mr. Bradshaw: Although no specific consultation has taken place with organic certification bodies the Department undertook an extensive public consultation process in respect of the Animal By-products Regulation, which bans on-farm burial of fallen stock. Several of the certification bodies, notably the Soil Association, have made the Department aware of their concerns that the effect that non-burial of fallen stock might have on the soil's microbiology. These concerns have been duly noted.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many farmers have signed up to the National Fallen Stock Scheme. [196112]

Mr. Bradshaw: None. We will not know how many farmers will register until the scheme begins on 22 November.

Government Grants

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs which funding streams have been allocated by her Department using a funding formula which includes rankings or scores on the Index of Multiple Deprivation 2000; and if she will list the amount of funding allocated in such a way (a) nationally by the Department or (b) to all Government sponsored bodies reporting to the Department. [191529]

Alun Michael: Defra has four funding streams which have been allocated taking account of the Index of Multiple Deprivation. In all cases the Index has contributed to identifying the least well performing rural areas in terms of economic productivity but, other factors, including quality of application and nature of enterprise, are taken into account in awarding projects. The first two funding streams below are both part of the Department's Rural Voluntary and Community Sector and Social Inclusion Programme.

(a) Nationally:

(1) A contribution to The Pensions Partnership Fund which seeks to increase benefits uptake by the elderly. £834,000 has been allocated in 2004–05 to fund projects in the priority wards in rural areas.

(2) An action research contract examining social enterprise in rural areas. Some £500,000 has been allocated in 2004–05 to fund projects in four English Regions, with priority being given to those which operate in priority wards.

(3) For the Warm Front programme, the Index of Multiple Deprivation 2000 has not been used as a sole indicator for any allocation purposes. It is considered with a number of other indices—including the fuel poverty indices under the English House Condition Survey. In 2004–05 the Fuel Poverty budget is £169 million.

(4) Defra uses the Index as one of a number of measures which contribute to the priority scores of proposed flood and coastal erosion risk management improvement projects, when considering which projects should receive grant from the ring-fenced national budget. The budget being allocated in 2004–05 is £56 million across local authorities and internal drainage boards.

(b) Government Sponsored Bodies:

The Environment Agency is a Non-Departmental Public Body sponsored by Defra and its share of the flood and coastal erosion risk management improvement projects funding in 2004–05 is £76 million.

Heathrow

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what representations she has received on the methodology for drawing up a noise map for Heathrow. [195090]

Alun Michael: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, has not received any representations on the methodology for drawing up a noise map for Heathrow.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans her Department has to publish (a) a strategic noise map for Heathrow, (b) an action plan to manage noise issues around Heathrow and (c) a public consultation on plans to manage noise levels at Heathrow. [195204]

Alun Michael: Strategic noise maps and action plans for Heathrow and other specified airports will be produced as part of the requirements of Directive 2002/49/EC on the assessment and management of environmental noise (the Environmental Noise Directive). There will be public consultation on the action plans as this is also a key requirement of the Environmental Noise Directive. Details of proposed options to transpose the Directive will be put out to public consultation in due course.

Noise from aircraft using Heathrow is regulated by my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Transport, under section 78 of the Civil Aviation Act 1982. The DfT's Stage 1 consultation on night restrictions from 30 October 2005 closed on 29 October and the second stage of this consultation process will be undertaken in due course.

Daytime noise at Heathrow was considered in last year's consultation on the "Future of Air Transport in the UK—South East" and "The Future of Air Transport" White Paper (Cm 6046) set out (paras 11.52–53) the Government's view that all practicable steps should be taken to prevent any deterioration in the noise climate there.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when her Department will start the work to produce a strategic noise map for Heathrow. [195205]

Alun Michael: Details of our proposed options to transpose the Directive will be put out to public consultation in due course. That will include proposals regarding the competent authorities for the production of strategic noise maps for airports under Directive 2002/49/EC on the assessment and management of environmental noise (the Environmental Noise Directive).

A pilot project to produce noise contours for Heathrow in terms of noise indicator required by the Environmental Noise Directive (L_{den}) was carried out in 2003 by the Civil Aviation Authority for Defra as part of the development of the National Ambient Noise Strategy. These contours have been published and can be seen at www.defra.gov.uk/environment/noise/mapping/aviation/index.htm

In addition daytime noise contours for Heathrow are produced annually for the Department for Transport.

Local Food Chains

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what advice she is offering to (a) central and (b) local government on public procurement with regard to assisting local food chains. [194283]

Alun Michael: Defra has published advice on its website to help central and local government implement the Public Sector Food Procurement Initiative (PSFPI). A key objective is to increase the opportunities for small and local suppliers to compete to supply food to public sector bodies.

Within the EC policy and legal framework they can inform local suppliers of forthcoming contract opportunities and explain to them how the procurement process works and what is expected of them. There is also scope to specify more in-season food, rather than out of season or exotic produce that can only be supplied from abroad, and to organise the size of contracts and lots within contracts so that small and local suppliers have more chance of being able to meet demands. Public bodies do, of course, have an overarching duty to secure value for money and so must ensure that the measures they adopt to encourage more supplies of local food are proportionate and justified. They are also required by the EC treaty, the EC procurement directives and the UK regulations that implement them to ensure that public procurement is fair, transparent and not used to discriminate by setting up barriers to free trade. We are also encouraging public sector bodies to work with their food service companies to play an active part in achieving this aim by ensuring that local suppliers are given opportunities to be part of their supply chains, provided they are able to provide value for money and meet their requirements on quality, consistency of supply and food safety etc.

The newly restructured PSFPI website contains more detailed guidance, best practice case studies (including one for South Gloucestershire schools) and links to other sources of useful information. URL: http://www.defra.gov.uk/farm/sustain/procurement/index.htm.

Online Publications

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the Department's target is for the interval between publication of (a) departmental announcements and documents and (b) material published by public bodies for which her Department has oversight and their posting online; and what the average interval was in the latest year for which figures are available. [195398]

Alun Michael: Defra statements, announcements and documents are published on the departmental website as soon as possible—generally on the same day or the following day. Operational procedures and resources of staff and equipment are continually reviewed and reassessed with the aim of minimising the number of occasions when it is not possible for statements to be published on the website on the same day as they are made available through other channels.

Information on posting targets for material published by public bodies for which Defra has oversight is not collated centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Rural Services

Charles Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the total cost was of producing and distributing the Rural Services Review, including staff time allocated to the project. [195277]

Alun Michael: The Rural Services Review, published on 1 November 2004, continues the commitment from the Rural White Paper "Our Countryside: the future" to inform rural people how they can ensure fair access to public services for their community.

The total cost of production and distribution of the Rural Services Review is set out in the table:

Cost of Rural Services Review

	Supplier	Final spend (£) (plus VAT)
Design	Stairway Communications	9,814 plus 383 total = 10,197
Print (50,000 run)		17,800 (no VAT charged)
Distribution (of 30,000 copies)		[1]14,000
Copywriting	COI	15,540
Photography	Total	[1]3,315
Proof reading	COI[1]	324
Staff costs		[2]22,864
Total		[1]84,040

[1] These costs are based upon estimates as final invoices have not yet been received.

[2] Defra staff costs for this project were £22,864. This figure is based upon average pay rates, by grade and location and includes accommodation overheads.

The total production, distribution and staff costs give a unit cost for the Rural Services Review of £1.68 a copy.

The Rural Services Review came about as a consequence of the evaluation of the Rural Services Standard, which took place during 2003. The review builds upon the recommendations of the independent evaluation report produced by the University of Gloucester. A copy of this report is available on the Defra website at http://defraweb/rural/pdfs/rss_review.pdf.

The Rural Services Review identifies key standards that affect people living and working in the countryside and illustrates the difference the standards can make, through the use of case studies. Copies of the review are available through Defra publications (08459 556000) or online at www.defra.gov.uk/rural/services.

Sustainable Energy (CHP Provisions) Order

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what measures her Department (a) has undertaken and (b) plans to undertake to comply with the Sustainable Energy (CHP Provisions) Order 2003. [194430]

Alun Michael: The Framework for Sustainable Development on the Government Estate requires all Departments to source at least 15 per cent. of electricity from Good Quality Combined Heat and Power by 2010 (with allowance made for those Departments that already purchase 100 per cent. renewable energy.) Within Defra the following action has been taken:

(a) In the year ending 31 March 2004 Defra and its Executive Agencies sourced 15.3 per cent. of electricity used from Good Quality CHP plant on our own estate.

(b) A further Good Quality CHP plant is to be installed in a major refurbishment project at one of Defra's HQ buildings.

Tsar Appointments

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many tsars have been appointed with responsibilities which cover part of the work of her Department; and if she will make a statement. [191918]

Alun Michael: The Secretary of State has not appointed any tsars covering the work of any part of the Department.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Sustainable Energy (CHP Provisions) Order

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Solicitor-General what measures (a) the Crown Prosecution Service, (b) the Serious Fraud Office, (c) the Treasury Solicitor's Office and (d) the Legal Secretariat to the Law Officers (i) has undertaken and (ii) plans to undertake to comply with the Sustainable Energy (CHP Provisions) Order 2003. [194438]

The Solicitor-General: The Crown Prosecution Service, the Serious Fraud Office, the Treasury Solicitor's Department and the Legal Secretariat to the Law Officers do not currently occupy premises whose heating and electrical supplies are provided by CHP systems. Each Department regularly reviews their heating and electrical power consumption to ensure that the supplies they use are obtained and consumed in the most sustainably efficient and cost effective way.

SCOTLAND

Cullen Report

Mr. John Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland for what reasons parts of the Cullen report on Dunblane are to be protected for 100 years; and if he will make a statement. [190639]

Mr. Darling: This is a matter for the Scottish Executive.

The Public Records (Scotland) Act 1937 makes provision for the preservation, care and custody of the public records of Scotland. There is not, however, any statutory basis for closure of records created by Scottish public bodies.

By contrast, in England and Wales the Public Records Act 1958 (as amended by the Public Records Act 1967) sets a statutory "closure period" of 30 years after which records must, with limited exceptions, be made available to the public. The 1937 Act does not impose similar obligations on Scottish Executive departments, but in practice those procedures are followed in Scotland.

The criteria for closures longer than 30 years were defined in a White Paper on Open Government published in 1993 (Cm 2290), which stated that it is for the department responsible for depositing the material to decide on the closure period.

Documents containing information about individuals, whose disclosure would cause either substantial distress, or endangerment from a third party to persons affected by disclosure or their descendants can be subject to a variable closure period of between 40 and 100 years.

At the conclusion of Lord Cullen's inquiry, the papers were lodged with the then Scottish Record Office. As is normal practice, the closure periods were identified by the SRO, in consultation with the Secretary to the Inquiry and the Crown Office and Procurator Fiscal Service. In light of the obvious sensitivities in relation to the information about children and alleged offences against them the productions were closed for 100 years. This closure was in accordance with the Government guidelines published in the White Paper "Open Government" Cm 2290 (1993) and Lord Cullen was content with these arrangements.

However, subsequently the Lord Advocate decided that the material from the Dunblane inquiry should be catalogued by staff at the National Archives of Scotland in a way which did not lead to the identification of children. The cataloguing of the productions has recently been completed. Officials from the Crown Office and Procurator Fiscal Service are currently reviewing this material and considering what information is suitable for release either in its entirety or in an edited format. However, the sensitive nature of the information contained in some of the material will obviously prevent its release before the end of the 100-year closure period.

Gambling Bill

Mr. Lazarowicz: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has been informed that the Scottish Executive plans to bring forward a sewel motion in respect of the proposals contained in the Gambling Bill; and if he will make a statement. [196311]

Mrs. McGuire: Following consultation with Scottish Ministers, the Gambling Bill contains provisions conferring functions in reserved areas on the Scottish Ministers. Since the Bill therefore varies the executive competence of the Scottish Ministers the consent of the Scottish Parliament will therefore be sought by the Scottish Executive in accordance with the Sewel Convention.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Accident Group

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what investigation has been undertaken into the closure of the Accident Group; and if she will institute an inquiry by her Department into the affairs of that company. [195115]

Mr. Sutcliffe: A winding up order was made against AG (Manchester) Ltd. (formerly called The Accident Group Ltd.) on 15 January 2004. As a result, the Official Receiver was appointed first liquidator and has a duty to investigate the causes of the company's failure and generally it's promotion, formation, business, dealings and affairs and the conduct of its directors. These investigations are continuing.

Better Health Global

Mr. Alan Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps her Department has taken to investigate the activities of the Better Health Global group of companies in (a) Ireland, (b) Belgium, (c) Australia and (d) Canada; and if she will make a statement. [195837]

Jacqui Smith: The Department does not have authority to investigate the affairs of companies which are registered and trading in a foreign jurisdiction and does not comment on the affairs of live companies that are not the subject of insolvency proceedings.

Mr. Alan Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions her Department has held with the Crown Prosecution Service about the conduct of the directors of Better Health Global Ltd. and the BHG Group of companies; and if she will make a statement. [195839]

Jacqui Smith: None.

Correspondence

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will review the correspondence from the hon. Member for Nottingham, North regarding the case of Mr. Frederick Jones of Neston Drive, Bulwell, Nottingham, following the judgment in Meadows v. North London Securities. [196286]

Mr. Sutcliffe: I would like to thank my hon. Friend for bringing this case to my attention. You will understand that I am unable to intervene in individual cases such as this, which must be resolved by agreement between the parties or by recourse to the courts.

As my hon. Friend is aware I have written to John Vickers, Chair of the Office of Fair Trading, alerting him to the complaints made to me about this lender by a number of hon. Members.

Credit Contracts

Helen Southworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will set an upper limit on interest rates for consumers taking out credit contracts. [196390]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The DTI commissioned research into the effect of interest rate ceilings in France, Germany and the USA, which found that: lenders do not provide credit for small loans repayable over a short period, excluding some low-income consumers from the market or leading others to take out larger loans than they need; the choice of products is reduced, limiting competition; some low-income consumers will take out credit on products that have extra charges that are not included in the interest rate calculation, but which low income consumers are particularly likely to incur, such as late payment charges; and the percentage of consumers who admitted to having borrowed from unlicensed or illegal lenders was twice as high in Germany and France as in the UK.

Helen Southworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps she is taking to ensure that customers taking out credit agreements have clear, comprehensive and understandable information on (a) interest charges, (b) other charges and (c) penalties. [196391]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The White Paper "Clear, Fair and Competitive—The Consumer Credit Market in the 21st Century" set out the Governments' plans to increase the quality and transparency of information available to consumers about the costs and other terms of credit at all stages in the contractual process.

To that end, Regulations have already been made governing the advertising of consumer credit; the provision of pre-contractual information; and the form and content of credit agreements.

The Consumer Credit (Advertisements) Regulations 2004 which came into force on 31 October this year—require lenders to present a balanced picture of the costs of a product; and establish the typical APR as the prime comparator.

The Consumer Credit (Agreements) (Amendment) Regulations 2004 will require lenders to disclose full details about interest and other charges in the credit agreement. Penalties are illegal under consumer credit law. Interest charges will need to be listed under the prescribed "Key Financial Information" heading. Other charges will need to be listed under the "Other Financial Information" and "Key Information" headings. The Consumer Credit (Disclosure of Information) Regulations 2004 require the lender to provide similar information in advance of the agreement being made. Both of these Regulations come into force on 31 May 2005.

The Government have also announced their intention to introduce a Bill as soon as parliamentary time permits that will include proposals to require creditors to provide debtors with regular information about the state of their accounts throughout the life of the agreement, including:

providing an annual statement showing the activity on the account for the previous 12 months for fixed term agreements of more than one year in length; providing information about sums in arrears when the debtor gets into arrears for all forms of credit (e.g. loans and credit cards);

providing information about fees, charges and interest applied to the account where there is a default; and providing debtors with information sheets published by the OFT and setting out user-friendly and relevant information about managing debt issues and seeking advice with all arrears and default notices.

It is proposed that failure by a creditor to provide the required information may mean that the creditor cannot enforce the agreement or recover interest in respect of the period of their failure.

EU Regional Development Aid

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions she has had in respect of the future round of EU Regional Development Aid. [196787]

Ms Hewitt: I and my ministerial colleagues are in regular contact with Ministers from other member states, representatives of the European Commission, and Members of the European Parliament regarding the reform of the EU Structural and Cohesion Funds. At the same time, we meet regularly with stakeholders in the UK and their representatives to explain the Government's position on reform of the funds.

EU Committees

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many times during the Greek presidency of the EU the Standing Committee on the Approximation of the Laws relating to Construction Products met; when and where these meetings took place; which UK Government expert was present at each meeting; what recommendations the Committee produced during that period; what actions were (i) proposed and (ii) taken by (A) the EU and (B) the UK Government as a result of the Committee's recommendations; and if she will make a statement. [195572]

Keith Hill: I have been asked to reply.

The Standing Committee on Construction met once during this period on 13–14 May 2003 in Brussels. The UK Government experts present were Tariq Nawaz and Stephen Phillips.

Recommendations produced by the Committee during this period were in the form of agreements to proposals and consultations of the Committee and are contained either in the minutes of the above meeting or the exchanges of correspondence which have been made available in the Library of the House. The actions proposed and taken by the EU and the UK Government as a result of the Committee's recommendations are contained either in the minutes of the meeting or in the correspondence referred to above.

Loan Debts

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what her policy is on loan sharks; and if she will make a statement. [195772]

Mr. Sutcliffe: Loan sharks are moneylenders who operate illegally and unregulated outside the current Consumer Credit Licensing regime.

Illegal loan sharks prey on vulnerable consumers and their sometimes brutal methods of obtaining repayment can cause great suffering and hardship in communities.

To tackle this problem on 6 September 2004 I launched the Loan Shark Pilot, which will be operated by Birmingham and Glasgow Trading Standards Department. Both Departments have established teams of investigators who will investigate complaints received from members of the public about illegal money lenders.

The Government have committed £2 million over a period of two years to the project. A campaign has commenced in both cities advertising the presence of the illegal money lending teams and they have both been inundated with calls from members of the public. The teams are already investigating more than 40 live cases. The Birmingham team has recently announced that one arrest has been made.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Classroom-building Projects

Dan Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much ring-fenced money for classroom building projects has been given to schools in (a) Wansdyke, (b) Bath and North East Somerset and (c) South Gloucestershire in each year since 1997. [196763]

Mr. Miliband: Capital funding is largely allocated to local authorities and schools by needs related formulae and supported through the Single Capital Pot. Decisions on how resources should be allocated are taken locally in accordance with their asset management plans. The capital allocations for Bath and North East Somerset and for South Gloucestershire in each year since 1997 are set out in the table. The Department does not hold details of capital allocations by constituency.

£000

	Bath and North East Somerset	Bath and North East Somerset of which basic need[1]	South Gloucestershire	South Gloucestershire of which basic need[1]

Combined Heat and Power

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what percentage of (a) schools and (b) universities in England utilise combined heat and power. [195942]

Mr. Miliband: Neither DfES nor HEFCE collect these statistics. However we do know that there are a large number of CHP installations in universities. They are popular where there are large energy loads. Some local authority district CHP schemes supply a school as well as local housing and other community buildings. Smaller micro-chp units are also currently being trialled where the school has a large enough heat load throughout the year.

Criminal Record Checks

Michael Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what procedures are in place (a) to check the criminal records of civil servants in his Department and agencies responsible to his Department who have access to computer databases containing confidential information on the public and (b) to ensure that there can be no improper use of computer databases containing confidential information on the public; and if he will make a statement. [194604]

Mr. Charles Clarke: My Department undertakes 'Character Enquiry' checks prior to any unconditional offers of employment being made as part of its recruitment procedures. The procedure requires potential recruits to complete a stencil detailing any current or previous criminal convictions. Any declared convictions are followed up by obtaining details directly from the relevant courts. Decisions on whether the information would prevent the Department from offering the individual an appointment are taken as appropriate at this stage.

Additionally, procedures are in place for serving staff to report any convictions received since their employment with the Department commenced. If the position requires working in direct contact with children or vulnerable adults, Criminal Record Bureau (CRB) checks are carried out prior to any unconditional offers of employment being made. The information is available to staff and managers via the Department's Intranet. Personal criminal convictions, are potentially disciplinary issues, as is the failure to declare a conviction.

It is DfES policy to ensure that its IT systems and the information they contain are secure, while letting those in DfES carry out its business. All access to the Internet are monitored internally by the Department's Information Services. Again, IT misuse policy is available through the Department's Intranet system, and staff are required to familiarise themselves with the Department's guidance on IT security.

Departmental IT

Brian White: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what percentage of the Department's (a) implemented and (b) planned computer systems use open source software; and what plans are in place to raise this level. [195658]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Currently less than 1 per cent. of the Department's computer systems use Open Source Software in the Department. Also none of the planned computer systems will make use of Open Source Software.

Our future use of Open Source Software will follow the Government policy as published in version 2 of the Open Source Software policy on 28 October 2004.

The draft policy document is available for viewing at http://www.govtalk.gov.uk

Departmental Press Releases

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many press releases have been issued by his Department in each month of 2004; and if he will make a statement. [195454]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The number of press notices issued by the Department for Education and Skills in each month of 2004 is as follows:

Education Funding

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the total funding per pupil in cash terms is for each local education authority for 2004–05, using the same format as that for 2003–04 and prior years as set out on his Department's website. [195922]

Mr. Miliband: It is not clear to which figures the hon. Member refers. The table shows local education authorities in England in 2003–04 and 2004–05, the total funding per pupil in cash terms.

The information requested has been placed in the Libraries.

Dan Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much on average per child was contributed from public funds to the education of (a) primary school children and (b) secondary school children in (i) Wansdyke, (ii) Bath and North East Somerset and (iii) South Gloucestershire in each year since 1997 for which figures are available. [196770]

Mr. Miliband: The following tables give the total funding per Primary and Secondary pupil in real terms from 1997–98 to 2004–05, separately for the Bath and North East Somerset and South Gloucestershire local education authority areas. Funding information on a constituency basis is not available.

Notes:

1. Price Base: Real terms at 2003–04 prices, based on GDP deflators as at 30 June 2004.
2. Figures reflect relevant sub-blocks of education SSA/EFS settlements and exclude the pensions transfer to EPS and LSC.
3. Total funding also includes all revenue grants in DfES Departmental Expenditure Limits relevant to pupils aged 3–10 and 11–15 and exclude EMAs and grants not allocated at LEA level. For those LEAs in receipt of advance of [illegible] under the transitional support arrangements for 2004–05, [illegible]nce grant funding is included in the year of payment (2004–05). There will be a consequential reduction in DfES grant for these LEAs in future years (either 2006–07 and 2007–08 or 2006–07 to 2008–09, depending on the terms on which the advance was given to the LEA).
4. The pupil numbers used to convert £ million figures to £ per pupil are those underlying the SSA/EFS settlement calculations plus PLASC 3-year-old maintained pupils and estimated 3–4 year olds funded through state support in maintained and other educational institutions where these are not included in the SSA pupil numbers.
5. Rounding: Figures are rounded to the nearest 10.
6. Status: 2004–05 figures are provisional as some grants have not yet been finalised/audited.
7. 1997–98 figures for LEAs subject to Local Government Reorganisation in that year have been estimated, pro-rata to their post LGR figures.

Education Maintenance Allowance

Jon Cruddas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many students in the Dagenham constituency are receiving education maintenance allowance. [196451]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: By the end of October 967 young people from the Barking and Dagenham local authority area had received an EMA Notice of Entitlement. Of those, 722 had enrolled for EMA at a school or college and 672 had received an EMA payment. These figures continue to improve as those who apply late have their applications assessed and then become eligible for payment.

Entry to Employment Programme

Phil Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many young people have taken part in the Entry to Employment programme since it was introduced in 2003. [196345]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: This is a matter for the Learning and Skills Council. Mark Haysom, the Council's Chief Executive, will write to the hon. Member with this information and a copy of his reply will be placed in the House Library.

Phil Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many young people started on the Entry to Employment programme in 2003–04; and how many places for new starts will be available in 2004–05. [196479]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: This is a matter for the Learning and Skills Council. Mark Haysom, the Council's Chief Executive, will write to the hon. Member with this information and a copy of his reply will be placed in the House Library.

Foreign Language Teaching

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many and what percentage of primary schools offer a foreign language to their pupils. [196456]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: On 30 September this year my Department published the results of research, undertaken in the 2002–03 academic year, into the extent and nature of foreign language learning activities at Key Stage 2. This research highlighted that 44 per cent. of all schools teaching Key Stage 2 pupils in England were offering language learning programmes in some form, with 35 per cent. using curriculum time to do so. This represents a significant increase since the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority and University of Warwick published research in 2000 that stated that 20 per cent. of primary schools were teaching foreign languages.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what steps he is taking to promote foreign language teaching in schools; and if he will make a statement. [196457]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: Since the publication of the National Languages Strategy in December 2002, we have made much progress with promoting Modern Foreign Languages in both primary and secondary schools.

Nineteen local education authorities have taken up Key Stage 2 language pathfinder roles to develop ways of delivering primary languages; we are consulting on a draft framework for the teaching and learning of Key Stage 2 languages; we have recently committed £5 million to support primary language learning in 2005–06; and by the end of this year will have trained well over 1,000 new teachers with a modern foreign language specialism.

A Framework to support the teaching, planning and learning of Modern Foreign Languages at Key Stage 3 was introduced into schools in 2003, and is already being used widely. A new voluntary assessment scheme to recognise and accredit individuals' language skills—The Languages Ladder—is currently being piloted in three languages and will be made available to all schools in eight languages from September 2005. We are also seeking to increase the range of vocational and academic options that are available to young people who wish to learn a language at Key Stage 4.

Foster Carers

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what plans he has to introduce a national standard for fostering. [195084]

Margaret Hodge: All fostering agencies are already under a statutory obligation to comply with the Fostering Services Regulations 2002 and are expected to meet the Fostering Services National Minimum Standards 2002. The Standards are intended to assess the quality of care provided by fostering service providers in relation to the needs of looked after children. The Commission for Social Care Inspection is responsible for the inspection and regulation of fostering service providers against these standards and encourages improvement in the quality of the care provided through its inspection reports and performance assessment of councils.

Foundation Schools

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what steps he intends to take to increase accountability (a) in decision-making and (b) in the use of public funds for (i) governors of foundation schools and (ii) governors appointed by charitable foundations. [196091]

Mr. Miliband: The existing legal framework within which foundation schools operate provides for accountability in decision-making and the use of public funds. All governors of maintained schools of any category, however they are elected or appointed, are subject to the same requirements with regard to their conduct, and all governing bodies are collectively accountable for their decisions. Governors are equally accountable to those who appoint them, to the school's funders, and to parents, pupils and the wider community.

Free Fruit Scheme

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what estimate he has made of the annual cost of extending the free fruit scheme to Key Stage 2 pupils. [195746]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I have been asked to reply.

No estimate has been made about the annual cost of extending the school fruit and vegetable scheme to Key Stage 2 pupils.

The Department has set aside £77 million over the 2004–05 and 2005–06 financial years to fund the school fruit and vegetable scheme. A full evaluation of the scheme is due in the first half of 2005.

Once the rollout is complete at the end of November, two million four to six-year-olds in 16,500 local education authority-maintained infant, primary and special schools across England will be receiving a fresh piece of fruit or vegetable each school day.

Free School Meals

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what proportion of pupils are eligible for free school meals in each ward, listed in descending order. [192770]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: It is the Department's policy not to publish figures about individual schools unless the schools concerned have had the opportunity to check or confirm that information with the performance tables.

Free school meal figures are not routinely checked with schools. Certain wards only have one individual school for instance. Therefore as my answer contains confidential information, I will communicate privately with my right hon. Friend.

Free School Transport

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many children in North Somerset receive free transport to school provided by the local authority. [196616]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: We do not routinely collect that information. However a joint survey of school transport policies, expenditure and pupil numbers transported, conducted in 2003 by DfES and the Confederation of Education Service Managers (ConfEd) reported the following:

Number of pupils receiving free or assisted home to school transport

Type of school setting	Compulsory school age	Sixth formers	All pupils

Primary	893	—	893
Secondary	2,088	184	2,272
Special	284	84	368

Havering School Funding

John Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much public funding has been allocated to schools within the London borough of Havering under the school Standards Fund since 1998. [196708]

Mr. Miliband: Standards Fund grants are allocated to local education authorities, not directly to schools. The amount allocated to schools is a matter for local decision. The following table gives the Standards Fund recurrent and capital allocations, including local authority contributions, for the London borough of Havering from 1998–99 to 2004–05. From 1999–2000 the Standards Fund included a grant to support the statutory reduction of infant class sizes. In 2003–04 this class size funding was transferred to Education Formula Spending baselines. The amount transferred for Havering was £535,000.

Home Education

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills pursuant to his answer of 27 October 2004, Official Report, columns 1265–66W, on home education, what assessment he has made of the reasons underlying the one-year fall in the number of pupils not in school in Somerset local education authority in 2003. [195498]

Mr. Miliband: My Department has carried out an investigation into the one-year fall in the pupil numbers not in school in Somerset local education authority in 2003. At the time of the 2003 data collection the figures returned to the Department were checked and confirmed by Somerset LEA as being correct on 8 March 2003.

However, following the hon. Member's previous question, further investigation has been carried out. The LEA has now informed the Department that a group of pupils was omitted from the 2003 return. They have supplied an amended 2003 total.

A revised table showing this amendment is given as follows:

Number of pupils not in school and being otherwise educated 1997–2004—Somerset local education authority and England

	Somerset local education authority
	Pupils aged 5–10	Pupils aged 11–15	Pupils aged 16 plus	Total

National Grid for Learning

John Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what assessment he has made of the operation of the National Grid for Learning within the London borough of Havering. [196712]

Mr. Charles Clarke: My Department does not assess the operation of the National Grid for Learning (NGfL) programme, or its successor the ICT in Schools programme, at individual local authority level. Each authority is responsible for making sure that ICT in Schools' funding is used to best effect in support of national priorities. The NGfL Pathfinders and ImpaCT2 studies investigated the roll out and effect of the programme nationwide. These reported the different approaches to implementing the then National Grid for Learning taken by authorities and ImpaCT2, for example, reported that the effective use of ICT could improve levels of pupil attainment by the equivalent of half a grade at GCSE.

Ofsted Inspections

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many complaints were made about Ofsted inspections in 2003–04. [196696]

Mr. Miliband: This is a matter for Ofsted. HM Chief Inspector, David Bell, will write to my hon. Friend and place a copy of his letter in the Library.

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills whether he expects the new school inspection system to be in place nationwide by September 2005. [196697]

Mr. Miliband: Subject to parliamentary scrutiny, time and approval, we plan for the new system to be operational as planned.

Pupil Exclusions

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many children with special educational needs were subject to (a) a permanent exclusion and (b) a fixed term exclusion in the most recent period for which data is available. [194763]

Margaret Hodge: The requested information relating to permanent exclusions is given in the table.

The Department started to collect information on fixed period exclusions from summer term 2003 and published some information about the first term on 29 July. However, there were concerns about the reliability of some of the data. They were not sufficiently robust to provide an analysis by special educational needs. We expect that future surveys will result in improved data quality.

Maintained primary, secondary and all special schools[1,2]: Number of permanent exclusions by special educational needs (SEN)—2002/03 (estimates)[3]—England

	Number of permanent exclusions	Percentage of permanent exclusions	Percentage of school population[4]
Pupils with SEN	6,170	66	0.45
of which:
Pupils with statements of SEN	1,030	11	0.43
SEN pupils without statements	5,140	55	0.46

[1] Includes middle schools as deemed.

[2] Includes maintained and non-maintained special schools.

[3] Estimates based on incomplete pupil level data.

[4] The number of excluded pupils expressed as a percentage of the school population by SEN.

Note:

Totals may not appear to equal the sum of constituent parts because numbers have been rounded to the nearest 10.

Annual Schools Census

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the latest figures are for the average periods between a child (a) with special educational needs and (b) without special educational needs being permanently excluded from school and being placed in a Pupil Referral Unit. [194765]

Margaret Hodge: The requested information is not collected centrally.

Religious Education

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what plans he has to extend the recently issued guidelines regarding the study of religious faiths other than Christianity to faith schools. [196076]

Mr. Miliband: The Qualifications and Curriculum Authority (QCA), in partnership with the Department, recently launched a new non-statutory national framework for Religious Education to support the delivery of high quality religious education (RE) in schools. While it provides for opportunities for pupils to study all of the principal religions in Great Britain, and other religious traditions and secular philosophies in line with the Government's goals of inclusion, tolerance and diversity, it also reinforces the position of Christianity as the dominant religion of this country. All of the major UK faith and belief communities and professional groups were involved in its development.

While the Framework is non-statutory, we will be encouraging Standing Advisory Councils on Religious Education (SACREs) and Agreed Syllabus Conferences (ASCs) to use it in drawing up their locally agreed syllabus for schools in their area. Voluntary aided schools of a religious character are required to deliver RE within the tenets of their own faith, but we hope they too will see the value of the Framework and adopt it to enhance their existing RE provision.

School Leavers

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what percentage of pupils left full time education at the age of 16 in England in the last year for which figures are available. [196164]

Mr. Miliband: The provisional estimate of young people aged 16 who were not in full-time education in the previous academic year, 2003–04, is given in Table 1. Many of these were in Apprenticeships or other training, so the proportion of young people in the age cohort who were not in any education or training is also shown in the table.

Table 1

	Percentage
Not in full-time education[1]	27.6
Not in any education or training	12.9

[1] This group comprised of those who were in work based learning programmes; employer funded training; other education and training; and those who were not in any education or training

These estimates are taken from snapshot information as at the end of the calendar year. They are taken from the Department's Statistical First Release (SFR 18/2004) entitled, 'Participation in Education, Training and Employment by 16–18 year olds in England: 2002 and 2003'.

School Standards Grant

Mr. Dhanda: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) if he will make a statement on proposals to review the school standards grant; [195548]

(2) if he will assess the merits of (a) increasing the number of bands for the school standards grant and (b) allocating the school standards grant on a per pupil basis. [195611]

Mr. Miliband: Revenue funding for schools will increase by some £3.5 billion overall between 2005–06 and 2007–08. That means increased revenue funding for schools by about £1,300 per pupil or 45 per cent. in real terms in the 10 years since 1997.

We look forward in the months ahead to discussions with schools and local education authorities on the best way to deliver all the resources which support schools. There will be a new ring-fenced budget for schools from 2006–07 and the Government are committed both to delivering three year budgets for schools and to rationalising the existing funding streams.

Secondary School Funding

Claire Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the funding per head for secondary school pupils in Watford constituency (a) was in 1997 and (b) is in 2004. [196573]

Mr. Miliband: The information requested is produced according to local education authority areas rather than districts within an area. Watford is a district of Hertfordshire local education authority. Total funding per pupil for pupils aged 11–15 in Hertfordshire was £3,260 in 1997–98 and £4,090 in 2004–05, an increase of 25 per cent. in real terms. This includes funding via Education Formula Spending/Standard Spending Assessment and Grants, and excludes the pensions transfer to EPS.

Notes

1. Price base: Real terms at 2003–04 prices, based on GDP deflators as at 30 June 2004.
2. Figures reflect relevant sub-blocks of education SSA/EFS settlements and exclude the pensions transfers to EFS made in 2003–04 and 2004–05.
3. Total funding also includes all revenue grants in DfES Departmental Expenditure Limits relevant to pupils aged 11–15 and exclude Education Maintenance Allowances (EMAs) and grants not allocated at LEA level.
4. The pupil numbers used to convert £ million figures to £ per pupil are those underlying the SSA/EFS settlement calculations. The figures are rounded to the nearest £10.
5. The 2004–05 figures are provisional as some grants have not yet been finalised/audited.

Sustainable Energy (CHP Provisions) Order

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what measures his Department (a) has undertaken and (b) plans to undertake to comply with the Sustainable Energy (CHP Provisions) Order 2003. [194431]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: My Department remains committed to reducing energy use. We already have a number of measures in place including the purchase of renewable energy and a building heated from the incineration of waste material. Performance is regularly monitored, reviewed and updated to ensure continuous improvement.

The Framework for Sustainable Development on Government Estate target already forms part of the Department Energy Strategy. Plans to integrate the requirements of the CHP Sustainable Energy Act 2003 are already being considered. These include the purchase of electricity from these sources and the feasibility of developing on-site CHP plant capability.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Departmental Press Releases

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many press releases have been issued by her Department in each month of 2004; and if she will make a statement. [195441]

Hut Preservation (Ross Island)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions she has had with Ministerial colleagues in relation to the preservation of the huts built on Ross Island in Antarctica by the expeditions of Robert Falcon Scott and Ernest Shackleton; and if she will make a statement. [196106]

Mr. Caborn: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has discussed the on-going preservation and conservation of the huts of the Antarctic explorers Scott and Shackleton with the Prime Minister of New Zealand which has territorial responsibility for the Ross Dependency in Antarctica where the huts are located. In September, my right hon. Friend the Minister for Media and Heritage met the High Commissioner of New Zealand to discuss proposals by the New Zealand Antarctic Heritage Trust to preserve the huts.

The British Government are keen to support New Zealand's efforts to preserve these historic huts. In 2002, the Government, through the Government of the British Antarctic Territory, donated £70,000 to support the proposed Ross Sea heritage restoration project developed by the New Zealand Antarctic Heritage Trust. Officials in my Department have also been exploring funding options to assist with this but no suitable sources of funding within the UK heritage sector have been found. However, the Government will continue to support fundraising efforts for the preservation of these unique huts.

DEFENCE

Administration Costs

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to the answer of 22 July 2004, Official Report, column 483W, on Ministry of Defence administration costs, what estimate he has made of the Ministry of Defence's administration budget for financial years 1997–98 to 2007–08. [196580]

Mr. Ingram: The Ministry of Defence has agreed to introduce an administration costs control regime to cover the Spending Review 2004 period. The MOD is still working with the Treasury to finalise the details of what will be encompassed and how it will be measured. The new regime will take effect in the financial year starting in April 2005. There are no plans to estimate administration costs for previous years.

Army Support Vehicles

Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the recent contract for Army support vehicles will include (a) electronics and (b) the ability to add electronics. [196215]

Mr. Ingram: Support vehicles will include an embedded electronic engine management system, which will record modifications to the engine, assist in fault diagnosis, control fuel usage and exhaust emissions, together with recording a profile of the vehicles' usage.

It will be possible to upgrade this system in the future, if required.

Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the requirement by the Army for a range of family medium vehicles will include the possibility of purchasing the US Stryker family of vehicles. [196216]

Mr. Ingram: Studies planned for the Assessment Phase will consider a range of options for delivering the Future Rapid Effects System capability. The Assessment Phase work is in its very early stages, therefore it is too early to pre-judge the merits of potential candidates.

Capital Commitments

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to note 20 of his Department's Annual Report and Accounts 2003–04, HC 1080, if he will list the capital commitments that have been contracted but not provided for. [196466]

Mr. Ingram: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Combat Clothing

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence where the production centres that will produce combat clothing for the armed forces are located. [195597]

Mr. Ingram: The Ministry of Defence generally places contracts for combat clothing with UK and EU suppliers who, depending on the item involved, choose to either manufacture or sub-contract at locations in the UK, mainland Europe and overseas.

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures his Department has taken to ensure that the quality of combat clothing is maintained. [195598]

Mr. Ingram: In any clothing contract, including combat clothing, suppliers identify controls within their accredited quality systems to ensure performance levels are maintained. The Ministry of Defence requires ISO accreditation from prime contractors and has quality surveillance methods, including sample testing, to ensure that finished items are compliant with the contracted specification.

Departmental Databases

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will place in the Library a list of the tables and related fields of the (a) Defence Balanced Scorecard Application, (b) RAPID database, (c) CDRT database, (d) the CLIME database, (e) Defence Procurement Agency's OATS database and (f) Defence Procurement Agency's COO database, together with diagrams showing the table relationships; [196477]

(2) if he will place in the Library a list of the tables and related fields of (a) his Department's parliamentary questions database, (b) his Department's GODIVA database, (c) the Defence Bills Agency Monthly Journal of Records database, (d) his Department's Departmental Financial Management System database, and (e) the Defence Procurement Agency's ORACLE financial analyser database together with diagrams showing the table relationships. [196476]

Mr. Ingram: I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Departmental Management Groups

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library organisational diagrams showing his Department's (a) top level budget holders, (b) intermediate management groups and (c) management groups for financial years 1999–2000 to 2003–04. [196578]

Mr. Ingram: Yes.

HMS Sandown/Inverness/Bridport

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to transfer (a) HMS Sandown, (b) HMS Inverness and (c) HMS Bridport to an overseas navy. [194683]

Mr. Ingram: The Ministry of Defence's Disposal Services Agency (DSA) is seeking to secure a Government-to-Government sale for these vessels with an overseas navy. Initial exploratory discussions have taken place with several overseas nations and will continue.

Iraq

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what assessment he has made of changes in the security situation in the south east of Iraq since June; [193306]

(2) whether the security situation in south east Iraq has improved since June. [193307]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 25 October 2004]: British personnel and other Coalition members are working closely with the Iraqi security forces to increase stability in the south east of Iraq. There have been peaks in insurgent activity, such as that in August, which have presented particular challenges to the Coalition but progress continues to be made towards successful elections in January.

Military Afloat Reach and Sustainability

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he expects the solution for the Military Afloat Reach and Sustainability (MARS) requirement to be achieved as part of a Private Finance Initiative. [193127]

Mr. Ingram: The Military Afloat Reach and Sustainability (MARS) project is still in its early stages and, as yet, no final decisions have been made on the scope of the capability sought and how best to deliver that requirement. However, from the studies so far, it is not currently envisaged that a Private Finance Initiative (PFI) solution will be adopted, although innovative solutions, including Public Private Partnering principles, will be welcomed.

RAF Lyneham

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with Virgin Atlantic about further usage of RAF Lyneham. [192173]

Mr. Ingram: Following a Question Book correction, pursuant to the answer given to the hon. Member by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, Food and Rural Affairs on 19 October 2004, Official Report, column 595W, I can confirm that Defence Ministers have had no such discussions.

Submarines

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what warranty comes from the manufacturer on submarines commissioned into the Royal Navy; and if he will make a statement. [195219]

Mr. Ingram: It is the Ministry of Defence's policy to obtain Express Warranties from the contractor for the procurement of technically complex or safety critical equipment, such as submarines, where these offer value for money. Express Warranties are likely to offer greater benefit than remedies implied by General Law, are clearly defined, and include warranty claims procedures that provide greater certainty. The last submarines to be commissioned into service with the Royal Navy were the Vanguard Class and each submarine had a 12-month Express Warranty from the manufacturer.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many submarines commissioned into the Royal Navy since 1974 have had defects affecting their seaworthiness identified and remedied during their sea trials prior to handover; [195220]

(2) how many submarines commissioned into the Royal Navy since 1974 developed defects affecting their seaworthiness within six months of handover. [195221]

Mr. Ingram: Before a submarine goes to sea it undergoes an extensive series of trials and equipment setting-to-work in the shipyard. It is not unusual for defects to emerge during the course of the Sea Trials, or within six months of a newly commissioned submarine entering service, and careful planning is undertaken to ensure such defects can be dealt with as they arise. The vast majority of these defects have no impact on a submarine's seaworthiness. Systems that could affect seaworthiness generally have some form of back up to prevent the submarine from being at risk as a result of a single failure; this is inherent in the design. Safety is of paramount importance and a submarine would not be sent to sea unless it was safe to do so.

Statistical data on Contractor Sea Trials that are carried out for each new submarine prior to acceptance into service with the Royal Navy are not centrally held and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Territorial Army (Iraq)

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Territorial Army soldiers deployed to Iraq since March 2003 have been graded (a) skilled and (b) average in their weapons test. [194164]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 28 October 2004]: Following the conclusion of the Court Martial of Lance Corporal Blaymire and Lance Corporal Sherratt, officials are collating these data. I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Warships

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the replacement of RFA Argus. [194471]

Mr. Ingram: It is currently planned that the Joint Casualty Treatment Ship will replace the medical facility provided by RFA Argus and that other vessels will be able to deploy anti-submarine helicopters. Options for replacing the air training capability provided by RFA Argus are being examined.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Antisocial Behaviour

John Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of measures taken to tackle antisocial behaviour within the Hornchurch constituency. [194731]

Ms Blears: The Anti-social Behaviour Act 2003 is the single biggest package of measures tackling antisocial behaviour. They were introduced after widespread consultation with communities and practitioners. These powers are part of the Government's Together campaign to help local people and agencies tackle the menace of yob behaviour. The Act and Together apply across all of England and Wales including the hon. Member's Constituency.

Havering Community Safety Partnership (HCSP) are aware that antisocial behaviour is a key concern for residents, and has responded by developing an Antisocial Behaviour Strategy that seeks to develop a co-ordinated approach to tackling antisocial behaviour, by joining up initiatives currently operating in the borough.

The strategy focuses on four key work areas:

Targeting hotspots

Targeting persistent offenders and those at risk

Tackling environmental crime

Protecting and supporting victims and witnesses

Figures released on Thursday 28 October from the National Survey on Antisocial Behaviour show that between April 1999 and June 2004 that the London borough of Havering have issued:

	Number
Antisocial Behaviour Orders	5
Dispersal Orders	2
Acceptable Behaviour Contracts	6

I understand from Havering's return to this survey that their overall antisocial behaviour strategy has proved successful in improving community confidence.

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many antisocial behaviour orders have been issued in Bournemouth since their introduction. [195710]

Ms Blears: Antisocial behaviour orders (ASBOs) have been available to the courts since 1 April 1999. The number of notifications received by the Home office of ASBOs issued, up to 30 June 2004 (latest available), where the restrictions imposed are specific to the local government area of Bournemouth, is one.

Communications Interception

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications submitted by public authorities other than MI5, MI6 and GCHQ for authorisation for direct surveillance and the use of covert human intelligence sources were (a) approved and (b) rejected under sections 28 and 29 of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000 for each year since the inception of the Act. [188050]

Caroline Flint: Numbers of authorisations granted for the carrying out of directed surveillance (under section 28 of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000 (RIPA)) or for the conduct or the use of covert human intelligence source (under section 29) are published in the Annual Reports of the Chief Surveillance Commissioner.

Sections 28 and 29 of RIPA came into force on 25 January 2000. The published figures cover include authorisations granted under sections 28 and 29 of RIPA, within law enforcement agencies since 1 April 2001 and for other public authorities since 1 April 2003. Details of all authorisations granted within law enforcement agencies and other public authorities have been available to the Surveillance Commissioners for inspection since 2000 but only collected centrally since April 2003.

Section 28 (directed surveillance)

	Law enforcement[1]	Other public authorities
2000–01	[2]—	[2]—
2001–02	27,800	[2]—
2002–03	26,400	[2]—
2003–04	26,986	6,398

[1] The National Criminal Intelligence Service, the National Crime Squad, the Scottish Drug Enforcement Agency, HM Customs and Excise and police forces.

[2] Not held centrally.

Section 29 (covert human intelligence source)

	Law enforcement	Other public authorities
2000–01	[1]—	[1]—
2001–02	5,400	[1]—
2002–03	5,900	[1]—
2003–04	5,907	273

[1] Not held centrally

Numbers of applications put to persons entitled to grant authorisations under section 28 and 29 of RIPA that have not resulted in the grant of authorisation are not collected centrally.

As the exercise of powers under sections 28 and 29 of RIPA is kept under review by the Intelligence Services Commissioner and not the Chief Surveillance Commissioner, the number of authorisations made by the intelligence services are excluded from the figures published by the Chief Surveillance Commissioner.

Community Support Officers

Ms Atherton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many community safety officers are deployed in Cornwall. [195103]

Ms Blears: At the end of September 39 community support officers were deployed in Cornwall.

Correspondence

Sir Gerald Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will reply to the letter to him dated 9 September from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton, with regard to Dr. Yousef Daabaj. [195519]

Mr. Blunkett: I wrote to my right hon. Friend on 1 November 2004.

Crime

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) thefts from vehicles, (b) thefts of vehicles and (c) burglaries were recorded in North Tyneside in each of the last 24 months. [193333]

Ms Blears: The available data are quarterly and relates to the North Tyneside Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnership (CDRP) area.

Offences recorded by the police in North Tyneside CDRP

Period	Thefts from vehicles	Thefts of vehicles	All burglaries
April-June 2002	321	162	653
July-September 2002	342	134	551
October-December 2002	304	184	678
January-March 2002	299	160	583
April-June 2003	321	168	609
July-September 2003	325	173	471
October-December 2003	326	127	539
January-March 2004	332	165	516

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many incidents of (a) racially aggravated offences, (b) violent crime, (c) robbery of personal property and (d) drug offences have been recorded in (i) Avon and Somerset constabulary area and (ii) England in each year since 1997. [193871]

Ms Blears: The available information is given in the tables.

Avon and Somerset adopted the National Crime Recording Standard (NCRS) in October 2000 but the force acknowledged a reinforced effort from April 2001 which reflected a further increase in the number of offences recorded. The NCRS was introduced nationally across England and Wales in April 2002. An analysis of the impact of NCRS, both nationally and for individual forces, was published in two companion volumes to 'Crime in England and Wales 2002–03'. Both volumes are available on the Home Office website. The volume covering the national picture is available at: http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/pdfs2/rdsolr3103.pdf and the volume covering individual forces is available at: http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/pdfs2/rdsolr3203.pdf

For the reasons outlined, the information requested is provided in separate tables for Avon and Somerset and England.

Table 1: Offences recorded by the police in Avon and Somerset[1]

	Number of offences
Period	Racially aggravated offences[2]	Violent crime	Robbery of personal property	Drug offences[3]
1997–98	—	13,219	—	461
1998–99[4]	—	14,985	1,694	2,145
1999–2000	240	16,061	2,177	2,017
2000–01	478	19,071	2,573	1,990
2001–02	700	23,670	4,585	1,860

2003–04	1,256	30,954	2,682	2,457

[1] The force moved to a National Crime Recording Standard approach in advance of the national implementation in April 2002. As a result, their figures may not reflect the picture for England as a whole.

[2] Includes religiously aggravated offences from April 2002.

[3] Trafficking in controlled drugs only for 1997–98. Includes possession and other drug offences thereafter.

[4] Expanded coverage and revised counting rules came into force from April 1998.

Table 2: Offences recorded by the police in England

2003–04[4]	33,584	1,052,602	89,948	131,551

[1] Includes religiously aggravated offences from April 2002.

[2] Trafficking in controlled drugs only for 1997–98. Includes possession and other drug offences thereafter.

[3] Expanded coverage and revised counting rules came into force from April 1998.

[4] This denotes the national implementation of the National Crime Recording Standard in April 2002. Figures for subsequent years are not directly comparable with those for earlier years.

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many alcohol-related crimes have been reported in Bournemouth in each year since 1997. [195711]

Ms Blears: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Criminal Records Bureau

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the Criminal Records Bureau standard application information includes details of bank account (a) sort code and (b) account number; and if he will make a statement. [190728]

Ms Blears: Sections E and F of the Criminal Records Bureau (CRB) Disclosure application form contains a number of fields for completion by applicants, including bank account details, for the purposes of assisting in verifying the individual's identity. However, since December 2002 the CRB no longer requires applicants to provide such details. The Bureau communicated this change to Registered Bodies in January 2003 and the Guidance Notes state that this section is no longer to be completed. The section was formally revoked by the Police Act (Criminal Records) (Amendment No. 2) Regulations 2003 with effect from February 2003.

In response to concerns from Registered Bodies, employers, voluntary organisations and customers about the need to provide the personal information asked for in Sections E and F of the application form, the CRB carried out a review of its authentication rules and processes. This review concluded that:

> the removal of Section E from the process of identity validation and verification would not compromise the overall authentication of an applicant's identity and; > there had been no instances to date, where the CRB had used information from Section F as part of the authentication rules. The requirement to provide this information could therefore be removed without compromising the overall authentication of an applicant's identity.

Departmental Recruitment

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many personnel the Department has recruited under the New Deal in each of the past five years. [193674]

Fiona Mactaggart [holding answer 25 October 2004]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend, the Minister of State for the Cabinet Office (Ruth Kelly) on 25 October 2004, Official Report, column 1052W.

Driving (Mobile Telephones)

Mr. Pound: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many people have been charged within the area of responsibility of the Metropolitan Police Service with the use of a mobile telephone while driving, at the latest date for which records are available; [195185]

(2) if he will require the Metropolitan Police Service to publish details of convictions for driving while using a mobile telephone on a borough basis. [195186]

Ms Blears: Data on the number of people charged by the police are not collected centrally.

Data on police action (written warnings, fixed penalty notices and court proceedings) for 2003 on the new offence of driving while using a hand held mobile telephone will not be available until early in 2005. The number of defendants convicted of this new offence in the Metropolitan Police Service area will be available by petty sessional area, which is a grouping of magistrates courts. Those in the Metropolitan Police force area are listed in the table.

We do not propose asking the Metropolitan Police Service to publish their figures on a borough basis.

2004 data are expected to be published in autumn 2005.

Merseyside Crime Initiative Unit

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the work of Merseyside Police's domestic violence units. [146243]

Ms Blears: There are a number of initiatives to tackle domestic violence, which are being delivered by Merseyside Police Family Support Units. The units were set up in January to provide a pan-Merseyside multi agency approach to domestic violence to improve the services which are offered to victims.

There are six base command units within Merseyside Police, which cover Wirral, Sefton, St. Helen's, Knowsley and North and South Liverpool. Each of these units has a Family Support Unit, which liaises with their local Domestic Violence Forum, and Domestic Violence Steering Group to provide local services on domestic violence. The units also link to the multi agency public protection arrangements.

Responsibility for the forces domestic violence strategy lies with the Public Protection Unit. The Police Public Protection Unit and the Family Support Units meet on a monthly basis to discuss local initiatives and to share good practice.

The initiatives, which have been put in place within the Family Support Units, include:

A Domestic Violence Awareness Raising Week—run this September;

Panic attack alarms and mobile phone scheme—alarms and some mobile phones are given to those victims who are most at risk;

Development of a risk assessment referral form—allows the police to pass on victims details to other agencies;

Bronze, Silver and Gold Response initiative has been set up for the units to determine the level of risk to a victim;

999 First in Line Pilot—This will provide training to front line police officers on the referral, identification and support of victims of domestic violence. The pilot is due to start in December;

A Crown Prosecution Service Custody Charging Pilot is currently running within Merseyside Police Custody Suites for Custody Officers dealing with domestic violence cases;

A computerised case tracking system called PROTECT has been introduced and allows Merseyside Police to track domestic violence cases through the court process;

Polaroid camera scheme—where police vehicles are equipped with camera's for front line officers to take photo's of victim's injuries.

In addition to these initiatives Merseyside Police will be running, the Operation Goodwill Christmas campaign this year. The focus of the initiative will be on offenders of domestic violence—with a clear message that offenders will be and can be prosecuted through independent prosecutions.

Police

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what procedures are in place to ensure that officers on career breaks are kept up to date with new developments. [194868]

Ms Blears: The career break scheme for police officers is set out in Home Office Circular 4/2001 and requires chief officers to agree with the officer concerned the obligations and expectations on the officer and the force during the career break. These should include any need to keep up to date with new legislative requirements, how this will be achieved and refresher training on return to the force.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when special priority payments in the police service will be evaluated. [194923]

Ms Blears: A review was carried out by the Police Negotiating Board (PNB) in October 2003. This resulted in agreement to increase the percentage of officers eligible to receive payments from 30 per cent. to 40 per cent. and a requirement that forces monitor the impact on diversity. The Home Office keeps under review all aspects of the impact of the 2002 PNB agreement on pay and conditions for police officers.

Ms Atherton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers were deployed in the Falmouth and Camborne constituency in each year from 1997 to 2004. [195081]

Ms Blears: The Falmouth and Camborne parliamentary constituency is part of the Cornwall and Isles of Scilly Basic Command Unit (BCU) of the Devon and Cornwall Constabulary. Information on strength at BCU level is collected annually and reflects the position at the end of March. Information on BCU strength is only available from 2002. BCU strength between March 2002 and March 2004 is set out in the table.

Cornwall and Isles of Scilly basic command unit

As at 31 March	Number of police officers
2002	706
2003	737
2004	774

It is not possible to provide police numbers at constituency level.

The deployment of officers to BCUs is a matter for the Chief Constable (Mrs. Maria Wallis QPM) and within the Cornwall and Isles of Scilly BCU deployment of officers is a matter for the Divisional Commander.

Police Disciplinary Procedures

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to introduce reforms of police disciplinary procedures for the Metropolitan police; and if he will make a statement. [195584]

Ms Blears: The police disciplinary procedures are detailed in the Police (Conduct) Regulations 2004 and apply to all police officers across the police service in England and Wales.

My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has asked for a review of the police disciplinary arrangements to report to him in December 2004 and this review is under way. Following receipt of this report the Home Secretary will consider the appropriate next steps.

Terrorism

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the risk of a terrorist attack involving anthrax. [194326]

Ms Blears [holding answer 28 October 2004]: Many different terrorist threats have been considered, and scenarios are constantly being tested and reviewed. We do not publicly go into the detail of threat and risk assessments or scenarios, since the information could be useful to terrorists.

The threat is monitored very closely and is regularly assessed.

Ross Cranston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been arrested for terrorist offences since 11 September 2001; and how many of them (a) have been charged, (b) have been released without charge, (c) have been bailed, (d) are still in custody, (e) were prosecuted in court for terrorist offences, (f) were convicted for terrorist offences and (g) were handed over to immigration officials; and in relation to those convicted of terrorist offences (i) with what offences they were charged and (ii) what sentences the court imposed. [187962]

Mr. Blunkett: The figures requested are not routinely collected centrally by the police in the form requested. However, their records show that, cumulatively from 11 September 2001 until 30 June 2004, 609 people were arrested under the Terrorism Act 2000. 61 of these were charged under the Act and 38 under both the Terrorism Act and other legislation. The remainder were either released without charge, bailed to return, cautioned, charged under other legislation (such as that for murder, grievous bodily harm and use of firearms or explosives), or dealt with under immigration or mental health legislation. Of the 99 individuals charged under the Terrorism Act, 15 have been convicted.

It will continue to be the case that some persons arrested under the Terrorism Act will be charged with offences such as murder, grievous bodily harm, use of firearms or explosives which are all outside the scope of the Terrorism Act. A simplistic quote from the Terrorism Act statistics is therefore not the best way to evaluate the success of the Police and the Security Services.

The figures now appear on the Home Office website and will be updated every six months.

Home Office Research Development and Statistics publish a Command Paper and supplementary volumes of criminal statistics annually. A breakdown of prosecutions and convictions under the Terrorism Act 2000 for 2001 and 2002 is attached. Figures for 2003 will not be available until later in the year.

Number of defendants proceeded against at magistrates courts, found guilty and sentenced at all courts for offences under the Terrorism Act 2000, England and Wales 2002[1]

Tsar Appointments

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many tsars have been appointed with responsibilities which cover part of the work of his Department; and if he will make a statement. [191917]

Fiona Mactaggart: There are no individuals with the term 'Tsar' in their job title currently employed by the Home Office.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Benefit Payments

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many pension and benefit recipients receive their money by way of a post office card account in (a) Scotland and (b) the City of Edinburgh local authority area. [195157]

Mr. Pond: The information is not available in the format requested.

Information is available on the number of pension and benefit accounts paid into a post office card account as at September 2004. This is shown in the table.

	Number of benefits paid into card account
(a) Scotland	180,040
(b) Edinburgh	9,935

Data refer to the benefit through which the payment is being made. Therefore if a person is receiving two benefits paid separately into a post office card account, they will be counted twice. Due to the nature of the data it would be difficult to try and accurately match these accounts to a single figure.

A customer is allowed only one post office card account into which pension and benefit payments are made. If a person receives two or more benefits they would only have one post office card account for receipt of all their payments.

Pathway Pilots

Mr. David: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, if he will make a statement on the Pathways to Work pilots. [196335]

Maria Eagle: The Pathways pilots are showing exciting early signs of success. We know that a combination of helping people on incapacity benefit to overcome the barriers they face and tackling discrimination in the workplace can pay dividends for sick and disabled people—opening up job opportunities for them and benefiting society in general as they take their rightful place in the economic life of this country.

Sustainable Energy (CHP Provisions) Order

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what measures his Department (a) has undertaken and (b) plans to undertake to comply with the Sustainable Energy (CHP Provisions) Order 2003. [194432]

Mr. Pond: The Department, in conjunction with its estates partners—Land Securities Trillium—are currently considering the feasibility of installing a combined heat and power plant within one major building on the estate. In order to meet the CHP target contained within the energy section of the "Framework for Sustainable Development on the Government Estate" we will also consider the purchase of electricity generated by CHP from the grid.

CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

Fair Trade

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs whether it is his policy to ensure that hospitality within his Department is sourced from fair trade producers wherever possible within the boundaries set by the public procurement rules. [197066]

Mr. Lammy: The Department for Constitutional Affairs also replies on behalf of its associated offices and the Court Service.

Within the context of the Government's value for money policy and the EU procurement rules, we take every opportunity to encourage the purchase of fair trade goods in line with the Government's commitment to supporting ethical trading, including for hospitality purposes.

For example, in the Department's headquarters building the caterers always provide fair trade tea and coffee for hospitality and also source fruit juices, honey and other products wherever possible. In addition, the caterers in courts in the northern, north eastern and midlands regions and Wales are able to offer fair trade tea and coffee for hospitality in line with our developing policy.

New contracts for catering across the HMCS will be let during 2005. These will include a requirement that hospitality within my Department is sourced from fair trade producers wherever possible within the boundaries set by the public procurement rules.

CABINET OFFICE

Civil Servants

Brian White: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what the Government's definition is of a civil servant. [195601]

Ruth Kelly: The Government are committed to consultation on their proposals for a Civil Service Bill in this parliamentary Session. The definition of a civil servant is one of the issues for consultation.

Contingency Plans

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what additional powers the police have for arresting (a) UK and (b) foreign citizens following a declaration of a state of emergency. [195853]

Ruth Kelly: A declaration of a state of emergency under the Emergency Powers Act 1920 allows the Government to make special temporary legislation (emergency regulations) to deal with the most serious of emergencies. The content of any regulations made would depend entirely on the nature of the emergency and no powers would be conferred automatically. The need for any additional powers would be determined on a case by case basis, and given effect by the regulations.

Data Protection

Michael Fabricant: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what procedures are in place (a) to check the criminal records of civil servants in the Department and agencies responsible to the Department who have access to computer databases containing confidential information on the public and (b) to ensure that there can be no improper use of computer databases containing confidential information on the public; and if she will make a statement. [194608]

Ruth Kelly: The Cabinet Office undertakes pre-appointment checks on all staff, which includes the completion of a character inquiry form asking individuals whether they have ever been convicted in a civil court or been the subject of a court martial. Cabinet Office employees are also subject to a criminal record check as part of the security vetting process described in the then Prime Minister's Statement of 15 December 1994, Official Report, columns 764–66W. Serving members of the Department are required to report convictions to Human Resources. This requirement is set out in the Department's code of conduct, which is available to all staff via the Department's intranet.

The Department's code of conduct includes a section dealing specifically with the Department's rules on the use and misuse of information, including electronic information and communications. The Department monitors emails for inappropriate use and a reminder on this appears at each login to the Department's IT system. All new users also receive an email on this matter when their accounts are opened.

Any misuse or abuse of information held within the Department (whether on computer databases or elsewhere) is subject to the Department's disciplinary procedures.

Departmental IT

Brian White: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what percentage of the Department's (a) implemental and (b) planned computer systems use open source software; and what plans are in place to raise this level. [195644]

Ruth Kelly: There are no statistics currently available on the percentage of open source software (OSS) used in or planned to be used in the Cabinet Office. The Cabinet Office follows the Government's OSS Policy (version 2 was published on the 28 October 2004), which requires that Government consider OSS solutions alongside proprietary ones in information technology procurements and awards contracts on a value for money basis. It does not therefore have plans in place to raise the level of OSS use, but rather will make software procurement decisions on a case by case basis.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what percentage of the staff of the office in (a) 2002 and (b) 2003 were people with disabilities. [196128]

Ruth Kelly: The percentage of staff in Government Departments with disabilities in 2002 and 2003 are detailed on the Cabinet Office statistics website, http://www.civilservice.gov.uk/management_information/statistical_information/statistics/archived_data/index.asp on the summary tables by disability for the relevant years. The tables show the numbers and percentage of staff who have declared a disability by all staff, and are as at 1 April each year.

Figures relating to 1 April 2004 are also available on our website at http://www.civilservice.gov.uk/management_information/statistical_information/statistics/whats_new/index.asp

Copies of these documents are also available in the Library.

Duchy of Lancaster

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many visits he has made to land controlled by his Duchy since his appointment. [195956]

Mr. Milburn: I have met with Sir Michael Bunbury BT, Chairman, and Paul Clarke, Chief Executive and Clerk of the Council of the Duchy and I intend to visit Lancashire later this year, when I will be meeting a number of Duchy tenants and visiting Lancaster University.

Engagements

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list his official engagements for the next three months. [195975]

Mr. Milburn: My official meetings include meetings with Cabinet colleagues relating to my cross-Government role in the co-ordination of Government policy; my responsibilities for the work of the Strategy Unit and the Policy Directorate; my Duchy of Lancaster role; and my membership of Cabinet.

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on his cross-government role in the co-ordination of Government policy; which policies he has been responsible for overseeing; what meetings he has had with other Ministers of State, excluding Cabinet meetings, to formulate policy; and what the outcomes of these meetings were. [195968]

Mr. Milburn: For information on my responsibilities, I refer the hon. Member to the answer provided by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office to the hon. Member for New Forest, East (Dr. Lewis) on 14 October 2004, Official Report, column 358W.

For information on meetings, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I provided to the hon. and learned Member for Harborough (Mr. Garnier) on 20 October 2004, Official Report, column 720W.

Office Costs

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what his office's budget is for this financial year. [195951]

Mr. Milburn: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that my hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office gave to the hon. Member for New Forest, East (Dr. Lewis) on 3 November 2004, Official Report, columns 268–69W.

Press Officers

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many press officers the Department has employed in each of the past five years. [195675]

Ruth Kelly [holding answer 2 November 2004]: The Cabinet Office press office numbers also includes the Press Secretary to the Leader of the House of Commons and the Press Secretary to the Leader of the House of Lords.

For information on press officers between 2000 and 2002, I refer the hon. Member to the response given on 21 January 2003, Official Report, column 1050W.

The number of press officers employed in the Cabinet Office press office between 2003 and 2004 are shown in the table:

January	Number
2003	8.5
2004	[illegible]

Note:
.5 refers to an official whose duties were split between two roles, one being a part time press officer.

Public Engagements

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list each of his public engagements for the week beginning 1 November. [197311]

Mr. Milburn: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to him on 2 November 2004, Official Report, column 233W.

Strategy Unit

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on his function of overseeing the work of the (a) Strategy Unit and (b) Policy Directorate. [195978]

Mr. Milburn: I refer the hon. Member for Romford to the answer given to the hon. Member for New Forest, East (Dr. Lewis) by the Minister for the Cabinet Office, on 14 October 2004, Official Report, column 358W.

Temporary Staff

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many agency temporary staff have been working for the Department in each of the last five years, excluding those working for agencies for which no data are kept centrally. [195244]

Ruth Kelly [holding answer 1 November 2004]: According to records held centrally a total of 69 agency temporary staff were employed in the Cabinet Office at various times during 2003 and 147 so far in 2004. Central records for earlier years are not available.

The Queen

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many meetings he has had with Her Majesty the Queen since his appointment. [195955]

Mr. Milburn: This information is withheld under exemption 3 of the Code of Practice of Access to Government Information.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Constitution

14. Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the ratification of the European Constitution. [196794]

Mr. MacShane: The Treaty must be ratified by all member states in line with their respective constitutional requirements. In the UK this means passing the necessary primary legislation through both Houses of Parliament. The Government have given the further commitment that the Treaty will only pass into UK law if directly approved by the British people in a referendum.

Iraq

15. Mr. Plaskitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress with voter registration in Iraq. [196795]

Mr. Rammell: The distribution of voter registration forms began on 1 November. The registration period will run until 15 December. It is encouraging that the Independent Electoral Commission of Iraq is already receiving forms back. All remains set for elections to be held on time in January.

22. Richard Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the grounds for the war in Iraq. [196802]

Mr. Rammell: Our decision to take military action to enforce Iraq's disarmament obligations, in accordance with the relevant UN Security Council resolutions, was taken as a last resort. The Iraqi regime's refusal to co-operate left us with no option. Our decision was supported by a large majority in the House of Commons on 18 March 2003.

Hugh Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the Government are taking to ensure independent monitoring of the forthcoming elections in Iraq. [195179]

Mr. Rammell [holding answer 1 November 2004]: The Independent Electoral Commission of Iraq (IECI) is responsible for preparing for elections in January 2005. The IECI is being advised and trained by the United Nations, including on the training of independent Iraqi election monitors.

We will consider any request, that we might receive from the Iraqi authorities for assistance with independent monitoring of the elections.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on EU-US relations on Iraq since the elections in the US. [197076]

Mr. MacShane: The EU, like the US, agrees that it should work in partnership with the Iraqi Interim Government and the Iraqi people in order to ensure a secure, stable, unified, prosperous and democratic Iraq that will make a positive contribution to the stability of the region.

Iran

16. Andy Burnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his latest assessment of Iran's nuclear programme. [196796]

Mr. Straw: The Government continue to be concerned about Iranian programmes to enrich uranium, which could be used to produce weapons-grade fissile material for use in a nuclear weapons programme. These activities appear to be inconsistent with the planned extent of Iran's civil nuclear power programme, and have, in some cases, been pursued covertly for many years.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what his latest assessment is of the threat posed by Iran's nuclear programme. [195905]

Mr. MacShane: The Government continue to be concerned about Iranian programmes to enrich uranium, which could be used to produce weapons-grade fissile material for use in a nuclear weapons programme. These activities appear to be inconsistent with the planned extent of Iran's civil nuclear power programme, and have, in some cases, been pursued covertly for many years.

Lebanon

17. Mr. Luke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs If he will make a statement on the presence of Syrian troops in Lebanon. [196797]

Mr. Rammell: We co-sponsored UN Security Council Resolution 1559, calling for the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Lebanon. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary discussed the implications of UNSCR 1559 with Syrian Foreign Minister Shara'a when they met in London on 18 October. We will work for the withdrawal of the Syrian presence and a strengthening of Lebanese institutions. We expect all Lebanon's neighbours to respect Lebanon's sovereignty, territorial integrity and independence.

Sudan

18. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what his assessment is of the human rights situation in Sudan. [196798]

Mr. Mullin: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the (a) Government of Sudan, (b) Special Representative of the UN Secretary and (c) International Committee of the Red Cross about an inter-agency strategy for the protection of the internally displaced population in Darfur which fully respects the UN Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement. [196082]

Mr. Mullin: The UK Government regularly raise with the Government of Sudan the need for them to ensure the protection of all civilians—including displaced persons—in Darfur, and to adhere by the UN Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement, including on the need for all returns to be voluntary and appropriate.

During our respective visits to Sudan, my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary and I both met the UN Special Representative Jan Pronk. We discussed the need for a co-ordinated approach by the international community to help bring security to Darfur.

We are therefore working with all agencies with a protection mandate, including UN agencies, the International Committee of the Red Cross and the African Union, to develop and implement a coherent protection strategy which has just been approved by the UN Country Team.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the US Secretary of State about the US Administration's formal declaration of genocide in Darfur; and if the UK Government will make an equivalent declaration. [196199]

Mr. Mullin: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has had regular discussions with the US Secretary of State about the situation in Darfur. During discussions following Colin Powell's declaration to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on 9 September, both the Foreign Secretary and Colin Powell agreed that the key priority was to stop the fighting. The UK and US Governments have been working closely to achieve this.

We therefore co-sponsored Security Council resolution 1564, which called for the establishment of the International Commission of Inquiry. This Commission began its work on 25 October. It will be for the Commission to determine the nature of the crimes which have taken place in Darfur and to make recommendations on how they should be dealt with.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has made of the number of displaced people in Southern Sudan. [196200]

Mr. Mullin: Sudan is host to Africa's longest running civil war, which has been raging in southern Sudan since 1983. While there are no reliable figures, estimates suggest that up to four million people have been displaced as a result.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has made of the number of fatalities in Southern Sudan since the war began in 1983. [196201]

Mr. Mullin: While there are no reliable figures, estimates suggest that up to two million people have been killed as a result of the civil war which began in 1983.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Home Secretary about the provision of international police monitors to support the national police force in Darfur. [196204]

Mr. Mullin: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has not discussed the issue of international police monitors with my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary. However, we strongly welcomed the inclusion of a civilian police monitoring element in the expanded African Union (AU) mission in Darfur. A UK police planner, on secondment from the Home Office, helped the AU develop its plan in Addis Ababa. We have made clear our willingness to provide personnel and technical expertise to the AU mission, should it be required.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what assessment his Department has made of reports of the World Food Programme on 2 November of the Sudanese army and police surrounding internally displaced people camps near Nyala in Darfur; and if he will make a statement; [196669]

(2) whether his Department has sought an explanation from the Sudanese Government with regard to reports by the World Food Programme of moves by the Sudanese army and police to surround internally displaced people camps near Nyala in Darfur; and if he will make a statement. [196670]

Mr. Mullin: The Memorandum of Understanding between the Government of Sudan and the International Organisation for Migration (IOM) requires prior consultation before any displaced persons are removed or relocated. This was not done. We have made clear to the Government of Sudan that we hold them fully responsible. We expect the Government of Sudan actively to involve the UN, IOM and the African Union in any voluntary and appropriate return or relocation of displaced persons and we have demanded the withdrawal of Government of Sudan forces from around the camps.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what reports he has received of Sudanese army movements in the Darfur region in Western Sudan since May; and if he will make a statement; [196671]

(2) what assessment his Department has made of the (a) movements, (b) activities and (c) impact of the Sudanese army in Darfur, Western Sudan; and if he will make a statement. [196672]

Mr. Mullin: The African Union ceasefire commission produces regular reports on ceasefire violations. All sides have been violating the N'Djamena ceasefire agreement since it was signed in April.

We continue to press the Government of Sudan on the need for it to refrain from all hostile military action in Darfur, under the obligations placed on it by Security Council resolutions 1556 and 1564.

We have also called on the Government of Sudan not to retaliate against increased rebel activity in the region, including attacks on police stations.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what channels of communication (a) his Department and (b) UK representatives in Sudan have established with (i) the Justice and Equality Movement and (ii) the Sudan Liberation Army and Movement; and if he will make a statement. [196673]

Mr. Mullin: We are in regular contact with the Sudan Liberation Movement (SLM) and the Justice and Equality Movement, both through our embassy in Khartoum and the joint Department for International Development/Foreign and Commonwealth Office Sudan Unit in London. I met the leadership of the SLM in London on 13 October.

A UK observer has been present at the Darfur peace talks in Abuja, where he has been active in pressing the rebel groups and the Government of Sudan to reach a political solution.

Middle East

19. Jim Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made on the Middle East Peace Process. [196799]

Mr. Rammell: On 26 October the Knesset voted in favour of Prime Minister Sharon's disengagement plan. We welcome the vote and hope the way is now clear for the withdrawals to be implemented. Any withdrawals would be a significant step towards the goal of a two-state solution. We look forward to working with international partners to make the best of this opportunity and to give new impetus to the Middle East Peace Process.

Richard Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with (a) his European Union counterparts and (b) the European Commission on securing compensation from Israel for the cost of damage to EU-funded projects in the Palestinian territories resulting from Israeli military action. [196574]

Mr. Rammell: The damage inflicted by Israeli military action on development projects, and the homes and livelihoods of ordinary Palestinian people, has been substantial. We and our European partners have repeatedly made representations to the Israeli Government about the scale of the damage. The European Commission has also sought compensation on several occasions. So far they have only been successful once, in relation to a food warehouse in Gaza. UK officials in Brussels continue to discuss with European Union partners how to take this forward.

Richard Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the impact of (a) house demolitions and (b) the barrier being built by Israel on the town of Wadi Fukin; and what representations he is making on the issue. [196077]

Mr. Rammell: The Palestinian village of Wadi Fukin lies between the Green Line and the proposed route of the Israeli barrier, and near to several Israeli settlements. We understand that the Israel Defence Forces (IDF) have issued orders to appropriate Wadi Fukin agricultural lands for 'security purposes', although there have not as yet been any demolitions. IDF checkpoints have resulted in significant restrictions on freedom of movement for the town's population.

We fully recognise Israel's right to defend itself against terrorist attack. But it must act within the parameters of international law. The demolition of homes amounts to collective punishment, harms innocent civilians and exacerbates tension. We have repeatedly made clear our objections to the route of the barrier through, and demolitions within, the Occupied Territories. We have not made specific representations about the town of Wadi Fukin.

Maldives

20. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to meet representatives from the Maldives Government to discuss the political situation in the country; and if he will make a statement. [196800]

Mr. Mullin: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has no current plans to meet representatives of the Maldivian Government. My hon. Friend the Minister of State for Trade and Investment (Mr. Alexander), will discuss the political situation with the Maldivian High Commissioner to London on 13 December.

Afghanistan

23. David Cairns: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the 2004 Afghanistan opium survey by the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime. [196803]

Mr. Rammell: The United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime has not yet published the results of its 2004 poppy cultivation survey in Afghanistan. We anticipate the launch of the survey later this month.

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions have taken place between US and UK counter-narcotics officials in Afghanistan regarding the prioritisation of resources for (a) eradicating poppy cultivation and (b) providing alternative livelihoods for Afghan farmers. [196262]

Mr. Rammell: UK and US officials in London, Washington and Kabul have regular discussions on how best to support the Afghan Government's National Drug Control Strategy. We are already providing support to the Afghan Government for poppy eradication and alternative livelihoods for farmers as well as for interdiction to tackle drug trafficking, judicial reform, demand reduction and public awareness. We have committed more than £70 million over three years for counter-narcotics activity plus significant development funding and support for alternative livelihoods. We are working with our international partners to increase activity in all areas of the strategy.

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many successful counter-narcotics operations there have been in Afghanistan since the fall of the Taliban; and if he will make a statement. [196424]

Mr. Rammell: The UK has committed more than £70 million over three years for counter-narcotics activity plus significant development funding and support for alternative livelihoods. The UK supports the comprehensive Afghan National Drug Control Strategy, which includes law enforcement activity against traffickers, eradication, judicial reform, alternative livelihoods for farmers, demand reduction and public awareness.

Since it became operational in January 2003, the Afghan Special Narcotics Force, with UK funding and advice, has destroyed over 50 tonnes of opiates, 32 labs and made over 20 arrests. The Counter Narcotics Police of Afghanistan, which was created in January 2003 with UK support, report that to date they have seized 2.1 tons heroin and 13.6 tons opium, over 1.5 tons of which were achieved in UK supported operations together with 4.6 tons of precursor chemicals. The Afghan general and border police also seize opiates in the course of their work, but we do not have reliable figures.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to meet his EU colleagues to discuss the effectiveness of EU sanctions against Zimbabwe. [196801]

Mr. Mullin: We regularly meet our EU colleagues to discuss the situation in Zimbabwe. If Zimbabwe does not comply with the EU's demands on human rights and democracy by February, when the current measures are due for renewal, we will be urging our EU partners to agree that those sanctions be renewed.

Emerging Democracies

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what support his Department is giving to free trade unions in emerging democracies. [196804]

Mr. MacShane: The FCO continues to attach importance to the establishment of free trade unions as an integral part of a functioning civil society. Our ambassadors regularly raise the rights of unions to organise in a number of countries and protest when International Labour Organization core labour standards are infringed. We also support specific projects to aid the establishment and operation of free trade unions in emerging democracies and post conflict countries.

Armenian Community (Turkey)

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to promote reconciliation between the Armenian community in Turkey and the Government of Turkey. [196115]

Mr. MacShane: As the European Commission's 6 October report noted, Turkey has put in place reforms to minority rights and religious freedoms in its bid to open accession negotiations with the EU. In January a 'Minority Issues Assessment Board' was set up to address the problems of non-Muslim minorities, such as the Armenians. Further progress, however, is still required and I continue to press the Turkish Government for further reforms.

Belarus

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many visits he has made to Belarus since his appointment as Foreign Secretary. [196155]

Mr. MacShane: Current EU policy, based on the 1997 General Affairs Council Conclusions, restricts ministerial level contact between the EU and Belarus. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has not visited Belarus during this time.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which external bodies monitored the recent elections in Belarus; and what their assessments were. [196156]

Mr. MacShane: According to the Central Election Commission in Belarus, approximately fifteen international organisations were given accreditation to monitor the 17 October 2004 parliamentary elections. The main organisations were the Organisation for Security and Cooperation in Europe's (OSCE) Office for Democratic Institutions and Human Rights (ODIHR) and organisations working together under the umbrella of the Commonwealth Independent States (CIS). In its preliminary findings and conclusions, the OSCE/ODIHR stated that the elections "fell significantly short of OSCE commitments for democratic elections". CIS observers concluded that the elections were "conducted in accordance with the norms of existing electoral legislation and were found free, fair, legitimate and transparent."

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise the situation in Belarus at the next meeting with his counterparts in Russia. [196157]

Mr. MacShane: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has no meetings planned in the immediate future with his Russian counterpart, Sergei Lavrov, although they speak regularly on the telephone. The agenda for the next call has not yet been set. We do discuss Belarus regularly in our bilateral contacts with Russia, including in Moscow via our Embassy. Our Ambassador has recently discussed Belarus with both Mr. Lavrov and Igor Ivanov, the Security Council chief.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on human rights violations in the Republic of Belarus. [196160]

Mr. MacShane: Belarus' record on human rights is poor and represents a continuing obstacle to the development of closer relations between the UK and Belarus. In the past year numerous independent newspapers, NGOs and opposition parties have faced increased harassment and closure, particularly in the run up to the 17 October parliamentary elections. We remain concerned about the situation and, together with our EU partners, regularly raise our concerns with the Belarusian authorities, both bilaterally through our Embassies in Minsk and in multilateral fora including the OSCE Permanent Council in Vienna.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what meetings he has held with officials from the Republic of Belarus in the last 12 months; and what the outcome of those meetings was. [196161]

Mr. MacShane: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has not met with any Belarusian officials in the last 12 months.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent elections in Belarus. [196162]

Mr. MacShane: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Boston and Skegness (Mr. Simmonds) on 27 October 2004, Official Report, column 1249W.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to visit Minsk in the next 12 months. [196165]

Mr. MacShane: Current EU policy, based on the 1997 General Affairs Council Conclusions, restricts ministerial level contact between the EU and Belarus. Accordingly, my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has no plans to visit Minsk in the next 12 months.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise the situation in Belarus at the next meeting of the United Nations. [196166]

Mr. MacShane: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has no immediate plans to raise the situation in Belarus at the United Nations. The Government, together with our EU partners, have previously co-sponsored two resolutions at the United Nations Commission on Human Rights and will continue to consider further action within the framework of the United Nations.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the British Government recognises the legitimacy of the recent elections in Belarus. [196167]

Mr. MacShane: I refer the hon. Member to the declaration on the conduct of the election and referendum in Belarus issued by the EU on 20 October. We fully support this declaration. We are deeply concerned about the issues raised in the preliminary findings and conclusions of the Organisation for Security and Cooperation in Europe's (OSCE) International Election Observation Mission (IEOM). We will assess the conclusions of the OSCE IEOM's final report when this is published, and will press Belarus to implement any recommendations.

The full text of the EU declaration is available on the Presidency's website at http://www.eu2004.nl.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on involvement by Belarus in the illicit drugs trade. [196168]

Mr. Rammell: We have no evidence to suggest that trafficking groups are using Belarus as a significant route to smuggle drugs to the UK.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what meetings he has held with the Council of the Belarusian Democratic Republic in Exile. [196172]

Mr. MacShane: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has not held any meetings with the Council of the Belarusian Democratic Republic in Exile this year.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received from the Council of the Belarusian Democratic Republic in Exile. [196173]

Mr. MacShane: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has not received any representations from the Council of the Belarusian Democratic Republic in Exile this year.

Correspondence

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when UKvisas will reply to the letter of 7 July from the hon. Member for Aylesbury about the case of Mr. S J of Pakistan, husband of Mrs. S H of Aylesbury (ref. GU100/86120/MJG; post 861093); and if he will make a statement. [197313]

Mr. Mullin: UKvisas replied to the hon. Member today.

Council of Ministers

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to the answer of 13 September 2004, Official Report, column 1451W, on the Council of Ministers, whether he has concluded his further consideration of the matter. [195904]

Mr. MacShane: I am currently discussing the possibilities with ministerial colleagues.

Cyprus

Mr. Lyons: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to encourage movement towards a settlement in Cyprus. [R] [196875]

Mr. MacShane: Following the referendum on the UN Secretary General's comprehensive settlement plan in which the Greek Cypriots voted "no" and the Turkish Cypriots "yes", the EU agreed to end the isolation of the Turkish Cypriots. In practice, we are working to reach EU agreement on regulations to enable preferential direct trade between north Cyprus and the rest of the EU, and to disburse the £259 million of aid allocated for the north of the island.

We support these measures as we believe it is important for the EU to bring Turkish Cypriots closer to Europe, and help to build trade links and reduce the economic gap between the two communities. This will make reunification more likely, easier to consolidate and less costly. Trade will increase trust and lay the foundations for co-operation in a reunified Cyprus. A widening wealth gap and continued economic division will make a solution much more difficult.

As I told the Greek Cypriot leadership during my recent visit to the island, we understand the concerns that made Greek Cypriots vote "no" to the UN plan and look forward to seeing Greek Cypriot proposals on moving the process forward. If we believe the proposals are reasonable and have a realistic chance of success, we will encourage the UN Secretary-General to re-engage and put all our resources and influence behind finding a solution on the basis of the Annan Plan that is acceptable to all sides. We continue to believe that the Annan Plan offers the only realistic basis for a settlement to the Cyprus problem.

Departmental Events (Funding)

Charles Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the (a) conferences, (b) publications, (c) initiatives, (d) projects and (e) receptions organised by his Department which have received funding from outside commercial bodies since May 1997, broken down by (i) funding body and (ii) amount paid. [196608]

Mr. Rammell: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office does not separately record the information requested. The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Diego Garcia

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the United States military forces have established a store for radioactive waste on Diego Garcia. [196496]

Mr. Rammell: There is no radioactive waste store on Diego Garcia.

Equatorial Guinea

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the Government was first informed of the Equatorial Guinea attempted coup plot. [195151]

Mr. Straw: In late January 2004.

General Affairs and External Relations Council

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the outcome was of the General Affairs and External Relations Council held on 2–3 November; what the Government's stance was on the issues discussed, including its voting record; and if he will make a statement. [196923]

Mr. MacShane: The answer is as follows:

Outcome of the 2 November 2004 General Affairs and External Relations Council

I represented the UK at the General Affairs and External Relations Council (GAERC) in Brussels on 2 November in the absence of my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary. John Grant (UK's permanent representative to the EU) accompanied me. This was a short half-day GAERC, which dealt primarily with the preparation of the European Council held on 5 November 2004.

Conclusions were agreed on Iraq and Sudan.

General Affairs Session

Preparations For The European Council (5 November 2004)

The Council examined draft conclusions prepared by the Presidency for the European Council. These were finalised prior to the GAERC by officials. The Presidency outlined the main items that the European Council was due to discuss. These were:

Economic issues—Presentation by Mr. Wim Kok, chairman of a high-level group advising the Commission on the preparation of the mid-term review of the economic reform strategy laid down at Lisbon in March 2000.

Justice and home affairs—Adoption of a new multi-annual agenda for the EU's area of freedom, security and justice.

Communicating Europe—The European Council would examine how better to communicate to the public on the EU's work and its relevance to people's daily lives.

EU enlargement—The President of the Commission would present a number of policy documents regarding Bulgaria, Romania, Croatia and Turkey's applications to join the EU.

External relations—Conclusions were expected on Iran, Iraq, the Middle East and Sudan. The Conclusions agreed at the GAERC on Iraq and Sudan were forwarded to the Council and attached to a Council Declaration. Draft conclusions for Iran and the Middle East were not discussed at the GAERC. These were discussed in the run-up to the European Council.

The European Council would also meet for the first time with Mr. Josep Borrell, the new President of the European Parliament.

External Relations Session

Preparation Of The Eu-Russia Summit

The Council was briefed by the Presidency, the Commission and High Representative Javier Solana on preparation of the EU-Russia Summit to be held in The Hague on 11 November.

The summit, the fourteenth to be held under the EU-Russia Partnership and Co-operation Agreement, is due to address the building of four "common spaces" for the EU and Russia, namely the common economic space, the common space of freedom, security and justice, the common space of external security and the common space of research and education. International and regional issues, such as the Middle East (including Iran and Iraq), terrorism, Moldova and the South Caucasus, are also likely to be discussed. The Presidency noted that the four "spaces" were part of a single package.

AOB—Somalia

On the agenda at Italian request, the Council held a brief exchange of views on the situation in Somalia following the election of Mr. Abdullahi Yusuf as President on 10 October and the expected formation of a transitional government. The Presidency reiterated support for the peace process in Somalia and emphasised the EU's willingness to contribute to the country's stabilisation and reconstruction, notably through support for African Union initiatives.

AOB—African Great Lakes Region

The Council was briefed by the Belgian Foreign Minister on efforts to bring peace and security to the African Great Lakes region, with particular focus on the Democratic Republic of Congo, in the light of his recent visit in the region.

AOB—Guinea Bissau

The Council was briefed by the Portuguese Foreign Minister on recent developments in Guinea-Bissau following unrest on 6 October and on efforts led by the international community, including Portuguese-speaking States, with a view to contributing to a stabilisation of the situation.

AOB—Belarus

At the suggestion of the Polish delegation, the Council briefly discussed EU policy with regard to Belarus in the light of irregularities in the parliamentary elections and referendum on 17 October and attacks on opposition leaders and media representatives at a political demonstration in Minsk on 19 October. It will discuss the matter in greater detail at its meeting on 22 November.

Guide to the European Union

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what costs were incurred in the publication and distribution of the Guide to the European Union. [196394]

Mr. MacShane: The cost of printing 207,000 copies of the Guide to the EU is approximately £45,000. Distribution to public libraries and individuals is estimated at £6,000. No further decisions on distribution have been taken.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he had with (a) opposition parties and (b) the No campaign to ensure that the Guide to the European Union published by his Department presents a balanced assessment of the proposed EU Constitution. [196395]

Mr. MacShane: None.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he had with the Electoral Commission prior to publication of the Guide to the European Union to ensure compliance with the rules governing referendums. [196396]

Mr. MacShane: The Guide to the EU is part of the Government's commitment to provide information for the general public on the EU. In line with previous practice, discussions were not held with the Electoral Commission. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office is confident that the Guide to the EU meets Government Information and Communication Service guidelines on such publications.

HEALTH

Accident and Emergency

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what date the Accident and Emergency Department at Ashford (Middlesex) hospital was closed and replaced by an emergency department; and what the difference is between the two facilities. [196526]

Ms Rosie Winterton [holding answer 8 November 2004]: I refer the hon. Member to my response of 25 March 2004, Official Report, columns 1047–48W.

Autism

Paul Holmes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance his Department provides to (a) general practitioners and (b) other primary care professionals on working with people with autism spectrum disorders. [194782]

Dr. Ladyman: The Department does not consider it necessary to supplement the training of primary care professionals with additional guidance. The Department, together with the Department for Education and Skills, produced "Autism Spectrum Disorders: Good Practice Guidance" in 2002 and the national service framework for children, young people and maternity services was published on 15 September, 2004.

Brazil Nuts

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether Brazil nuts are being withheld from sale due to health concerns; and if he will make a statement. [196488]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Brazil nuts are not being withheld from sale in the United Kingdom. The main exporting country for unshelled Brazil nuts, Brazil, has not been exporting this commodity into the European Union since July 2003, when the EU imposed special conditions on these imports to ensure they do not exceed the regulatory limits for aflatoxins.

Cancer Patients/Services

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many suspected cancer patients in the Bury North constituency were seen by an NHS consultant within two weeks of referral in each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [195348]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Information on the number of suspected cancer patients seen has been collected since 2001. This is shown in the table.

Waiting times for first out-patient appointment following urgent G(D)P referral with suspected cancer

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received on the location of specialist cancer services in the Mid-Anglia Cancer Network area. [196298]

Dr. Ladyman: Records show that one letter has been received in September 2004.

Care of the Elderly

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health with which organisations his Department (a) has discussed and (b) plans to discuss his proposals to improve national standards for the care of elderly people; and if he will make a statement. [195897]

Dr. Ladyman: On 27 October 2004, we announced the start of the review of the national minimum standards and the associated legislative framework for adult social care. We intend to involve a range of service user and provider organisations in the process of reviewing the standards and will consult fully on any resulting changes.

Cheshire and Merseyside Health Protection Agency

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the role of the newly established Cheshire and Merseyside Health Protection Agency. [195488]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Health Protection Agency's Cheshire and Merseyside Health Protection Agency was established on 1 April 2003 as an integral part of the new Health Protection Agency. It has offices n Moorgate Point in Knowsley, near Liverpool, and within the microbiology laboratory in the Countess of Chester hospital. The unit has 32 staff.

The unit's catchment area has 2.4 million residents, iving in a mix of rural, urban and city areas, including reas of major deprivation. The unit provides the full ange of local HPA services and support to the local ational health service and other partners, particularly for investigation of reportable cases and outbreaks of nfectious disease in community facilities and other settings.

There are significant connections with other agencies, particularly local authorities, in responding to chemical incidents and investigation of environmental hazards.

Children's Diets

Alistair Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of studies of the relationships between diet and hyperactivity or attention deficit hyperactivity disorder in children; whether he has plans for further studies in this area; and if he will make a statement. [195767]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Food Standards Agency is funding research to look at a possible link between food additives and children's behaviour, for which current evidence is inconclusive. However, there are no plans to look at overall diet and hyperactivity.

We are committed to tackling children's diet and health issues. Action to address this will be taken forward in the Government's White Paper on improving health.

Choose and Book Initiative

Mr. Wills: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimate he has made of the cost of offering, by December 2005, a choice of four to five alternative providers to all patients who need surgery; [195995]

(2) what estimate he has made of the cost of offering, by December 2008, the right to choose any healthcare provider which meets the Healthcare Commission's standards, which can provide the care within the price that the NHS will pay, and which can meet the 18 weeks' waiting time target to all patients. [195996]

Mr. Hutton: A delivery framework for the implementation of choose and book was published in August 2004. Local health communities are currently reporting on their state of readiness for 2005 and are required to confirm they have the necessary resources.

Detailed work on arrangements for 2008 is ongoing and will consider the cost implications of implementing the policy.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the timetable is for implementation of the choose and book initiative in the NHS. [196235]

Mr. Hutton: From 2005, patients in the national health service will be offered a choice of hospital to attend. This will be underpinned by the NHS choose and book service. Some 10 million patients a year will have this choice from December 2005.

The decision when to implement the choose and book service locally will be based on organisational readiness and system compliance. Implementation has been taking place across the country since July 2004 and will continue during 2005.

Combined Heat and Power

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of (a) hospitals and (b) health centres in England utilise combined heat and power. [195941]

Mr. Hutton: In 2003–04, 7 per cent. of national health service hospital sites derived energy from combined heat and power plants (CHP). Information is not collected centrally on the number of health centres that use CHP.

Generally, CHP is most efficient and economically viable when it can be run continuously for long periods (usually in excess of 17 hours per day) and is therefore unlikely to be of significant benefit to buildings that are only used during part of the day.

Deaths after Surgery

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many and what proportion of patients' deaths occurred within 30 days of surgery in Hull and the East Riding in (a) 2003 and (b) 2004. [194956]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested is available from the Healthcare Commission's star rating website at http://ratings2004.healthcarecommission.org.uk/Reports/AcuteTrustDetail.asp?TrustCode = RWA&alternativeReportType =

Dentistry

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many dentists who were awarded a Dental Care Development Fund grant have subsequently stopped NHS dental treatment for adults; [190756]

(2) how many applications have been made by dentists in (a) England and (b) East Lancashire for a grant from the Dental Care Development Fund in each year since 2000; what conditions are attached to the grant concerning the dentist's commitment to NHS dentistry; and how many applications were successful. [190757]

Ms Rosie Winterton: In the 2000–01 financial year, grants were made to 72 health authorities (HAs), which were furthest from the Government's targets for improving access to national health service dentistry, for extending practices or purchasing new equipment to enable them to treat more patients. Responsibility for administering the scheme was delegated to the HAs with advice that they imposed the following conditions:

that the practices guaranteed an average level of return of no less than 100 new NHS patients registered per £1,250 granted; that the additional capacity was maintained for an agreed period, normally at least three years; and that the practice contributed to the project normally at a level around 50 per cent. of the amount granted.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to the answer of 23 September 2004, Official Report, columns 1959–61W, on dentistry, how many dental practices were shown on the nhs.uk website on 8 September. [191773]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The number of general dental service or personal dental service practices in England shown on the nhs.uk website as accepting new national health service patients on 8 September 2004 is shown in the table.

	Number
Registering children aged 0–18 years for NHS treatment	3,938
Providing occasional NHS treatment to non-registered patients	1,572
Registering charge-exempt adults for NHS treatment	2,968
Registering charge-paying adults for NHS treatment	2,604
Total number of dental practices in England on the 'nhs.uk' website	8,669

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dental technicians had the necessary skills to construct dentures in England in each year since 1997. [195523]

Ms Rosie Winterton: As dental technician is not yet a registrable profession, there is no official record of their numbers or competencies. We estimate that, since 1997, the number of dental technicians who are capable of manufacturing or contributing to the manufacture of dentures has remained fairly constant at about 9,000. Subject to the approval of an Order to be made under Section 60 of the Health Act 1999, we plan to give the General Dental Council powers to register dental technicians early in 2005.

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of dentists' training dealt with dentures in each year since 1997; and if he will make a statement. [195525]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Precise information is not available centrally, but I understand from the General Dental Council, which is responsible for the curriculum for dental undergraduate education, that the proportion has reduced. The reasons are that there has been an encouraging reduction in the number of edentulous patients—from 37 per cent. of adults in 1968 to 12 per cent. in 1998—and recognition that most dentists now delegate the manufacture of dentures to dental technicians.

Dermatology

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the proportion of patients waiting over 13 weeks for a first out-patient appointment that is comprised of dermatology referrals; and if he will make a statement. [196193]

Mr. Hutton: At 30 June 2004 the number of patients, waiting over 13 weeks for a dermatology first out-patient appointment was 7 per cent. of the total number of patients waiting for a first out-patient appointment. The national health service is on track to achieve the target of having no patients waiting over 13 weeks for first out-patient appointments by December 2005.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on the numbers of specialists in dermatology; [196239]

(2) what the vacancy rates for dermatology specialists were in each strategic health authority in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [196247]

Mr. Hutton: As at June 2004, there were 425 consultant dermatologists working in the national health service in England. This is an increase of 114, or 37 per cent., since September 1997.

Between September 1997 and 2003, the number of dermatologists in the registrar group increased by 42, or 37 per cent.

We are also increasing training capacity within the specialty. Between 2002–03 and 2004–05, central funding has been distributed to support the implementation of 27 additional specialist registrar (SpR) posts in dermatology. All the posts have now been implemented. Trusts have also had the opportunity to create up to 40 locally funded SpR training opportunities and the latest survey suggests 23 are due to be implemented so far.

The table shows the three-month vacancy rates for consultant dermatologists by strategic health authority (SHA), as at March 2004. The national three-month vacancy rate for dermatology has decreased from 6.1 per cent. in March 2003 to 4.7 per cent. in March 2004. This comes at the same time as increases in the dermatology workforce.

[2] Where the sum of the staff in post and number of vacancies is zero.

Notes:

1. Three month vacancies are vacancies which trusts are actively trying to fill, which had lasted for three months or more (whole time equivalents).
2. Three month vacancy rates are three month vacancies expressed as a percentage of three month vacancies plus staff in post.
3. Vacancy and staff in post numbers are rounded to the nearest whole number.
4. Percentages are rounded to one decimal place.

Eye Tests

Jon Cruddas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many pensioners in the Dagenham constituency have had free eye tests since they were introduced. [196452]

Dr. Ladyman: Figures for the number of sight tests by constituency, or pensioners are not collected centrally. However the Department does collect statistics on the number of sight tests paid for patients aged 60 and over.

These data are shown in the table, which shows the number of national health service sight tests paid by Barking and Havering health authority (HA) for the years ending 31 March 2000 to 2003 and the primary care trust (PCT), covering Barking and Dagenham for the year ending 31 March 2004.

General ophthalmic services: number of sight tests paid by Barking and Havering HA for patients aged 60 and over for the years ending 31 March 2000 to 2004

	HA/PCT name	Number of sight tests for people aged 60 and over (Thousand)
1999–2000	Barking and Havering	24.9
2000–01	Barking and Havering	29.3
2001–02	Barking and Havering	33.1
2002–03	Barking and Havering	36.1
2003–04	Barking and Dagenham PCT	9.3
	Havering PCT	26.0
Total	Barking and Havering	35.3

Notes:

1. Eligibility for NHS sight tests was extended to patients aged 60 and over from 1 April 1999.
2. PCTs took over responsibilities from HAs in October 2002.

It should be noted that the number of sight tests cannot be equated to the numbers of patients. Most people do not come back for a sight test within the year, but some patients suffering from medical conditions are advised to have re-examinations sooner.

GP Vacancies

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the general practitioner vacancy rates were for each primary care trust in England at (a) 31 March 2003, (b) 30 September 2003, (c) 31 March 2004 and (d) 30 September 2004. [195806]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is not available at primary care trust level.

The estimated three-month general practitioner vacancy rate in England decreased from 3.4 per cent. in March 2003 to 3 per cent. in March 2004.

EU Committees

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many times during the Greek presidency of the EU the (a) Advisory Committee on Medical Devices, (b) Committee of senior officials on public health and (c) Pharmaceutical Committee met; when and where these meetings took place; which UK Government expert was present at each meeting; what (i) technical and (ii) financial issues were raised by the UK Government expert at each meeting; what recommendations each Committee produced during that period; what actions were (A) proposed and (B) taken by (1) the EU and (2) the UK Government as a result of each Committee's recommendations; and if he will make a statement. [196100]

Mr. Hutton: The Medical Devices Expert's Group (MDEG) met once during the Greek Presidency. The meeting took place on 7–8 April 2003 in Brussels. A senior official from the Medicines and Healthcare products Regulatory Agency (MHRA) represented the United Kingdom. There were no technical or financial issues raised by the UK representative at the meeting. MDEG is chaired by the EU Commission and composed of representatives from member states, industry, Notified Bodies and the various Standard organisations. It has no decision making powers and accordingly there were no recommendations proposed by it during the Greek Presidency.

The Committee of Senior Officials on Public Health met during the Greek presidency, on 30 June in Brussels. UK Government experts attended the meeting, at which a wide range of relevant topics was discussed. These included EU enlargement, the status of third country nationals, exchange of information on professionals' fitness to practise, the Tennah-Durez ECJ judgment, implementation of the SLIM Directive, and updates on implementation in member states of directives on mutual recognition of professional qualifications in respect of dentists, doctors, nurses and midwives. Actions flowing from these discussions have been pursued through the appropriate channels.

The Pharmaceutical Committee met once during the Greek Presidency. The meeting took place on 15 May 2003 in Brussels. The UK is usually represented by senior officials from the Department and the MHRA. There were no technical or financial issues raised by the UK representative at the meeting. The Pharmaceutical Committee is an advisory committee and has no decision-making powers. There were, therefore, no recommendations proposed by the committee during the Greek Presidency.

Hospital Funding

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what the (a) brought forward debt at the start of the year, (b) overspending during the year before the provision of any special funding to help balance the books, (c) carried forward debt at the end of the year and (d) amount of special funding provided by the NHS Bank to address the debt was for the Ashford and St. Peter's hospitals NHS trust in each of the last five financial years; [196523]

(2) what the projected overspend is for 2004–05 before the deduction of the £13 million special grant for the Ashford and St. Peter's hospitals NHS trust. [196524]

Ms Rosie Winterton [holding answer 8 November 2004]: Published information about debt, overspend, projected overspend and special funding for Ashford and St. Peter's hospitals national health service trust is shown in the table.

At month six, the trust is forecasting a break-even year end position after £13 million special assistance.

Financial year	Brought forward	Surplus deficit before special assistance	Special assistance	Carried forward
1999–2000	1,725	-1,613	0	112
2000–01	112	-4,846	0	-4,734
2001–02	-4,734	-1,409	0	-6,143
2002–03	-6,143	-10,828	9,500	-7471
2003–04	-7,471	-18,495	18,500	-7,466

Notes:

1. NHS Bank funding commenced in 2000–03.
2. Minus sign represents deficits.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much additional funding was made available to Ashford and St. Peter's hospitals NHS trust for implementing the new consultants' contracts; and what percentage of the total cost this figure represents. [196525]

Ms Rosie Winterton [holding answer 8 November 2004]: We do not allocate funding to national health service trusts. NHS trusts, as providers of services, receive the bulk of their revenue funding from primary care trusts (PCTs), via their commissioning arrangements.

The local delivery planning process ultimately informs the level of funding for provider organisations. The funding for NHS trusts is therefore dependent on the level of services they are able to contract with commissioning PCTs.

Hysterectomy

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the cost to the NHS of post-hysterectomy treatment, including drug therapy, in the last year for which figures are available. [195031]

Dr. Ladyman: This information is not available centrally.

IT

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library copies of the minutes of meetings of the board of the national programme for IT in the NHS. [196985]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 8 November 2004]: We have no current plans to do so.

The board of the national programme for information technology (NPfIT) is primarily concerned with regular review of the performance of these private sector organisations. The contracts between the NPfIT and the organisations concerned include legally binding confidentiality undertakings, in line with standard commercial contract terms. Agreement to publish board minutes would, therefore, put the NPfIT in breach of these undertakings.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been undertaken by the National Programme for IT on the views of (a) hospital doctors and nurses, (b) general practitioners and other practice staff and (c) all other NHS staff on the introduction of the new IT system for the NHS. [196240]

Mr. Hutton: Engaging clinicians and national health service management in planning and preparation for successful implementation of the national programme has always been, and continues to be, a key priority. As well as the national professional bodies and groups, the national programme team has also consulted closely with individual expert primary and secondary care practitioners, including practising general practitioners. A series of workshops has also been held across the NHS involving clinicians to help inform the information technology development by suppliers.

In addition, the care record development board, established in July and chaired by Mr. Harry Cayton, the Department's director for patients and the public, has its membership drawn from clinicians as well as representatives of patients and social care. The board brings together patients, public, social and healthcare professionals to provide clinical and patient input into the national programme's work. The work of the board will enable wider consultation and input into the way the NHS care records service is being developed and aims to ensure the NHS maximises the benefits that the new IT has to offer to support improvements in care.

Arrangements for clinical engagement are being further strengthened by the appointment of clinical leads to represent GPs, hospital doctors, nurses and allied health professionals at national, cluster and local health community level.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the National Programme for IT is meeting concerns of general practitioners about (a) the change over to the new IT system and (b) the loss of IT systems in which local GP practices have previously invested. [196241]

Mr. Hutton: The national programme for information technology (NPfIT) has always made it clear that the best use should and will be made of the existing asset base so long as it continues to provide value and be fit for purpose. General practitioners are being advised that, certainly in the short and medium term, existing clinical systems can continue to be used subject to compliance criteria. This message has been repeated in guidance published by the national programme, aimed at existing systems suppliers. No practice will be expected to move from current systems until the same or greater levels of functionality than GPs currently enjoy are available under the national programme, unless that is part of an agreed strategy or by choice for specific reasons.

However, in the longer term it may be necessary for some existing systems to be replaced or integrated. At that stage each GP practice will have a choice of more than one system so long as these have been accredited against national standards and can deliver the required functionality. This undertaking is spelt out in guidance agreed jointly with the British Medical Association.

Individual GP practices will receive funding to upgrade to NPfIT systems through their primary care trusts. Systems provided by NPfIT will be at no cost to GP practices. In addition, the National Programme will cover centrally the cost of supplier-developed training material, including e-training services, and training the trainers in the use of new IT services.

Medicines (Children and Infants)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the frequency of medication errors in the administration of medicines to children. [194262]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Because of low reporting rates, the current incidence of medication errors within the national health service is not known. The Government have established the National Patient Safety Agency (NPSA) to collect, collate, review and analyse error reports and produce and disseminate solutions to ensure that we learn from errors and reduce, risk. Medication errors are an early priority for the NPSA, and its reporting and learning system will provide data on their frequency overall, and in children.

We are committed to making drug treatment for children as safe as possible and have taken a number of steps to achieve this. The Chief Pharmaceutical Officer issued guidance for health professionals and NHS organisations in January this year, entitled "Building a safer NHS for patients: improving medication safety." This included a chapter on improving medication in children. The national service framework for children, young people and maternity services, launched in October includes a standard for medicines management in children, with a chapter on safe medication practice.

Additionally, the Government launched a strategy on medicines for children in August this year, which among other issues highlighted the need for a single source of authoritative information on paediatric prescribing. The first children's British National Formulary will be available during the summer of 2005 and will be published annually thereafter.

NHS Foundation Trusts

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the Regulator of NHS foundation trusts completed the vetting of the finances of each successful applicant for foundation status. [195080]

Mr. Hutton: Monitor (whose statutory name is the independent regulator of national health service foundation trusts) is an independent corporate body established under the Health and Social Care (Community Health and Standards) Act 2003. It is Monitors responsibility to authorise, monitor and regulate national health service foundation trusts (NHSFTs).

In authorising NHSFTs, Monitor must be satisfied that they are legally constituted, financially sustainable, effectively governed and locally representative. These are essential requirements for NHSFTs to be able to operate with sufficient autonomy, to deliver NHS priorities and to become increasingly responsive to local needs.

The authorisation process is a critical part in this process. Careful assessment at this stage ensures that financially sustainable NHSFTs with responsible management are established which will create a robust system and minimise the need for intervention. I am informed by the chairman of Monitor that full details of the authorisation process are set out in Monitor's publication "Applying for authorisation as an NHS Foundation Trust—A Guide for Applicants" (reference IRG 15/04) which is publicly available on their website at www.monitor-nhsft.gov.uk.

I am further informed by the chairman of Monitor that consideration of each successful applicant for NHSFT status, which included the vetting of their finances, was completed at meetings of Monitor's board as follows:

NHS Foundation Trust	Date of board meeting	Date of authorisation
Basildon and Thurrock University Hospitals	30 March 2004	1 April 2004
Bradford Teaching Hospitals	30 March 2004	1 April 2004
Countess of Chester Hospital	30 March 2004	1 April 2004
Doncaster and Bassetlaw Hospitals	30 March 2004	1 April 2004
Homerton University Hospital	30 March 2004	1 April 2004
Moorfields Eye Hospital	30 March 2004	1 April 2004
Peterborough and Stamford Hospitals	30 March 2004	1 April 2004
Royal Devon and Exeter	30 March 2004	1 April 2004
The Royal Marsden	30 March 2004	1 April 2004
Stockport	30 March 2004	1 April 2004
Cambridge University Hospitals	28 June 2004	1 July 2004
City Hospitals Sunderland	28 June 2004	1 July 2004
Derby Hospitals	28 June 2004	1 July 2004
Gloucestershire Hospitals	28 June 2004	1 July 2004
Guy's and St. Thomas'	28 June 2004	1 July 2004
Papworth Hospital	28 June 2004	1 July 2004
Queen Victoria Hospital	28 June 2004	1 July 2004
Sheffield Teaching Hospitals	28 June 2004	1 July 2004
University College London	28 June 2004	1 July 2004
University Hospitals Birmingham	28 June 2004	1 July 2004

Minutes of the meetings are publicly available on Monitor's website.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) at which NHS Foundation trusts other than Bradford Teaching Hospitals NHS Foundation Trust, Monitor has notified his Department of financial difficulties; [194247]

(2) when Monitor notified his Department about the financial difficulties at Bradford Teaching Hospitals NHS Foundation Trust; [194248]

(3) what information Monitor provides to his Department on a regular basis about the operation of foundation trusts. [194249]

Mr. Hutton: Monitor, the statutory name of which is the independent regulator of national health service foundation trusts (NHSFTs), is an independent corporate body established under the Health and Social Care (Community Health and Standards) Act 2003. It is therefore Monitor's responsibility to authorise, monitor and regulate NHSFTs.

I am informed by the chairman of Monitor that the monitoring exercise for the first quarter of the financial year identified that financial performance at the Bradford Teaching Hospitals NHSFT was significantly behind that forecast at the point of authorisation. At its meeting of 29 September 2004, Monitor's board concluded that formal action under section 23 of the Act (failing NHS foundation trusts) was necessary. Minutes of the meeting are publicly available on Monitor's website at www.monitor-nhsft.gov.uk.

Section 10 of the Act requires Monitor to publish a copy of any notice made under section 23 on the register of NHSFTs, which is publicly available on Monitor's website. This is the first and only occasion, to date, on which Monitor has exercised its powers under section 23 of the Act.

A close working relationship is required at all levels between Monitor and the Department to ensure that both parties can effectively perform their statutory functions to ensure that the NHS continues to deliver a high and improving quality of service to the public.

A memorandum of understanding was signed in September 2004, which sets out how this relationship works in practice, while at the same time safeguarding Monitor's independence. It includes an undertaking that Monitor and the Department will keep each other promptly and regularly informed about all developments and issues in which the other party may have an interest, and to ensure that the other party is given adequate warning of, and sufficient information about, any planned public announcements which might be considered to affect the interests of the other party. A copy of the memorandum is available in the Library.

In keeping with the principles set out in the memorandum of understanding between them, Monitor advised the Department of its board's decision in early October.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many staff with (a) accountancy and (b) similar qualifications work for the Regulator of NHS Foundation Trusts; [194115]

(2) how many of the staff of the Regulator of NHS Foundation Trusts previously worked in the NHS. [194116]

Mr. Hutton: Monitor, the statutory name of which is the independent regulator of national health service foundation trusts (NHSFTs), is an executive non-departmental public body and has statutory power to employ its own staff.

I am informed by the chairman of Monitor that it is by design a small organisation of less than 50 people, which has employed a variety of staff on a permanent, fixed-term, secondment and contract basis since its creation in January 2004. Staff engaged in the assessment of applicants for NHSFT status come from a variety of backgrounds, including business, financial analysis, accountancy and the NHS. Although the profile of Monitor's establishment is variable during the present start-up phase, currently, 20 of its staff are qualified accountants and three are qualified lawyers. Nine staff have previously worked in the NHS.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the salary is of the (a) chair and (b) chief executive of the Regulator of NHS Foundation Trusts. [194117]

Mr. Hutton: Monitor, the statutory name of which is the independent regulator of national health service foundation trusts, is an independent corporate body established under the Health and Social Care (Community Health and Standards) Act 2004. Dr. William Moyes was appointed by my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State (Dr. Reid), as executive chairman of Monitor in December 2003. His salary is £195,000 per annum.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the (a) chairman, (b) chief executive and (c) other staff of the Regulator of NHS Foundation Trusts have experience of (i) electoral registration and (ii) the conduct of elections. [194179]

Mr. Hutton: Before a national health service trust can be authorised as a NHS foundation trust (NHSFT), Monitor, the statutory name of which is the independent regulator of NHSFTs, must be satisfied that there is a board of directors and a board of governors, formed in accordance with the NHSFT's constitution.

Elections must be held in accordance with the election rules incorporated in the constitution. Any election, if contested, must be by secret ballot. In 2005, the Department will be issuing regulations on the conduct of elections. In the meantime, we have issued guidance on electoral systems for NHS foundation trusts and a set of detailed model rules for elections.

I am informed by the chairman of Monitor that all elections for all but two out of the 20 NHSFTs authorised to date were conducted by Electoral Reform Services, the specialist balloting and related services wing of the Electoral Reform Society. In the other two cases, they were conducted by the local authority and Computershare respectively. This information, together with full details of the election results for the 20 NHSFTs authorised to date, is contained in Monitor's publication, "NHS Foundation Trusts—report on elections and membership (August 2004)" [IRREP 01/04], which is available on Monitor's website at www.monitor-nhsft.gov.uk. I understand that a copy of this report was sent to the hon. Member when it was first published. Copies are also available in the Library.

NHS Logistics Authority

Jon Trickett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people are employed by the NHS Logistics Authority in (a) the Hemsworth constituency, (b) the Yorkshire and Humber region and (c) England. [195024]

Mr. Hutton: No persons are employed in the Hemsworth constituency. We believe that the NHS Logistics Authority Normanton distribution centre is entirely within the Pontefract and Castleford constituency. There are 283 people employed at the Normanton distribution centre which is the number employed in the Yorkshire and Humber region. The NHS Logistics Authority employs 1483 people in England.

Jon Trickett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the total budget of the NHS Logistics Authority was in each of the last five years. [195026]

Mr. Hutton: The total budget for the NHS Logistics Authority for the last five years is shown in the table.

	Operating costs (£ million)
2000–01	58.2
2001–02	63.4
2002–03	64.3
2003–04	68.3
2004–05	70.7

NHS Treatment Abroad

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people living in the Greater London area have been treated under the NHS in European hospitals; and if he will make a statement. [195369]

Mr. Hutton: The Government are committed to expanding the national health service more than ever before to reduce waiting times and to give patients greater choice. This includes making use of the spare capacity in overseas health systems. Since January 2002, we have been sending patients to Europe for simple elective surgery procedures such as knee and hip replacements, hernia and cataract procedures. From January 2002 to May 2004, 872 patients were treated in hospitals in France and Belgium.

Since October 2002, the London patient choice project has been offering choice of hospital at six months for patients across 32 primary care trusts in London. It has been offering patients who would otherwise wait more than six months for elective care the choice of an alternative provider for faster treatment. These providers include hospitals in Belgium. By the end of September 2004, 436 patients from the Greater London area have chosen to receive their hospital treatment in Europe.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the total cost of administering (a) the system for collecting prescription charges and (b) prescription charge exemptions in the last year for which figures are available. [192902]

Ms Rosie Winterton: In 2003–04, the cost in England of administering the sale of prescription pre-payment certificates was around £1.5 million. Other costs, including those for charge collecting activities by community pharmacists and dispensing doctors, or those for investigating potential fraud, are not separately identifiable.

In 2003–04, the cost in England of administering maternity and medical exemptions from prescription charges was around £1.3 million.

In 2003–04, the cost in England of administering arrangements for certificates on the grounds of low income was around £3.92 million. However, this covers exemption from a range of other health costs and includes the costs of applications from people who are exempt from prescription charges on grounds such as age but are seeking help with other costs.

In 2003–04, the cost in England of administering the prescription charge refund scheme, for those who are exempt but initially pay the charge, amounted to £70,000.

Radiation Exposure (Eastern Europe)

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to take up recommendation nine from chapter four of the final report of the Committee Examining Radiation Risks of Internal Emitters concerning the availability of data sets from Russia, Kazakhstan and the Ukraine on worker exposure to radiation. [195392]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Department is considering all of the recommendations in both the report of the Committee Examining Radiation Risks of Internal Emitters (CERRIE) and the advice to Government contained in the 9th report of the Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment (COMARE) and will respond in due course.

Radiographers/Radiologists

Mr. Swire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the number of (a) radiographers and (b) radiologists in the NHS. [195988]

Mr. Hutton: Since September 1997, numbers of consultants in clinical radiology have increased by 417 or 29 per cent. Consultant numbers are expected to increase further as a result of the significant investment in training capacity in this speciality.

Between 2002–03 and 2004–05, 166 additional centrally funded specialist registrar posts have been allocated to clinical radiology. In 2005–06, there are plans in place to create up to 60 further posts for the new clinical radiology academies.

Between September 1997 and 2003, the number of radiographers employed in the national health service has increased by 1,573 or 13 per cent. Since 1996–97, the number of students entering training to become a radiographer has more than doubled.

Residential Care (Greater London)

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people are living in long-term residential care within the Greater London area. [194628]

Dr. Ladyman: Information about the number of places in residential care is collected, but information about the number of people in those places is not centrally available.

In March 2001 there were 47,400 care home places in London for adults aged 18 and over. This includes 29,300 places in residential care homes and 18,100 places in general and mental nursing homes, private hospitals and clinics.

I understand from the chair of the Commission for Social Care Inspection (CSCI) that figures for later years were collected by the National Care Standards Commission, and now CSCI, but comparable details are not available.

Skipton Fund

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many recipients of the Skipton Fund have previously been beneficiaries of the Macmillan Fund; and if he will make a statement; [193658]

(2) how many of those who have received financial compensation from the Skipton Fund, were Scottish residents; and if he will make a statement. [193659]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Information on the number of stage one applications that have been paid by the Skipton Fund is shown in the table.

	Paid stage one applicants
England	1,508
Wales	119
Scotland	270
Northern Ireland	63
Total	[1]1,960

[1] Figures as at 22 October 2004.

The Skipton Fund has indicated that 329 ex-gratia payments were paid to registrants of the Macfarlane Trust.

Smoking

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for how many people who died in the UK in each of the last three years smoking cigarettes was identified as a primary cause. [196006]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Information is not available in the form requested. The Health Education Authority 1998 report: "The UK Smoking Epidemic: Deaths in 1995" estimated that in the UK in 1995, smoking caused more than 120,000 deaths of people aged 35 years or more. A copy of this report is available in the Library.

David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the findings of the Health Development Agency's study into the number of smoking-attributable deaths in the UK each year will be published. [195059]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Health Development Agency's study into the number of smoking-attributable deaths in the United Kingdom each year will be published shortly.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what provision his Department has made to provide help to those who want to quit smoking to access services where they work, where this is different from where they are registered as a health patient; and if he will make a statement; [195731]

(2) what representations he has received regarding barriers to accessing smoking cessation clinics; and if he will make a statement; [195733]

(3) what representations he has received regarding difficulties in accessing smoking cessation clinics for those who travel to work or work irregular hours; what proposals he has to enable more people to access one-to-one or group support who wish to stop smoking; and if he will make a statement. [195734]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Government have not received specific representations regarding difficulties in accessing national health service stop smoking services. NHS stop smoking services are available free across England and are accessible to all smokers who want to stop.

Primary care trusts (PCTs) are responsible for providing services for people in the workplace. We have issued advice to the NHS covering the circumstances where a stop smoking service might be provided for commuters at their workplace—"Department of Health Stop Smoking Services Quarterly Monitoring Return 2004–05". Copies have been placed in the Library.

PCTs have developed local strategies to reach smokers in their locality and, where appropriate, have made links with community groups to provide services. PCTs are encouraged to offer services that are accessible and flexible and meet the needs of the smoker. The Government will continue to seek ways to enhance and improve NHS stop smoking services.

Tobacco Advertising

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations he has received in the last 12 months supporting a ban on tobacco advertising; and if he will make a statement. [195896]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Tobacco Advertising and Promotion Act 2002 came into force on 14 February 2003. The Act bans press, billboard and magazine advertising of tobacco products and the promotion of smoking through free distribution of tobacco products, coupons and mailshots in the United Kingdom.

A public consultation on the Act was held between August and October 2002.

Trainee Midwives

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many trainee midwives there are in the NHS. [195902]

Mr. Hutton: National health service funded training is provided by higher education institutions, trainee midwives are therefore not employed directly by the NHS.

In 2003–04, 2,226 students entered training to become a midwife, which is an increase of 35 per cent. since 1996–97.

Waiting Times

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients admitted to Accident and Emergency in Hull and the East Riding in (a) 2003 and (b) 2004 waited for more than 12 hours before being treated or transferred to a ward. [194958]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The NHS Plan set a target to reduce the maximum wait in accident and emergency (A&E) from arrival to admission, transfer or discharge to four hours by 2004. The Department collects data against this target. This information is shown in the table.

Total time spent in A&E Departments, Hull and East Yorkshire Hospitals NHS Trust

Year	Quarter	Total attendances at major A&E	Percentage of patients who spent less than four hours in A&E
2004–05	1	29,180	90.3
2003–04	4	26,131	91.5
	3	25,664	92.4

Walk-in Centres

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much funding Southport Primary Care Trust and Halton Primary Care Trust will receive to establish new walk-in centres. [195489]

Mr. Hutton: A total of £1.6 million is being allocated by the Department in 2004–05 and 2005–06 to Southport and Formby Primary Care Trust and Halton Primary Care Trust towards the costs of establishing two new national health service walk-in centres.

TREASURY

Accountancy Standards

David Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent discussions he has had with representatives of (a) PricewaterhouseCoopers, (b) KPMG, (c) Ernst and Young and (d) Deloitte regarding compliance with the international accountancy guidelines contained within the Sarbanes-Oxley Act. [196422]

Mr. Timms: None, so far as I am aware.

Bowel Cancer

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many deaths due to bowel cancer have occurred in England in the last five years. [196444]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Colin Mowl to Mr. Jim Cunningham, dated 9 November 2004:

The National Statistician has been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question concerning how many deaths due to bowel cancer have occurred in England in the last five years. I am replying in his absence. (196444)

The most recent available figures are for the year 2003. The number of deaths from bowel cancer (colorectal cancer) that occurred in the years 1999 to 2003 are given in the table.

Number of deaths from bowel cancer[1,2] in England, 1999–2003

	Number of deaths
1999	13,613
2000	13,223
2001	13,182
2002	13,387
2003	13,079

[1] For deaths between 1999 and 2000, bowel cancer was identified using the International Classification of Diseases, Ninth Revision (ICD-9) codes 153–154. For deaths between 2001 and 2003, the International Classification of Diseases, Tenth Revision (ICD-10) codes C18–C21 were used.

[2] The introduction of ICD-10 for coding cause of death in 2001 resulted in the number of deaths coded as cancer at all ages increasing by 2.5 per cent. for males and 2.2 per cent. for females. For this reason, figures are not completely comparable with those for years before this date and should therefore be interpreted with caution. A description of the effects of the change in classification in 2001 on deaths from cancer was published in Health Statistics Quarterly in May 2002.*

Child Benefits

Mr. Best: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what timetable he has set for the extension of (a) child benefit and (b) child tax credit to the parents of children aged 16 to 19 years undertaking unwaged training. [196849]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government are committed to ensuring that all young people reach the age of 19 ready for higher education or skilled employment. In "Supporting young people to achieve", published alongside Budget 2004, we consulted on proposals for the reform of financial support for 16 to 19-year-olds, including the extension of child benefit and child tax credit to the parents and carers of unwaged trainees, in order to support young people's choices between education and unwaged training.

Correspondence

David Winnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to the answer of 2 November 2004, Official Report, column 153W, on correspondence, if he will instruct the director, Inland Revenue, Tax Credit Office to reply personally to letters from hon. Members on behalf of constituents; and what percentage of substantive replies sent to hon. Members in the last 12 months were sent within 14 days. [196527]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 8 November 2004]: It would not be practical for the director of the Tax Credit Office (TCO) to reply personally to all of the correspondence he receives. The director remains responsible for each reply concerning his department.

The TCO aim to reply to 80 per cent. of letters from hon. Members within 15 working days. In the seven months from 1 April 2004 to 31 October 2004, TCO replied to around 85 per cent. of letters from hon. Members within 15 working days.

Departmental Properties

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will list the properties occupied by (a) his Department and (b) its agencies in (i) 1997 and (ii) 2004, stating (A) for each and (B) in aggregate, the area; and what the aggregate rental value was in each year; [195127]

(2) if he will list the properties occupied by (a) his Department and its predecessors and (b) their agencies in (i) 1997 and (ii) 2004, showing (A) for each and (B) in aggregate the area; and what in aggregate the annual rental value was. [196370]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 1 November 2004]: The following table setting out, by Department and Agency, the information available.

Employment Rates

Jeff Ennis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the employment rate was in (a) Barnsley East and Mexborough, (b) South Yorkshire, (c) Yorkshire and the Humber and (d) England in (i) 1997 and (ii) 2004. [196480]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Jeff Ennis, dated 9 November 2004:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question about employment. (196480)

The attached table gives the available percentages of people in employment resident in the Barnsley East and Mexborough Parliamentary Constituency, in South Yorkshire, in Yorkshire and the Humber and in England for the twelve month periods ending February of 1997 and 2003. More recent data are not yet available.

These estimates from the Labour Force Survey are, as with any sample survey, subject to sampling variability.

Working age[1] people in employment—12 months ending in February 1997 and 2003

Percentage[2]

	1997	2003
Barnsley East and Mexborough (Parliamentary Constituency)	59.5	64.8
South Yorkshire	65.2	72.9
Yorkshire and the Humber	71.1	75.7
England	69.3	74.5

[1] Working age refers to men 16–64 and women 16–59.

[2] The percentage of all people of working age who are in employment.

Incomes

Keith Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) women and (b) men in the UK last year earned above (i) £25,000, (ii) £50,000, (iii) £75,000, (iv) £100,000 and (v) £150,000. [196016]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer my hon. Friend to table 3.3 "Distribution of total income before and after tax by gender" on the Inland Revenue website http:// www.inlandrevenue.gov.uk/stats/income distribution/ table3 3 september04.xls.

Tax Credits

Mr. John Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to the answer of 16 September 2004, Official Report, column 1661W, on tax credit, if he will investigate the handling of the tax credit case of a constituent of Onslow Crescent in Solihull whose name has been communicated to him. [196936]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 8 November 2004]: It would not be appropriate for me to discuss publicly the cases of individual customers. However, the Inland Revenue has made a thorough investigation of your constituent's case and will reply to the hon. Member shortly.

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions are taking place with the IT contractors to resolve problems with tax credits. [192986]

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what (a) legal and (b) other action his Department has taken against EDS in relation to the introduction of new tax credits; and if he will make a statement. [194809]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 1 November 2004]: The Inland Revenue and EDS are trying to reach agreement without recourse to formal, legal processes and have engaged in a process of negotiation supported by legal and other experts on both sides, with an independent suitably qualified neutral adviser. While discussions between the Inland Revenue and EDS are still under way it is inappropriate for me to say any more at this stage.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the staff of the Inland Revenue dealing with working tax credit and child tax credit have access to the general Inland Revenue computer system in order to (a) confirm the income stated on credit applications, (b) avoid errors and (c) combat fraud. [195723]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 9 November 2004]: Tax credits staff can access other Inland Revenue computer systems. The tax credit computer system uses other Departmental systems to check and verify information given on tax credit claim forms. Depending on circumstances, income figures given by claimants and used in calculations may be validated against other income data held by Inland Revenue. Every step is taken to use all the information held by the Department to prevent errors and combat fraud.

Keith Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many single women have benefited from (a) the child tax credit and (b) working tax credit. [196015]

Dawn Primarolo: The numbers of in-work single women benefiting up to April 2004 are shown at Table 3.1 of the various issues of "Child and Working Tax Credits. Quarterly Statistics".

Table 2.3 of each issue shows broad estimates of the number of not-in-work single adults with children benefiting from tax credits, most of whom are women. This includes all single adults with children receiving income support or income-based jobseeker's allowance.

The documents are on the Inland Revenue website, at www.inlandrevenue.gov.uk/stats/personal-tax-credits/menu.htm.

Miss Begg: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of those estimated overpayments of the new tax credits as reported in Figure 6 of the Inland Revenue's Annual Report and Accounts (a) written off and (b) remaining to be recouped represents (i) recipients of the family element of the child tax credit alone, (ii) recipients of any additional elements of the child tax credit, beyond the family element, (iii) recipients of the child element of the child tax credit (with or without additional elements), (iv) recipients of the working tax credit and (v) recipients of the child care element of the working tax credit. [196315]

Dawn Primarolo: It is not possible to break down the overpayments referred to so as to attribute them to different elements in the tax credits awards

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on recovery policy regarding overpayment of tax credits. [197215]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue's Code of Practice 26 ("What happens if we have paid you too much tax credit?") sets out their approach to handling overpayments of tax credits.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many recipients of working tax credit are being paid manually; and if he will make a statement. [195916]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 4 November 2004]: The number of interim payments made during 2003–04, and the reasons for these payments, are explained at paragraph 2.14 of the Report of the Comptroller and Auditor General attached to the Inland Revenue Annual Report for the year ended 31 March 2004.

Most such payments are one-off, and any future payment will only be made following a review of the case. Around 7,000 families (about one seventh of one per cent. of the tax credits total caseload) are currently being paid manually on a regular basis for technical reasons.

VAT on Fuel

Mr. Weir: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much money his Department received in VAT on fuel in each of the last 12 months. [196911]

Dawn Primarolo: HM Customs and Excise do not collect data on VAT from individual goods and services.

Working Age Statistics

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the total working age population was aged 16 to 34 years in each year since 1979; and what the rate of inflation was in each year. [196507]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. David Willetts, dated 9 November 2004:

As National Statistician I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question concerning what percentage of the total working age population was aged 16 to 34 years in each year since 1979, and what the rate of inflation was in each of those years. (196507)

Table 1 shows the annual percentage of persons that were aged 16 to 34 as part of the total working age population (ages 16–64 for males, 16–59 for females) in England and Wales for each year from mid-1979 to mid-2003.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Sports Boards

Hugh Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money the Sports Council distributed to Northern Ireland sports boards in (a) 2001, (b) 2002 and (c) 2003. [195177]

Angela Smith: The total exchequer and lottery funding distributed by the Sports Council for Northern Ireland to sporting bodies, (including governing bodies and sports clubs) in the financial years 2001–02, 2002–03 and 2003–04 is as follows:

	2001–02	2002–03	2003–04
Exchequer	3,545,000	3,794,000	4,752,000
Lottery	3,405,223	3,595,894	3,211,916

Blood Donation

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the regulations in Northern Ireland which prevent wheelchair users from being eligible to donate blood through the Blood Donation Service. [193930]

Angela Smith: The Northern Ireland Blood Transfusion Service's (NIBTS) policies and procedures for selection of blood donors are based on national guidelines produced and agreed by the four United Kingdom Blood Transfusion Services. NIBTS policy and practice for wheelchair users is consistent with these guidelines.

Any donor may suffer adverse reactions to blood donation, which on occasions can be quite severe. Such reactions must be dealt with on a proper blood donation couch (not a wheelchair) so that they can be addressed safely. Donors must therefore not donate blood in their wheelchair, and be able to climb on and off the donation couch. If the underlying cause of disability in the case of a wheelchair user, or others, is not a contraindication, blood donation may be acceptable. However, certain causes of disability may preclude individuals from donating for reasons of safety to the recipient as well as the donor. Health and safety issues for staff normally preclude donors being physically lifted onto a donor couch. NIBTS provides wheelchair access at all its fixed (permanent) donation venues including the purpose designed BloodMobile and also at the vast majority of mobile donation sessions throughout the province.

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what review he has carried out of the operation of the regulations in Northern Ireland which prevent permanent wheelchair users from donating blood; and what plans he has to amend them. [193931]

Angela Smith: The Northern Ireland Blood Transfusion Service operates under the United Kingdom guidelines produced and agreed by the four national Blood Transfusion Services. The Joint Professional Advisory Committee (JPAC) of the United Kingdom Blood Transfusion Service and the National Institute for Biological Standards and Control is responsible for the guidelines. JPAC receives professional advice from the standing advisory committees that form part of its structure. The criteria are reviewed regularly and users of the guidelines must ensure that they have the latest version and that recent changes (usually within three months) have been implemented by the respective national service There are no plans to amend the guidelines locally in relation to wheelchair users.

Breast Cancer

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many incidents of breast cancer have been recorded in (a) north Belfast, (b) Belfast and (c) Northern Ireland in each year since 1997. [194609]

Angela Smith: The following table details the numbers of incidences of breast cancer since 1997.

	Year of diagnosis
	1997	1998	1999	2000	2001	2002

This information has been provided by the Northern Ireland Cancer Registry.

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people have died of breast cancer in (a) north Belfast, (b) Belfast and (c) Northern Ireland in each year since 1997. [194610]

Mr. Pearson: The following table gives the number of registered breast cancer deaths (a) of Belfast, North parliamentary constituency residents, (b) of Belfast local government district residents and (c) in Northern Ireland for each year between 1997 and 2003.

British/Irish Sign Languages

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the final report of the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure working group on British and Irish Sign Languages will be published; and what the proposed timescale is for implementation of the recommendations of that report. [196886]

Angela Smith: A Sign Language Partnership Group, comprising representatives of the Deaf Community in Northern Ireland and departmental officials, is addressing a number of key issues regarding the provision of tutors and interpreters, raising awareness, and best practice guidance. The Group's proposals are expected to be submitted to Ministers by the end of the year. It is anticipated that publication of the proposals and implementation will commence early next year.

Bullying

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate he has made of the financial cost resulting from bullying in Northern Ireland's (a) schools and (b) workplaces in the last year for which figures are available. [196260]

Mr. Gardiner: The information sought in respect of schools is not available and could be collected only with considerable difficulty and at disproportionate cost.

The Department for Employment and Learning does not make estimates in relation to the financial costs resulting from bullying in workplaces.

The Office of the Industrial Tribunals and the Fair Employment Tribunal cannot specify the costs of bullying to Northern Ireland workplaces. While bullying may form part of an applicant's complaint to a tribunal there is no specific jurisdiction relating to bullying. Any award made by a tribunal relates to the jurisdiction specified in the complaint and an award made will be determined within the parameters set out in the relevant legislation.

Cancer Treatment

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many incidents of cancer have been recorded in (a) north Belfast, (b) Belfast and (c) Northern Ireland in each year since 1997. [194611]

Angela Smith: The information requested is as follows:

All cancers

	Year of diagnosis
	1997	1998	1999	2000	2001	2002
Northern Ireland	8,533	8,665	8,645	8,733	8,632	8,923
Belfast	1,645	1,691	1,624	1,654	1,506	1,604
North Belfast	577	568	551	569	516	538

Note:

Non-malignant skin cancers have been included in this table.

This information has been provided by the Northern Ireland Cancer Registry.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action he is taking to tackle the backlog of cases in the Child Support Agency in Northern Ireland. [197107]

Mr. Spellar: The current backlog of applications in the Northern Ireland Child Support Agency is due to cases that cannot be progressed due to system defects within the new computer system. All of the defects have been logged with the service provider, Electronic Data Systems Limited (EDS). These cases can only be progressed once EDS have resolved the incident and freed up the case.

EDS, along with the Great Britain Child Support Agency, have implemented a recovery plan to address problems with the computer system and cases are progressively being released. The Northern Ireland Child Support Agency is part of this overall recovery plan.

Latest management information shows that since the end of June 2004 the weekly number of cases assessed has risen by 30 per cent.

Civil Service

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on progress in the re-tendering exercise to put in place electronic document and record management systems throughout the Northern Ireland Civil Service. [195539]

Mr. Pearson: On 27 April 2004 the NICS (through its Central Procurement Directorate) established a Framework Agreement for the provision of EDRM products under the Negotiated Procedure of the Public Contracts (Services) Regulations 1993 (as amended). The Framework Agreement is available for use to the NICS and the wider NI public sector. A secondary competition was applied under the Framework Agreement to select an EDRM product for piloting in the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, the Department for Culture, Arts and Leisure and the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister (contract awarded on 17 September 2004). Depending upon the evaluation of the pilots, this product may be used across the NICS; however no commitment to do so has been made.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the cost has been to date of the tendering and re-tendering exercises by the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to put in place electronic document and record management systems throughout the Northern Ireland Civil Service. [195540]

Mr. Pearson: The total apportioned project costs (including staff time, travel and subsistence and consultancy) to establish the EDRMS category of the Framework Agreement and conduct secondary competition for selection of the EDRMS product is £207,000.

Mr. Gregory Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Civil Service jobs have been relocated from the Greater Belfast area to East Londonderry constituency in the last five years. [194792]

Mr. Pearson: There have been no Civil Service jobs relocated from the Greater Belfast area to East Londonderry in the last five years (1 April 1999 to 31 March 2004).

Cory Collusion Inquiry

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland pursuant to his oral answer of 1 April 2004, Official Report, columns 1760–61, on the Cory Collusion Inquiry, what the terms of reference will be for the public inquiry into the Finucane case. [194951]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The inquiry into the death of Patrick Finucane is to be held on the basis of new legislation, which is to be introduced shortly. I cannot pre-empt the decision of Parliament on the terms of this legislation or on any matter flowing from it.

Dentistry

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proportion of three to five year olds in Northern Ireland are registered with a general dental practitioner. [195415]

Angela Smith: 60 per cent. of three to five year olds in Northern Ireland are registered with an NHS general dental practitioner. Figures are not available for persons who may be solely registered for private treatment.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proportion of two year olds in Northern Ireland are registered with a general dental practitioner. [195416]

Angela Smith: 41 per cent. of two year olds in Northern Ireland are currently registered with an NHS general dental practitioner. Figures are not available for persons who may be solely registered for private treatment.

Department of Education Budget

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much of the budget for the Department of Education has remained unspent in each year from 2000 to date. [196528]

Mr. Gardiner: The proportion of the Department of Education budget unspent in each of the financial years 2000–01 to 2003–04 is as follows:

	Unspent (percentage)
2000–01	1.4
2001–02	3.4
2002–03	2.4
2003–04[1]	3.3

---

[1] Provisional

Under approved end-year flexibility arrangements, sums unspent on capital investment, executive programme funds and, from 2001–02, Education and Library Board resources are carried forward for use in a subsequent year and are thus not "lost" to Education. Carry over relates mainly to (a) Education and Library Board resources, principally to facilitate the operation, under Local Management of Schools (LMS) arrangements, of schools' delegated budgets and (b) capital investment, in particular to take account of the rephasing of expenditure on existing projects.

Departmental IT

Brian White: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of the Department's (a) implemented and (b) planned computer systems use open source software; and what plans are in place to raise this level. [195652]

Mr. Paul Murphy: There is minimal use of Open Source Software (OSS) among the Northern Ireland Departments.

To date, only the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development (DARD) and the Department of Finance and Personnel Business Development Service operate a very limited open source system which comprises products such as Linux, Apache and MYSQL.

There are no immediate plans to increase usage of OSS throughout the Northern Ireland Departments at present. However, the possible future use of Open Source will be considered as part of the forthcoming ICT Strategy for the Northern Ireland Civil Service which is to be commissioned early in 2005.

Disabled Staff

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of the staff in his Department in (a) 2002 and (b) 2003 were people with disabilities. [196125]

Mr. Pearson: Of those staff in the eleven departments of the Northern Ireland Administration and the Northern Ireland Office who provided information on their disability status, the percentage who declared they had a disability, was as follows:

(a) 4.9 per cent. at 1 April 2002; and

(b) 4.7 per cent. at 1 April 2003.

Down's Syndrome

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the provision of education for (a) adults and (b) children with Down's Syndrome in Northern Ireland. [197036]

Mr. Gardiner: Children with Down's Syndrome have a range of educational ability. Under the existing legislation, children's special educational needs, including the needs of those with Down's Syndrome, are assessed by the Education and Library Boards and met on an individual basis. Provision may be made in special schools, special units attached to mainstream schools or in mainstream classes themselves. It may also consist of home tuition, hospital tuition or pre-school support. Boards also operate specialist outreach services including support for children with literacy problems and if appropriate, children with Down's Syndrome avail of these services.

The Department for Employment and Learning has put in place a range of initiatives and funding streams designed to promote access to post 16 provision by students with disabilities including those with Down's Syndrome. These include the publication of a good practice guide; support for staff development activities for senior management, and financial assistance towards the costs of technical or carer support for learners.

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many children with Down's Syndrome in each education and library board area in Northern Ireland were educated in (a) mainstream and (b) special schools in each of the past five years. [197019]

Mr. Gardiner: The North Eastern and Southern Education and Library Boards cannot provide this information as it is gathered according to the special educational needs, e.g. Moderate Learning Difficulty (MLD) or Severe Learning Difficulty (SLD), and not by the name of the specific condition.

The Belfast, South Eastern and Western Education and Library Boards can only provide current figures for children with Down's Syndrome and this information is not available within the time scale. I will write to the hon. Lady again as soon as it is available.

The Education and Library Boards are currently working on a five Board Special Educational Needs Management Information System which in future years will gather statistical information on a wider range of special educational needs than is currently available. It is hoped to introduce this system in 2005.

Drug/Alcohol Abuse

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he has taken to combat drug and alcohol abuse in Northern Ireland in the last three years. [196189]

Angela Smith: In May 2001 the Northern Ireland Executive endorsed the Joint Implementation Model to carry forward the collective aims of the Drugs and Alcohol Strategies to reduce the level of drug and alcohol-related harm in Northern Ireland.

Since then a regional implementation structure has been put in place to ensure that action is driven forward across a wide number of fronts. There are currently 305 regional and local projects funded through the Northern Ireland Drugs and Alcohol Campaign. These cover the fields of education and prevention, treatment, research and criminal justice across the statutory and community sectors.

A review of the campaign and the strategies and structures that support it commenced in 2004. This will report in March 2005, after which a new strategic direction will be developed to start in April 2006.

Education and Library Boards

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, what weight he gives to experience of and skills in financial management when considering candidates for appointment to education and library boards. (195513)

Mr. Gardiner: Internal appointments to education and library boards are, with the exception of appointments at chief executive and chief librarian level which must be approved by the relevant Department, a matter for individual boards and the level of qualifications and experience sought varies from post to post.

Public appointments to boards are made in accordance with the Education and Libraries Order 1986 which provides for nominations to be made by the local councils that fall within the board's boundaries, as well as by transferors of schools and the trustees of maintained schools. 35 per cent. of members are appointed through the open public appointments process and the criteria for the selection of these candidates take account of the need for the membership to include a balance of skills and background. Selection of these members is on merit and in accordance with the Code of Practice of the Commissioner for Public Appointments.

Financial Planning

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assumptions he has made for the purposes of financial planning about the expected revenue of each of the next three years from (a) business rates and (b) domestic rates. [195736]

Mr. Pearson: The forecast revenue from the regional rate for the years 2005–06 to 2007–08 is £251.0 million/£268.7 million/£287.1 million for the non-domestic sector, and £205.9 million/£229.8 million/£249.2 million for the domestic sector. These projections have been included in the proposals presented in the Draft Priorities and Budget 2005–08 document, launched for public consultation on 12 October 2004.

Free Health Care

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) Republic of Ireland citizens, (b) other EU nationals and (c) non-EU nationals have received free health care in private healthcare units and residential homes in Northern Ireland in the last five years, broken down by health board. [195192]

Angela Smith: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the estimated cost to the Exchequer is of (a) Republic of Ireland citizens, (b) other EU nationals and (c) non-EU nationals receiving free healthcare in Northern Ireland's private healthcare units and residential homes in the last five years, broken down by health board. [195193]

Angela Smith: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Greencastle-Magilligan Ferry

Mr. Gregory Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans the Northern Ireland Tourist Board has to assist in the upgrading of facilities for tourist traffic using the Greencastle-Magilligan Ferry. [196510]

Mr. Gardiner: The Northern Ireland Tourist Board (NITB) itself has no direct plans to assist with the upgrading of facilities for tourist traffic as this is the responsibility of Department of Regional Development (DRD) Roads Service and the local council.

NITB does however consider the Greencastle-Magilligan Ferry as an important tourist link between Co. Donegal and Co. Londonderry. Magilligan lies within the area identified in the Ministerial Causeway and Glens Tourism Masterplan 2004–13 which NITB is currently assisting to implement. Two actions have been identified in the associated Action Plan that may have a direct effect on facilities for tourist traffic in the Magilligan area:

> Upgrade existing and provide new coach parks to allow coach visitors access to key attractive settlements and their services.
> Gateway towns and villages programme—enhancement programme for gateways e.g. Larne, Bally castle and Magilligan.

NITB is also progressing the identification and development of a tourist trail along the A2 coastal route. It is anticipated that the trail will include Magilligan along the route.

With regard to road infrastructure improvements, the DRD's Roads Service has advised that planning approval for the ferry was given on the basis that a number of infrastructure improvements were carried out along Point Road, which runs between the Seacoast Road and the ferry terminal. These improvements included the localised widening of the road at a number of locations, and the resurfacing of the road. This work was carried out by the applicant, Limavady borough council.

Discussions are currently on-going with Limavady borough council with a view to providing directional/information signage for the ferry. Signage being considered includes the use of variable message signs on Point Road, which would provide information for ferry passengers, similar to that being used at the Strangford Ferry.

Health and Social Services

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) days and (b) days per full-time equivalent employee were lost through staff sickness in each of the last four financial years in each (i) health and social services board and (ii) health and social services trust; and if he will make a statement. [195425]

Angela Smith: The information requested is as follows:

The Department keeps absenteeism under careful review. Targets have been set for Trusts to reduce their levels of sickness absence, and the outcome of this is being monitored.

Hospital Waiting Times

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many patients in (a) Northern Ireland, (b) each health and social services board area and (c) each health and social services trust were waiting more than 18 months for hospital inpatient or day treatment in (i) June 2002 and (ii) June of each year since; and if he will make a statement. [195421]

Angela Smith: The most recent published waiting list data available shows the position at 30 June 2004. Data for quarters ending 30 June from 2000 to 2004 are as follows:

(i) Northern Ireland: Number of people waiting more than 18 months for in-patient admission to hospital[1]

Considerable progress has been made in recent years in reducing the number of patients waiting and I am keen to see this sustained. I have set targets for 2004–05 that no patient has to wait more than 18 months for treatment by March 2005, and no more than 15 months by March 2006.

ICC Trophy Tournament

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assistance (a) his Department and (b) Government agencies are providing to aid preparations for hosting the ICC trophy cricket tournament in the Province in July 2005. [194982]

Angela Smith: No Northern Ireland Departments are directly involved in providing assistance to aid preparations for hosting the ICC trophy cricket tournament.

However, the Sports Council for Northern Ireland and the Northern Ireland Events Company are in discussions with the promoters of the tournament about possible assistance.

The Northern Ireland Tourist Board has issued an events marketing support scheme application to the organisers, which will be considered once it has been submitted.

Immunisations

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the rate of uptake of primary immunisations is for children aged 12 months in Northern Ireland. [195417]

Angela Smith: The rate of uptake of primary immunisations for children aged 12 months in Northern Ireland is shown for the four quarters of the financial year 2003–04 in the following table:

	Immunisation against:
Quarter ending:	Diphtheria	Tetanus	Polio	Pertussis	Haemophilus Influenza B	Measles, Mumps, Rubella	Meningitis C
June 2003	95.1	95.1	95.1	94.7	94.9	0.1	95.1

March 2004	94.4	94.4	94.2	94.0	94.5	0.0	94.7

Note:

The uptake rate is in respect of children who reached their first birthday during the relevant quarter.

Primary immunisation for measles, mumps and rubella is not normally given to children under 12 months of age.

The information is published on a quarterly basis.

Laurelhill School

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the South Eastern Education and Library Board has employed a public relations company to deal with public and media inquiries concerning the Laurelhill School dispute and the boards deficit; and if he will make a statement. [196876]

Mr. Gardiner: I have been advised by the Chief Executive of the South Eastern Education and Library Board that the board did not employ a public relations company in relation to the board's financial deficit. However, Laurelhill Community College, on the advice of the board, engaged a public relations company to assist it to deal with the national media attention which arose as a result of industrial action taken by teaching staff at the school.

Learning Disability

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many individuals in the Province Northern Ireland with a learning disability are offered an annual health check; and what steps he is taking to increase this total. [194523]

Angela Smith: Annual health checks have not been routinely offered to people with a learning disability.

The terms of the recently revised GPs contract do not require the offer of annual health checks to patients who have a learning disability. However, GPs provide the same level of care to those with a learning disability as they do to other patients, when they present with a health problem.

The current independent review of mental health and learning disability has identified the physical health of people with a learning disability as an area for particular action. The review will be making a number of recommendations on the delivery of primary care services that would benefit people with a learning disability. The recommendations will inform the future development of these services.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he is taking to increase the number of individuals with learning disabilities who are registered with a general practitioner. [194527]

Angela Smith: The independent review of mental health and learning disability, commissioned by the Department of Health Social Services and Public Safety, is currently consulting on their report on learning disability "Equal Lives" and hopes to present their recommendations to Government early next year.

Among other things, the review has been examining the health and wellbeing of people with a learning disability. While the report finds that for many such people, the family GP plays a very significant role, it calls for a number of improvements to ensure access to the full range of health services for people with a learning disability. These will be considered once the report is presented to the Department.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures are being taken to ensure that literature on health is provided in an easy-to-read format for those with learning disabilities. [194531]

Angela Smith: In line with its Equality Scheme, the Department makes its publications available on request in alternative formats to meet people's differing needs. In 2004 the Department issued good practice guidance to the Health and Personal Services on access to information. The Department is currently taking forward a project on providing health and social care information in accessible formats and this includes consideration of the needs of people with learning disabilities.

Lucy Crawford

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will conduct a full independent inquiry into (a) the death of Lucy Crawford in the Erne hospital in April 2000 and (b) subsequent investigations conducted by the Sperrin Lakeland Health Trust; and if he will make a statement; [194802]

(2) what investigations he has conducted into the actions of Sperrin Lakeland Trust following the death of Lucy Crawford in April 2000. [194803]

Angela Smith: I believe it is of the highest importance that the general public have confidence in the quality and standards of care provided by our health and social services. Consequently I have announced that Mr. John O'Hara QC is to conduct an independent inquiry into the issues raised regarding the deaths of Lucy Crawford, Raychel Ferguson and Adam Strain.

Ministerial Meetings (Paramilitaries)

David Burnside: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last met (a) members of the Brigade staff of (i) the UDA, (ii) the UVF and (iii) the INLA and (b) members of the Army Council of the Provisional IRA; and what he discussed on each occasion. [196500]

Mr. Pearson: In the course of advancing the political process I have met with a number of groups that give political analysis to paramilitary organisations, and who assure me that they are serious about committing themselves to a political path and an end to violence. Such meetings are a means of testing that commitment and I will continue to encourage that process at every opportunity. I have made it clear that continuing paramilitary activity is unacceptable and only serves to undermine the standing of those who are engaged in the political process.

Neutral Working Environments

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action he has taken in response to complaints against the chief executive of the Child Support Agency in relation to a breach of his Department's policy on wearing Gaelic Athletic Association sports clothing. [197106]

Mr. Spellar: This is an internal personnel matter in relation to an individual and has been dealt with in accordance with the Department's personnel procedures.

Nursery Schools (Strabane)

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to improve nursery school provision in the Strabane area. [196285]

Mr. Gardiner: The following improvements to nursery school provision are planned to take place in the current year:

Ballycolman Nursery School, Strabane

The provision of a new soft play area.

Edwards Primary School, Castlederg

A new school is under construction at present, which includes nursery provision. It is expected that the main school will be occupied around Christmas, although the nursery unit may open before then.

Patient Exemption Fraud

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the estimated level of patient exemption fraud was in the family practitioners service in each financial year from 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [195423]

Angela Smith: The estimated level of patient exemption fraud in the family practitioners service from 1999–2000 is as follows:

	£ million
1999–2000	13.8
2000–01	11.3
2001–02	10.0
2002–03	10.0
2003–04	8.0

The Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, together with the Health Boards and the Central Services Agency, continues to make considerable efforts to reduce losses through patient exemption fraud. There has been good progress and tackling fraud remains a key priority.

Police Funding

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the average spending on policing was per capita in Northern Ireland in 2003–04. [196177]

Mr. Pearson: The average policing cost per head of population is £405.75. This figure is based upon revenue running costs including non cash items and excluding Capital and Patten expenditure.

Pre-school Education

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how full-time nursery education in the pre-school year will be implemented for children in (a) Greater Shankill and (b) North Belfast. [197110]

Mr. Gardiner: With the exception of the nursery places at Hazelwood Integrated Primary School, which were created under the Pre-School Education Expansion Programme, all nursery places in North Belfast and the Greater Shankill area are already full-time.

The Pre-School Education Expansion Programme in Northern Ireland provides only funding for part-time provision I have no plans to fund full-time nursery places at Hazelwood Integrated Primary School at this time. Any future decision to do so will depend on the outcome of the review of pre-school education.

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he intends to publish the outcome of the review of pre-school education. [197112]

Mr. Gardiner: It is expected that the outcome of the Review of Pre-School Education in Northern Ireland will be published in March 2005.

Probation Board

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the recent appointment of the head of the Probation Board for Northern Ireland. [196170]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The maximum period of appointment to the position of chairman of the Probation Board for Northern Ireland is two three year terms, that is six years in all. The present chairman will complete this period at the end of this month. Following an open competition conducted in accordance with the Code of Practice of the Office of the Commissioner for Public Appointments, I have therefore appointed Ronald Spence as chairman of the Probation Board for a three year term starting on 1 December 2004.

Public Sector Pay

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether it is his policy to introduce (a) regional and (b) local pay for the public sector in Northern Ireland. [195530]

Mr. Pearson: The Government recognise that pay flexibility at regional and local levels is an important part of their objectives for greater efficiency in the delivery of public services and for regional development. In Northern Ireland, this approach is being taken forward through the development and maintenance of a Pay and Workforce Strategy. This uses objective evidence to support pay policies that reflect regional and local labour market conditions whenever possible and ensure that pay is sufficient to recruit, retain and motivate staff to deliver public services to the standards required.

Schools (East Londonderry)

Mr. Gregory Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) primary and (b) post primary schools will need to be replaced in the East Londonderry constituency within the next five years; and what the planned timetable is for each school. [196512]

Mr. Gardiner: In the East Londonderry constituency three primary schools and one post-primary school have received approval to proceed to tender. The completion date for each will be dependent on the planning, procurement and construction work required so it is only possible to provide approximate timescales at this stage.

A further three primary and two post-primary schools have been identified by the relevant school authorities as requiring a major capital works scheme. These have been assessed by the Department of Education as having a need for a scheme and economic appraisals will be undertaken to determine the options. Progressing the schemes following the appraisal process will be subject to the availability of resources.

The relevant school authorities have also identified a further eight potential schemes for assessment within the next five years.

The schools and their current status are as follows.

1. Schemes approved for funding:

Primary

Dungiven, Largy and Burnfoot primary schools—A new amalgamated replacement primary school. Estimated completion date autumn 2006.

Carnalridge Primary School, Portrush—a new school on existing site. Estimated completion date autumn 2006.

Glasvey and Limegrove Special Schools—a new amalgamated school in Limavady. Estimated completion date autumn 2007.

Post-primary

Coleraine College—an extension/refurbishment on existing site. Estimated completion date autumn 2007.

2. Schemes in planning which have been assessed by the Department of Education as having a major capital need and are at the economic appraisal stage

Primary

Ballykelly Primary School

Crossroads Primary School, Kilrea

St. Canice's Primary School, Dungiven

Post Primary

Dominican College, Portstewart

Coleraine High School

3. Other schools notified to the Department by the relevant school authorities for future assessment (within next five years)

Primary

Drumachose Primary School, Limavady

Millburn Primary School, Coleraine

Portstewart Primary School

Killowen Primary School, Coleraine

Gorran Primary School, Aghadowey

Macosquin Primary School, Coleraine

Millstrand Integrated Primary School

Post-primary

St. Patrick's High School, Dungiven

Self-employment

Mr. Gregory Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of those in full-time employment in Northern Ireland during 2004 are self-employed. [196514]

Mr. Gardiner: Latest figures from the summer (June-August) 2004 Labour Force Survey estimated that 17.4 per cent. of people in full-time employment in Northern Ireland are self-employed.

Vehicle Registration

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many registered (a) private vehicles and (b) powered two-wheel vehicles there are in Northern Ireland. [195236]

Angela Smith: The Northern Ireland vehicle register does not easily distinguish between vehicles in private and company ownership. At 18 October 2004 the number of licensed vehicles and vehicles with Statutory off the Road Notifications on the Northern Ireland vehicles register was 914,970. 32,378 of these were powered two-wheel vehicles.

Water Conservation

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps have been taken to promote water conservation as part of the reform of water and sewerage services in Northern Ireland. [195845]

Mr. Spellar: Water conservation and the sustainable and long-term management of water resources is an objective of the Water Framework Directive. This Directive puts forward pricing as a means of achieving this objective and it requires that, by 2010, the price charged to water consumers for abstraction, water supply and collection and treatment of waste water reflects the true cost of the provision of the services. The proposed charging regime for water and sewerage services, which I announced on 13 September, has been developed in light of the Directive and the water pricing policies within it will require a contribution from households and other sectors towards the cost of the water and sewerage services they receive as an incentive to use water efficiently.

Water Service is taking forward a wide range of measures to promote water conservation and reduce demand for water.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Graffiti/Fly-posting (Merseyside)

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs on how many occasions a Merseyside (a) local authority officer, (b) community support officer and (c) person accredited by the Chief Constable has issued a fixed penalty notice for minor graffiti and fly-posting offences. [191327]

Ms Blears: I have been asked to reply.

The number of fixed penalty notices issued is not held centrally. The power to issue such notices for minor graffiti or fly posting has not been used on Merseyside by Community Support Officers or accredited persons.

Agriculture and Fisheries Council

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the outcome was of the Agriculture and Fisheries Council on 18–19 October; what the Government's stance was on the issues discussed, including its voting record; and if she will make a statement. [195376]

Margaret Beckett: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary and I represented the United Kingdom at a meeting of the Agriculture and Fisheries Council in Luxembourg on 18 October 2004. The Scottish Minister for Environment and Rural Development was also present.

As this was the last Council expected to be attended by Commissioners Franz Fischler and David Byrne, the Council took the opportunity to pay warm tribute to the contribution that they had made during their time in office.

As to the agenda, the Council responded to a number of key questions arising from a Commission report on the simplification of the common market organisation in fruit and vegetables. I joined several delegations in noting that, while changes to the regime agreed in 1996 have had a positive effect, we need to look constructively at the scope for further changes, including increased flexibility and subsidiarity in the regime. Its impact on developing countries and on the Doha Development Agenda would also be important factors. We should be wary of further intervention in the market but we could look at the scope for promotion of fruit and vegetable consumption. The Commission will reflect upon the exchanges before tabling any proposals for further reform. Discussion will resume at official level.

The Council took note, without discussion, of discussions on the European Action Plan for Organic Food and Farming and agreed conclusions supporting a range of further actions.

On fisheries, my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary emphasised the importance of consistent and effective enforcement of the Common Fisheries Policy (CFP), and welcomed the proposal for a Community Fisheries Control Agency. However, he emphasised that the Agency should act in a co-ordinating, not instructing role; that it should build on work to develop a regional input to the CFP; and that it should be cost neutral. Many delegations made similar points. Discussion will continue between officials.

The Council held an initial exchange of views in preparation for this year's negotiation on a fisheries agreement with Norway. My hon. Friend made clear the high priority the United Kingdom attaches to ensuring that the EU has access to the full amount of Arctic cod quota it is entitled to under the terms of the EEA Agreement, and identifying stocks that the EU can offer Norway in exchange without making use of mackerel which is a fully utilised quota stock. There was general agreement that the Commission needed to take a robust line with Norway. Further preparations for the negotiation will be taken forward by officials.

The Council held a policy debate on Commission proposals for recovery plans for hake and Norway lobster in the Cantabrian Sea and for sole stocks in the Western English Channel and Bay of Biscay. My hon. Friend made clear the United Kingdom's commitment to sustainable management of western Channel sole which is an important stock for fishermen in south-west England, but that we do not believe western Channel sole should be a recovery stock or that the Commission's effort control proposals are appropriate. He drew attention to the advice on this stock delivered by the International Council for the Exploration of the Seas (ICES) in August which suggests that this stock is less likely to be outside safe limits than other sole stocks, confirming the results of collaborative research carried out with commercial fishing vessels in the south-west. He called for inconsistencies between this advice and the most recent ICES draft advice to be clarified urgently. Other member states expressed a range of views on the recovery plan proposals. Discussions will continue among officials.
